"Now, at Washington we hear a good deal said about a so-called Money Trust, and our Democratic friends there say there ought to be an investigation of this Money Trust, but they do not quite know what to do with it or how to handle it. But here is something, whether substance or only shadow, it is something that seems to disturb. Are you men in a Money Trust? Have you anything to do with such an unholy and unrighteous thing, or is it 'the other fellow'? If there is a Money Trust we ought to find it out, and I am in favor of investigating it. If such a thing does exist to-day it is illegal, and exists in spite of the law, and it should be smashed. But if the plan provided by the commission is adopted there will be a general Federal supervision, which would be a sufficient guaranty for the dissolution or destruction of any Money Trust, if such there should be. It is an infinitely better way to regulate and control by Federal legislation than it is to destroy. There are two schools of public life in this country. One says, 'Destroy all the big combinations of this country,' and the other school says, 'No, do not destroy; regulate them by Federal legislation and Federal control.' We should, at any rate, try that first, and then if it be shown that we can not regulate and control them in that way, it is time enough to talk of smashing them altogether.

"I had a letter recently from a friend who was interested in a scheme of investment in a certain direction in conjunction with others, and he wanted to raise funds to finance the scheme and get it started, and he had what appeared to be a good thing, but he could not get the money. He says at once 'There is a combination of wealthy men who control the moneyed men of this country, and that is why I can not get any money in this enterprise.' Not long ago it was my privilege, with a party of Members of Congress and others, a party of about 70, to go to the opening of the Over-Seas Railroad in Florida. The road goes to Key West, and it goes along over bogs, and swamps, and marshes, and through woods of pine trees, where they were at work tapping the trees for turpentine.

"The road goes over a quality of land that those who saw it declared was not worth the paying of taxes on it. Do you believe that if Mr. Flagler had gone to any business or financial interests that he could have induced them to advance money for such a proposed undertaking? No. Yet there was a man with means of his own, a rich man, who had a plan and a proposition that may in the future work out and repay in full what has been expended, and in all probability result in handsome profits on the investment. Yet, as I say, no business man, no bankers holding in trust the money of others, could have been induced to invest that money in such an undertaking. The road was built by Mr. Flagler from his own pocket, but if he had come to you gentlemen for money I think, on the outlook, you would have been justified in refusing to invest any of the $116,000,000 in your control belonging to widows and orphans and living men in that proposition. But the inability to secure the money would not have been because it was controlled by a money trust. But because men are turned down on propositions like that they at once say it is because the money is controlled by a big trust.

"The money power, some say, would control this reserve. But how will they be able to do so? Each individual bank is to have a vote in the selection of the officers, and with such a provision the vote of the small bank counts just as much as that of the large bank. It is on the same principle as the ballot. The man without a dollar goes to the poll and drops in his ballot and it counts for just as much as the ballot of the man worth ten millions. But the theorists who make that objection do not stop to consider how many millions and millions of dollars it would take to control the Reserve Association. That is the trouble with the theorists; they never stop to reason the thing and see if it is likely to be possible as a practicable thing. Now, when they say the money power would get control of this reserve they do not stop to consider that the profit is limited to 5 per cent. All over and above that is to go to the Government except the surplus to be created. Men who have the control of immense funds at their disposal do not put those funds in where they only get 5 per cent when they can always use their money to better advantage.

"This law does not allow loans on stocks and bonds. It says to the stock gambler, 'Get thee behind me, Satan,' and comes straight to the people of the country. It is true that men sometimes pay out enormous sums to get what at first blush seems to be apparently a small return for the amount expended, but generally there is back of it something that promises the realization of a handsome profit on the amount put in. Do not you remember that Mr. Ryan and his associates bought up the Equitable, paying two millions and a half for stock worth only $100,000 or thereabout, and they made money out of it? Yes; but there was no limitation to the hundreds of millions they could see in the transaction; they were not limited or held in restraint by a law limiting the profits to 5 per cent. Now, Wall Street criticizes us for this feature of the proposition, which is a sufficient guaranty that they do not think it is in their interests. It is not; it is in the interest of the people of the whole country and of all of the banks of the whole country. Study this proposed plan, gentlemen, and if any of you think you can see any way whereby one or two or three interests can get control of the whole, write and let me know; but please do not criticize the plan unless you can suggest a better plan. Do not find fault with any feature of it unless you can suggest a substitute feature that is better than the one proposed by the commission. Neither I nor any other member of the commission is wedded to this particular plan at the expense of any other equally good or better proposition. We did the best we could considering the conditions.

"The gentleman who made the response to the address of welcome spoke about some one still voting for Andrew Jackson. Well, in one matter the people of this country are still for Andrew Jackson, and that is in the matter of the establishment of a central bank, which he disfavored. The people do not want a central bank; and why are they opposed to the idea of a central bank? Because such an institution at once becomes a competitor of every other bank in the Union. We are for 'home rule' to the extent that each and every State should have all the rights it ought to have, and in everything that does not conflict with the power and authority of the National Government. This proposed institution is to be a 'bank of banks'; it does not enter into competition with any bank or banks. It is a reserve fund from which you can as a member of the association draw relief in time of trouble; and when this plan is adopted we think it will obviate the existence of any trouble.

"If this proposed plan becomes a fact, and we have this 'bank of banks,' we will have foreign branches, and there is no reason why New York should not become the financial center of the world; we would wrest that title from London just as London wrested it from Amsterdam.

"Another good feature would be a uniform rate of discount if this bill becomes a law; this would obviate the disturbing element of a fluctuating rate of discount.

"We have to-day our system of subtreasuries of the United States with our army of civilian officers handling the money of the United States piled up in the Treasury like old junk—hundreds of millions piled up there. Is it doing anybody any good? No. But under the provisions of this bill it becomes active, it becomes part of the national reserve; upon it can be based currency or credits, if needed, by the banks of the country.

"I was looking the other day to see how we stood with other countries on the question of gold; here is the list:

Russia	$961,000,000
France	926,400,000
United Kingdom	650,000,000
Germany (in banks and public treasuries)	185,900,000
United States	1,710,000,000

"This immense reserve fund should be made to be of use.

"The adoption of some financial plan that should better existing conditions is recognized and acknowledged by everyone. We have had panic after panic, financial depressions one after another, and bank failures. In the period of 1890-1910, 400 national banks became insolvent and were closed. England was not immune from such troubles, but had many financial depressions and panics down to the year 1866, since which she has not had any such trouble. During the period I stated just now, in addition to the 400 national banks, there were 1,400 savings banks and trust companies—making 1,800 bank failures in all in that period. In that same period Canada had but seven failures. Can't we learn anything by experience? Can we not see what others are doing, and learn to do something ourselves? Here we have a plan proposed that, if adopted as suggested, becomes part of our form of government—that is why it is termed 'National Reserve Association of the United States.' The proposed plan can not come into competition with the banks of this country. We realize the different conditions surrounding State banks and national banks; the one has not to keep the same reserve as the other; the one is not subject to the same rigid examination as the other; the one has apparently wider latitude than the other.

"Many men, and that is especially so in my State of Illinois, think it better to have State banks than national. A man wants money, he has real estate security, but he can not get a loan at a national bank on such security; he must go to the State bank. We have tried to present a measure here wherein the State and national banks will be put on an evener in all respects. We have tried to work out fair legislation for all interests concerned. It only remains to educate the general public to a recognition of the merits of this measure and its indorsement. You have some fine speakers. Witness that elegant speech of welcome and equally pretty little response. If we want legislation it can be readily obtained when it is made clear that the people demand it. So the people must be educated in that direction. You gentlemen, instruments in the hands of the people to do a certain work just as much as the doctors, lawyers, and ministers, have your function to perform in the civic duties of the country. This measure is for the interests of all the people and all classes of business men, bankers, lawyers, farmers, and laborers of the entire country. That is why I favor it. I want you gentlemen to help obtain this legislation and have it put on the statute books. You have a power among the business interests of the country. But you men have been asleep at the switch, intent on making dollars at the expense of your country's best interest. Turn your attention a little along the lines to make men think of the great questions that are presenting themselves and take your part as citizens in the great civic duties of the country. What is there to money, after all? It procures for us certain physical comforts, that is about all. I want to say to you that the head and the heart and the cultivation of their qualities is worth more than money. I am glad to see and to know that in this State of Vermont there are men with big hearts and large brains, ready and willing to do what they can for the uplifting and upbuilding of their fellow men. That is what we are here for, and there is more to it than there is in making money or in winning political honor and distinction. In my judgment bankers are of the most useful classes of the community and of the widest sphere of influence among the people who put their savings into your banks. We can hardly hope to have this proposed measure put on to the statute books until after next November. You know we are approaching a national election. It is near upon us, and at such times things are always unsettled, so we do not look for the enactment of this measure probably until the next session.

"Now, in conclusion, let me say this: Read this bill carefully; forget, if you can, that you are bankers; forget, if you can, that it may make a penny here or lose a penny there; throw aside such small considerations; look over the bill, and if its provisions commend themselves to your approval then write to your splendid Senators, DILLINGHAM and PAGE; write to your live, wide-awake Congressmen, Judge PLUMLEY and Mr. FOSTER; tell them you are in favor of the measure. They will be glad to hear from you; they want knowledge; they want light; they are very busy; they have not the time to come and canvass your people here, to learn their feelings on pending legislation. They are always glad to learn the sentiment of their constituents, of whom they are the representatives. But remember this, if you have any fault to find with any of the provisions of the measure, do not content yourselves with condemning it; indicate wherein it may be improved or a better feature substituted. As I said before, nobody claims this bill is absolute perfection, but it is the very best thing we could produce. Now, I hope I have said something to some good, and if I have said anything that does not commend itself to you as good, please forget that part which I have said.

"I thank you all for listening so patiently. I appreciate greatly the opportunity to make a visit to this great, historic, old State, and to say a few words to you, although I realize they have been said in a rambling manner. Gentlemen, I thank you."

[At the conclusion of Congressman PRINCE's address the audience arose to its feet, and a long round of loud applause showed how much the speech had been enjoyed and appreciated.]

[A few questions were asked the speaker at the conclusion of his remarks as to certain provisions of the bill, and these may all be found answered by a perusal of the measure, a copy of which no doubt is within reach of every member of the association.]

[A renewed applause greeted Congressman PRINCE as he walked from the platform to the door, having shortly thereafter to leave the city to return to Washington.]

PRESERVATION OF BATTLE FLAGS.

Mr. PADGETT. Mr. Speaker, by action of the Committee on Naval Affairs, I wish to call up the bill H. R. 15471.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Tennessee calls up the bill H. R. 15471, of which the Clerk will report the title.

The Clerk read as follows:

H. R. 15471. A bill making appropriation for repair, preservation, and exhibition of the trophy flags now in store at the Naval Academy at Annapolis, Md.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The House resolves itself automatically into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, and the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BEALL] will take the chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The House is in the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for consideration of the bill the Clerk will report.

Mr. TRIBBLE. Mr. Chairman, I would like to ask the Chair for a division of the time in opposition to the bill.

Mr. PADGETT. Mr. Chairman, I ask for a reading of the bill.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That for the purpose of repair, preservation, and preparation for exhibit of the flags now stored at the United States Naval Academy, Annapolis, Md., which have been taken in battle or after battle by the Navy of the United States of America, the sum of $30,000 be, and is hereby, appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the same to be immediately available.

Mr. PADGETT. Mr. Chairman, I yield to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. BATES].

Mr. BATES. Mr. Chairman, I desire to say a word to the members of this Committee of the Whole in explanation of the pending bill. What I have to say relates to the Navy of the United States and some of its trophies and to the conditions of these trophies and the need of their preservation.

The United States Navy has in the past 100 years accomplished most wonderful naval victories. At the conclusion of many of the naval engagements which have brought such prestige to the American arms the flags, pennants, and ensigns of conquered vessels have been brought home in triumph. These trophy flags have been deposited from time to time at the United States Naval School for safe-keeping, and now it being discovered that these flags and trophies are in a most wretched dilapidated condition, many of them injured by moths, and all of them beginning to crumble from age, shall be restored so far as possible, repaired, and placed in the exhibition cases which have been prepared for them in one of the permanent fireproof buildings at Annapolis. Who own these flags? They belong to the people of the United States.

They are proofs of achievements of the American Navy, in which our people have long had a just pride. There are 136 of these flags, most of them taken in battle or after battle by the Navy, and also several of the battle standards of our own victorious fleets. They are of great historical value. One is Perry's battle flag, a trophy of the battle of Lake Erie, September 10, 1813, on the blue field of which is inscribed the words in white letters, "Don't give up the ship." [Applause.] This flag was used as the signal for action by Commodore Perry. Another of very great historical value is an English royal standard, 23 by 27, captured at York, Canada, April 27, 1813, by a squadron under Commander Isaac Chancey. [Applause.] This is said to be the only English royal standard ever captured. [Applause.]

Another is the first United States ensign hoisted in Japan by Commodore Perry in his interview with the Japanese commissioner at Uraga, July 14, 1853. [Applause.]

Another is a Mexican flag taken at Mazatlan, November 14, 1857, by Commodore Shubrick. [Applause.]

Then there is the ensign of the Alert taken in 1812 by Capt. David Porter. [Applause.]

There is also the last flag flown by the Spanish squadron at the Battle of Manila Bay. [Applause.] Also the flag of the governor general of the Philippines taken by Admiral Dewey in 1898. [Applause.]

Commander W. C. Cole, of the Navy, now stationed at Annapolis, and senior member of the committee on memorials, has taken a deep interest in the subject of the preservation of these trophies, and after much correspondence and research has found a method by which they can be restored and preserved. It is proposed that they be stretched upon a backing of fine linen and then sewed to the linen by expert needlewomen, using small stitches that will not be visible at the distance an observer will stand when viewing them in exhibition cases. Also using sewing silk of the color and shade to match each part of the flag. A most careful estimate has been made of the entire matter, and it is found that there are about 1,200 yards of surface, and that the material—linen, silk, and so forth—for this work will cost $1,500; that it will require 100 needlewomen working 200 days to accomplish this work. The glass cases for the reception of these flags have been prepared from funds appropriated for memorials in 1910.

It is estimated that the average amount of time to be expended by needlewomen in the restoration of these flags will be 15 hours per square foot.

It is the manifest desire of the American people that these flags be restored. We, as the representatives of the people, would be negligent in our duties if we would allow these trophies, some of which have been preserved 100 years, to now become lost and destroyed for lack of reasonable care. As an evidence of the desires of the country in this matter, I call attention to the large number of memorials and petitions which have been received and filed with the Naval Committee from patriotic societies from all parts of our country:

The Society of the Cincinnati, the General Society of the War of 1812, the Aztec Club of 1847, Order of Founders and Patriots of America, Loyal Legion, Navy League of the United States, National Association of Naval Veterans, Patriotic Sons of America, Sons of American Revolution, Daughters of American Revolution, etc.

These, Mr. Chairman, were among those received five or six weeks ago, and I am informed that other memorials from patriotic societies of our land have since been received.

Two flags are before you to illustrate the treatment and means of restoration that is proposed. One of them, the larger, is the flag of Epervier, captured by the Peacock April 29, 1814, off the coast of Florida, under Master Commandant Lewis Warrington [applause], in a most spirited engagement, in which 10 were killed and 15 wounded. This flag of the Epervier was in a most wretched condition, most of its surface having been reduced to a mere film and also torn badly in many places. It cost $111 to restore this flag. Many of the flags are even in worse condition than was this. The other and smaller flag, which has not received the proposed treatment, was the flag of the Dominica, captured August 15, 1813, under Capt. D. Diron in an engagement which resulted in the loss of 23 killed and 67 wounded.

The proposed treatment will be durable. Nearly 1,000 years ago the wife of the Duke of Normandy, with the help of her attendants, made some tapestries which are to-day known as the Bayeux tapestries. They are mounted on fine linen in exactly the same manner it is proposed to mount these flags at Annapolis. They have been constantly under exhibit and have been transported to various exhibitions from time to time.

The Naval Committee of this House, by an almost unanimous vote, approved of this bill and appropriation after according Commander Cole of the Navy a full hearing on all the details of the expenditure of amount sought to be appropriated. It is the opinion of your committee that this work should be done without delay and that the amount asked for in this bill is necessary for the performance of the work. We are accustomed to appropriate a fair sum each year for monuments, statues, columns, and inscriptions to perpetuate great events and to commemorate great names.

I might mention for one moment the appropriations and expenditures that have been made during the whole history of our country to commemorate events such as those symbolized by these trophies and mementos.

I need not call to your mind Bunker Hill nor Washington's Monument, nor the National Museum, in this city, which cost from two to three million dollars and is filled with trophies not one of which, I believe, exceeds in historic value these old battle flags.

Some of the bravest and most conspicuous and most useful achievements that have ever been noted on the pages of American history have been performed by officers and men of the American Navy. There are few names that the American people hold in higher esteem than those of Perry, Farragut, Schley, Sampson, and Dewey. [Applause.] Not only the Nation but communities and States all over this Union delight to honor the names and achievements of those who have been termed great. The name of Virginia is linked with those of Washington and Lee; Texas, with her Houston; Massachusetts, her Samuel Adams and Sumner; Illinois, her Lincoln; Ohio, her Chase, Garfield, and McKinley; Maine, her Fessenden; Pennsylvania, her Franklin.

It is proposed by this bill to place in practically enduring form the mementos of the events and names which are held in honor and esteem by the people of every State of this Union. These flags and trophies, now crumbling into dust, tell more than spoken or written words of the achievements of the American Navy. They are silent witnesses of the bravery and heroism of the American sailor and an inspiration to present and future generations. [Loud applause.]

The following are the articles to which I referred in the course of my remarks and which I herewith submit relating to the capture of the flags of the Epervia and the Dominica:

Action between U. S. sloop Peacock, Master Commandant Lewis Warrington, and English brig of war Epervier, Capt. Richard Wales.

The second of the six new sloops to get to sea was the Peacock, Master Commandant Lewis Warrington. Sailing from New York on the 12th of March, the Peacock went as far south as the Great Isaacs, and then skirted along the coast of Florida to Cape Canaveral. On Friday morning, April 29, in latitude 27° 47' north, longitude 80° 9' west, three merchant ships and a large brig of war were despatched to windward. On making out the Peacock the merchantmen drew away, while their escort bore down to reconnoiter. The Peacock then showed English colors and allowed the stranger to approach, and at 9 a. m. the brig signaled the merchant vessels, and soon afterwards they were hurrying away in different directions. In the meantime the Peacock was rapidly nearing her foe, and at 9.40 a. m. she hauled down the English colors and ran up her own. By 10 a. m. the vessels were within half gunshot, but neither of them had opened fire. Master Commandant Warrington now maneuvered to secure a raking position, but the enemy avoided this by putting up his helm until close on the Peacock's bow, when, hauling up to the wind, he fired his starboard broadside, and the American replied with their port battery. At the first fire the Peacock received two 32-pound shot in the quarter of her foreyard, which disabled the fore and fore-topsail for the remainder of the action. This mishap compelled Master Commandant Warrington to forego maneuvering and to rely entirely on his gunnery. Orders were now given to load with star-and-bar shot, with a view to crippling the enemy's rigging, so that he could not profit by the Peacock's disabled foreyard. In a few minutes the American foreyard gave way and the antagonists drew closer, which rendered their fire very destructive. About 10.40 a. m. the enemy lost his head sails, and at the same time his main boom, having been shot through, fell upon the wheel. This brought the wind on his beam, exposing him to a raking fire from the Peacock, but the latter had too much headway to avail herself of the advantage except by throwing in two or three shot. Then hauling close under his opponent's lee, Master Commandant Warrington poured in a hot fire, which was chiefly directed at the enemy's hull, and soon her main topmast went over. At 11 a. m. she attempted to wear around so as to bring a fresh broadside to bear, and this brought the vessels so close that the British commander was heard urging his men to attempt boarding; "but," says James, "the British crew declined a measure so fraught with danger." The battle had now lasted 45 minutes and the brig struck. On being boarded the stranger was found to be the British brig sloop Epervier, Capt. Richard Wales.

Action between U. S. privateer Decatur 3d, Capt. Diron, and the English three-masted schooner Dominica, Lieut. Barrett commanding, August 5, 1813, latitude 23° 4' north, longitude 67° 0' west.

The Decatur left port in the summer of 1813 on a general cruise against British commerce, and early in August she was in the track of British West India traders homeward bound. Early on the morning of August 5, when in latitude 23° 4' north, longitude 67° 0' west, or a little to the south of the Bermudas, the Decatur was heading northward under easy sail, hoping for some prize to appear. About 10.30 a. m. the man at the masthead reported a sail bearing away to the south, and shortly afterwards another, steering in the same direction, was sighted. Capt. Diron promptly tacked southward, with a view of getting the weather gauge of the strangers, so that, should they prove to be British cruisers, he would have the advantage in a chase.

Capt. Diron approached the strangers with caution, knowing that there was a strong probability of their being a couple of British sloops of war. The danger of approaching a stronger force, however, did not prevent the American from coming to closer range, and at 11 a. m. it was seen that the sails were a ship and a schooner, which, on making out the sails of the Decatur, had changed their course to the north so as to meet her. The three vessels slowly reduced the distance between them, and at 12.30 p. m. the Decatur, having secured a position a little to windward and being almost within gunshot, wore around and ran a little to leeward, upon which the schooner showed English colors. Capt. Diron was now satisfied that he had an English war schooner to deal with, and that the ship was under its protection. Half an hour later he wore again, still keeping the weather gauge, and about 1.30 p. m. the stranger fired a shot, which fell short.

Knowing that the British commander had a heavier armament than the privateer, but believing that he had the greater number of men to man his ship, Capt. Diron determined to have the fight at the closest quarters, and to carry the Englishman by boarding. Accordingly he cleared for action, sent his men to quarters.

Having made all his arrangements for the battle, Capt. Diron about 2 p. m. wore ship, with a view of passing under the stern of the enemy and giving a raking fire, but as the schooners neared each other the Englishman luffed and gave his broadside, most of the shot passing over the American. * * * At 2.15 p. m. the Americans began the fire of their long tom, and as it was aimed with coolness and deliberation, within half gunshot distance, the effect in so small a vessel was serious, disabled several of the Englishman's guns, besides injuring many men.

After delivering their first effective fire, the Englishman filled away so as to prevent the Americans from boarding, while Capt. Diron doggedly followed close under their stern, determined to board at any cost. In this way, bow to stern, the two craft ran several minutes, neither side being able to maintain a very effective fire. The Americans now made another attempt to board, but it was frustrated in the same manner as the first.

But the last move made by the British schooner in her endeavor to avoid boarding gave the Decatur the advantage in sailing, and persisting in following close in the wake of his enemy, Capt. Diron finally had the satisfaction of seeing his craft gradually overhaul the Englishman. Again he called for his boarders, and at 3.30 p. m. the Decatur ran her bowsprit over the enemy's stern, her jib boom piercing the Englishman's mainsail. This was the signal for the Americans to board, and while some of them poured in a heavy fire of musketry, others, led by Vincent Saffitt, the prize master, and Thomas Wasborn, the quartermaster, clambered along the bowsprit and sprang to the Englishman's deck.

It was not until 18 of the Dominica's crew were killed and 42 wounded that the few survivors were induced to surrender. A total of 60 killed or wounded in a crew of 88 fully attests the desperate nature of the struggle and the gallantry of the men against whom the Americans fought. * * *

Mr. Chairman, I ask that the gentleman from Georgia occupy a portion of the time. I reserve the balance of my time.

The CHAIRMAN. How much time does the gentleman from Pennsylvania yield to the gentleman from Georgia?

Mr. BATES. How much time have I remaining, Mr. Chairman?

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is advised that the gentleman has 45 minutes remaining. How much time does the gentleman from Pennsylvania yield to the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. TRIBBLE]?

Mr. BATES. I reserve the balance of my time for others who desire to speak in behalf of my measure. I do not yield any of my time to the gentleman from Georgia.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is under the impression that the gentleman from Georgia has the floor in his own right.

Mr. TRIBBLE. Mr. Chairman, I have the floor. I was recognized by the Chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair may be mistaken, but the Chair believes that the gentleman from Georgia is entitled to recognition in his own right.

Mr. TRIBBLE. Mr. Chairman, there is not a man in this House that applauds the appearance of these flags more heartily than I do. I do not rise for the purpose of opposing the restoration of them. I do feel, however, being a member of the Committee on Naval Affairs, that it is due to this House that some facts be laid before this House, and when I have done that I shall have discharged the duty and responsibility which I feel rest upon me.

Now, Mr. Chairman, I want to be distinctly understood. I rise in the first place to oppose the enormous amount that is proposed to be appropriated. I rise in the second place for the purpose of opposing the place that is proposed to keep these flags.

The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. BATES] refers to the women's organizations all over this country, and he refers to the Daughters of the Revolution. I have in my possession an article in one of the leading papers published by the Daughters of the Revolution, applauding the action of this committee in proposing to repair the flags and rejoicing that the flags will be brought to the National Capital to be exhibited in some public place. I say the people all over the country can see them then, instead of hiding them away down at Annapolis, where nobody can see them except the students who go there, the professors, and the girls who go there and dance at the commencement periods.

Mr. BOWMAN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Georgia yield to the gentleman from Pennsylvania?

Mr. BOWMAN. Just for one question.

Mr. TRIBBLE. Yes, sir.

Mr. BOWMAN. I can not see anything in the bill that decides that these relics shall be stored in any particular place.

Mr. TRIBBLE. I will answer that question. The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. BATES] stated in his speech that they should go to Annapolis. Let me read to you from a statement in the hearings:

Now, gentlemen, if you will remember, last year when Capt. Coontz and I came before the committee we asked for $3,000 for work on the memorials which we have down there. There are a number of memorials of different kinds, and we had in mind not only the storage of these memorials and monuments and other things, but the arrangement of the flags in places which had been prepared for them by the money the committee had appropriated in former years.

This you will find on page 496. They have prepared certain boxes down there in which to confine them, and the people of America, the people of my district who come to the Capital, and other people who come to the Capital, will not have the privilege of seeing them, placed as it is proposed at this Naval Academy. My children will not have the opportunity to go to Annapolis, in all probability, and none of them, in all probability, will be invited to go to a German there; the children of my constituents will not go there; the American people will not go there, and therefore I am contending that these flags should come to Washington. If this bill were so amended as to place these flags where the people want them to be placed and safeguards placed around the appropriation, then I withdraw my objection.

Mr. ROBERTS of Massachusetts. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Georgia yield to the gentleman from Massachusetts?

Mr. TRIBBLE. I can not yield just now. I will yield in a moment. I will then yield whatever time the gentleman wants.

Mr. ROBERTS of Massachusetts. If the gentleman will pardon me, just on that point—

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Georgia yield?

Mr. TRIBBLE. No; I desire to proceed at this time.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman declines to yield.

Mr. TRIBBLE. Now, Mr. Chairman, at the last regular session of Congress, with a Republican House, that House appropriated $3,000 for the restoration of these flags. Now, we occupy the position of being an economical Democratic House, and yet you propose to increase this appropriation to $30,000 instead of $3,000. I do not want to be misunderstood.

The Sixty-first Congress, I say, appropriated $3,000 for this purpose. In the hearings, on page 496, at the bottom of the page, it was stated by a commander that this amount of $3,000 is sufficient. Now, what occurred? A new commander goes there, and he proceeds to use this $3,000 in the restoration of these flags. What does he do? He gets into correspondence with a lady by the name of Mrs. Fowler, who has an office in Boston and who has been doing this class of work for 30 years. She comes down to Annapolis, goes over these flags, and I will not say she wants to get a big price for her work, but she finds $30,000 worth of work there instead of $3,000 worth. Commander Coontz stated before the committee last year this amount would be sufficient; this House appropriated $3,000.

Now, this new commander comes here and asks this House to give $30,000.

There are 136 of these flags. Now follow me, please, for here are figures that will stagger you. There is a certain amount of sentiment in this question, and I go just as far with my sentiment as any Member on the floor of this House; but there is a business proposition involved here as well as sentiment.

There are 136 flags, and the woman to whom it is proposed to give this work took the flag which was in the worst condition of the whole 136. I have forgotten the name of the flag—I believe it is the flag of Epervier—but, anyway, it comes down to us from away back in 1814. She took the worst one and repaired it, and it cost $111 to do the work. Now multiply 136 by that and you have got $14,096. What do you say about that? It is proposed to double that amount. Many of these flags were captured at Manila and different places in the Spanish-American War. They are comparatively new flags. There is comparatively little work to be done on them. Yet they put these flags in at over $200 each. Am I right in coming before this House and throwing some light on this question?

I realize the fact that I have been misunderstood in making my appearance here to oppose this appropriation as provided in this bill. I am not opposing the restoration of these flags. There are flags in this number that ought to be restored, and possibly they all ought to be restored. I do not say they should not be, but I think this committee should give some diligence to the consideration of this question, and I want Members of the House to send for copies of these hearings and read the names of these flags.

Mr. COOPER. Will the gentleman permit a question?

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Georgia yield to the gentleman from Wisconsin?

Mr. TRIBBLE. In a minute or two, when I have finished, I will yield to the gentleman.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman declines to yield at present.

Mr. TRIBBLE. Mr. Chairman, where does this recommendation come from? It comes from the commandant at Annapolis and from a lady who is interested in getting this work. What about the commandant at Annapolis who comes up here and makes this recommendation? Mr. Chairman, he toils not, neither does he spin. I dare say he never worked a day in his life.

Mr. KOPP. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TRIBBLE. No; I will yield when I pass over three more propositions.

Mr. Chairman, the United States spent $18,000 upon the education of this man to start with at Annapolis while he was a student. Yet he comes up here and presents to this committee this kind of an argument. He is a fine business man! When I say that he toils not, neither does he spin, I think I am justified in making that statement, so far as business and financial transactions are concerned. He goes upon the sea. No doubt he is a competent officer, but here is what he says, now, in talking about the amount that should be paid, in the committee hearings, to wit:

I do not like to get down to the cheap-labor business, but it may be that I will be compelled to under the $30,000. I shall do the best I can.

He does not think $30,000 sufficient.

The point was made that these flags could be done for less, and he rises and says he did not want any cheap labor in this question. I do not think a man who goes to sea has any right to come here and dictate to me, who comes from a farming district and represents farmers and business men. They look to my business qualification and have a right to, and I am not going to take his recommendation.

Mr. BATES. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TRIBBLE. No, sir; I can not.

Mr. BATES. It was a member of the committee who said that.

Mr. TRIBBLE. You are in error. Now, I am putting up to the House this business proposition. I am in favor of restoring these flags. I do not care to be misquoted on that proposition by anybody, but I am opposed to it along the lines I have tried to point out, and I call upon the Members who have occupied seats here from day to day and seen the agricultural bill going through this House, and for the purpose of economy have seen section after section trimmed, thereby, as I contend, legislating against the farmer at home who has to work to make the money to pay for this appropriation, and yet cut down the appropriation that will help him and not contest extravagance as I contend this to be. Is it right to legislate against him and come in here and cut down the agricultural bill and then rush through this House an appropriation of $30,000 for flag repair, three times the amount necessary? I shall offer my protest against any such Democratic economy.

Mr. LEVER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TRIBBLE. I will.

Mr. LEVER. I understand the gentleman from Georgia is not opposed to the restoration of the flags, but is opposed to their restoration as provided in the bill.

Mr. TRIBBLE. That is exactly my position.

Mr. LEVER. What amendment does the gentleman propose to offer by which the restoration may be had in the line of his own views?

Mr. TRIBBLE. I think this bill ought to be amended so as to provide that these flags when restored shall be exhibited in the National Capital of the United States. I think that the bill ought to be sent back to the Naval Committee and let them investigate and see how much the restoration of these flags should cost and which one of the flags should be restored. There are a number of them, in my opinion, the country does not care anything about.

Mr. HOWARD. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TRIBBLE. I will yield to the gentleman from Georgia.

Mr. HOWARD. I believe that the complaint that the gentleman registers against the bill is that $30,000 is a good price to pay for a little job.

Mr. TRIBBLE. If you take the worst flag that this woman picked out, which she said would cost $111, and multiply it by the number of flags, it will only cost one-half of the amount proposed to be appropriated here. What are you going to do with the other $15,000; where is the other $15,000 going?

Mr. LEVER. I was about to ask the gentleman from Georgia if he had in mind the amount of the appropriation that he believes is necessary for the restoration of the flags.

Mr. TRIBBLE. Yes; I think $10,000 is ample.

Mr. COOPER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TRIBBLE. Yes.

Mr. COOPER. The gentleman says that he thinks $10,000 is ample?

Mr. TRIBBLE. Yes, sir.

Mr. COOPER. What witnesses has he examined as to that point?

Mr. TRIBBLE. The witness they produce here is Mrs. Fowler, and she says that the worst flag, which was captured in 1814, would cost $111, and I multiply it by 136, and the total amount is $15,000. A great many of the flags are recently captured and do not need repairing, and therefore $10,000 is more than enough.

Mr. COOPER. What was the size of the flag to which the gentleman refers?

Mr. TRIBBLE. I am not prepared to say; that flag was selected from among the flags as one of the worst.

Mr. COOPER. Is it not a fact that it was one of the smallest flags?

Mr. TRIBBLE. I am not prepared to say. What I want is an investigation along that line, and I say the Naval Committee acted without necessary facts and was hasty in consideration.

Mr. COOPER. The gentleman is aware, from the report of the committee at least, that this Mrs. Fowler is a leading expert needlewoman, who took up the work originally as a pastime and later as a profession, and who, by the Massachusetts Legislature, has been given charge of the preservation of the flags in the Massachusetts statehouse, and that she was examined by the commander of the United States Navy, Mr. Cole, who not only has corroborated her, but the commandant of the Naval Academy has also corroborated her.

Mr. TRIBBLE. I am aware of that, and commented on both of them. I said I did not propose to be controlled by the opinion of either of them, because their own facts show that it would not cost more than $10,000.

Mr. COOPER. I inferred from what the gentleman said that he was not to be controlled. I knew he was not to be controlled; but I was asking him for the basis for his opinion. According to his own statement he has not made any examination, and he is not able to identify the flag that he has selected as a basis.

Mr. TRIBBLE. I have got the statement in answer to the gentleman's question, that the worst one cost only $111, and I have got the statement and the facts here that the gentleman can read, that the most of these flags are new flags.

Mr. COOPER. Is the gentleman aware of the fact that this lady says the flags are to be sewn on linen with silk by expert needlewomen, with small stitches that will not be visible at the distance the observer will stand from them in viewing them?

Mr. TRIBBLE. Yes; and I am aware of the fact that the ones she repaired she did exactly as she proposes to do the others.

Mr. COOPER. Is the gentleman aware of the fact that when he says that the work will cost only $10,000, that she says the material will cost $1,500?

Mr. TRIBBLE. Yes, $1,500; but there is a great deal of difference between that and $30,000.

Mr. COOPER. But that does not include what she says is a fair estimate for 100 needle women at $1.28 per day.

Mr. TRIBBLE. Yes; but her estimate does not bear out the fact that she took one and repaired it for $111, one captured in 1814, and here are other flags that do not need repairing that were captured at a much later date.

Mr. COOPER. Was that a large flag or a small flag?

Mr. TRIBBLE. I have just stated to the gentleman that I have not got the information, and I say that the Naval Affairs Committee has not that information, and that committee should have it, and that is what I am protesting against.

Mr. BOWMAN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TRIBBLE. I will exhibit the flag which she repaired. Look at it, look at the size of it. See how large it is. Also, see this small one to be repaired.

Mr. ROBERTS of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield a moment on the question of the size of the flag?

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from Georgia yield to the gentleman from Massachusetts?

Mr. TRIBBLE. Yes; I yield to the gentleman from Massachusetts. He is my colleague on the committee.

Mr. ROBERTS of Massachusetts. The flag which the gentleman just exhibited as having been repaired is 4 by 9 feet 8 inches, practically 36 or 37 square feet. The report of the committee shows there are many flags much larger. The first one is 16 by 30 feet, or 480 square feet, and yet the gentleman argues that 480 square feet of flag will be repaired for the same price that 36 feet of flag were repaired for.

Mr. TRIBBLE. Yes; and the committee report shows that part of these flags are very small flags, and some of them are pennants.

Mr. ROBERTS of Massachusetts. But does not the gentleman know that a pennant may be 120 or 160 or 180 feet long?

Mr. TRIBBLE. It is not reasonable to suppose so.

Mr. ROBERTS of Massachusetts. But they are that long in the Navy.

Mr. TRIBBLE. That may be so, but it is not reasonable to suppose so. The complaint I make to the gentleman is that this committee has gone off on a supposition, following this naval commander and this lady who wants the job.

Mr. ROBERTS of Massachusetts. Oh, no. Does not the gentleman remember that we were told this estimate of cost was based on the number of square feet of flags of all sizes, and that it cost $111 for one particular flag, which happens to have in it about 36 square feet?

Mr. TRIBBLE. The gentleman knows that they said that that flag was one of the very worst, and it was brought up to its present condition and exhibited to show what they could do with an old flag—take it and make a good one of it.

Mr. KONOP. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TRIBBLE. Yes.

Mr. KONOP. This bill provides for an appropriation of $30,000 for the repair, preservation, and exhibition of these flags. Does not the gentleman know that it will require some glass cases in which to put the flags, and that it will take some expense to exhibit them?

Mr. TRIBBLE. But has not the gentleman read here in my very first remarks, on this page right here, that that appropriation has already been made, and provision has been made to receive these flags? That is one of my complaints. They propose to put these flags down there at Annapolis where they will never be seen by anybody. If you want to stir up patriotism and preserve these flags so that your children and my children can see them, introduce an amendment and pass it so that they will be brought to the National Capital.

I now yield to the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. McCALL].

Mr. McCALL. Mr. Chairman, I just wish to ask the gentleman whether it would not meet with his approval, so far as the expense goes, to insert, after the word "dollars" on top of page 2, the words "or so much thereof as may be necessary," and then at the end of the bill amend so as to read "the same to be immediately available and to be expended under the direction of the Secretary of the Navy"?

Mr. TRIBBLE. Well, if the gentleman will offer that amendment I will support it. [Applause.]

Mr. McCALL. I wish to ask my friend from Pennsylvania whether there is objection to that amendment?

Mr. PADGETT. We will accept that amendment; I have no objection in the world to it.

Mr. BATES. I will state to the gentleman that we do not desire that a penny more than necessary shall be expended.

Mr. McCALL. Of course, and it seems to me the bill means that now.

Mr. BATES. I will say to the gentleman from Massachusetts, with the permission of the gentleman from Georgia, that it is absolutely impossible to figure out to the last penny, but that the estimate of this expert is that, working with women at the pittance of $1.28 a day, there would not be a margin of $100.

Mr. McCALL. I would like to suggest that when bills are reported from the Committee on the Library somewhat similar to this the rule is to say who shall have charge of the spending of the money, and it seems to me there ought to be added to this bill the authorization that the money is to be expended under the direction of the Secretary of the Navy.

Mr. BATES. I will either offer that amendment or accept such an amendment.

Mr. McCALL. I should prefer that the gentleman should offer it.

Mr. TRIBBLE. Mr. Speaker, I understand the chairman of the Committee on Naval Affairs agrees to accept that, and that settles the question, so far as I am concerned. [Applause.] I understand the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. McCALL] provided that they should be brought to the National Capital?

Mr. ROBERTS of Massachusetts. No; let me say to the gentleman—

Mr. PADGETT. It leaves that question open.

Mr. ROBERTS of Massachusetts. I tried to get the gentleman's attention. Right on that point where the flags shall be—

Mr. PADGETT. Let us take the bill up and dispose of it, please.

Mr. BATES. Mr. Speaker, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. WITHERSPOON].

Mr. WITHERSPOON. Mr. Chairman, this bill appropriating $30,000 for the preservation of 136 flags taken in conflicts between the American Navy and the navies of hostile governments will receive my vote, because I feel that the value of these flags is far greater than the cost of their preservation. [Applause.] When the proposition to make this appropriation was first submitted to the committee it did not have my assent. I have long felt, and I feel now, that the enormous expenditures of the Federal Government far exceed the value of the services it renders the people, and on account of the unfair, unjust apportionment of taxes, have become oppressive and burdensome and should not be increased; and I had, therefore, made up my mind to vote for a reduction in all public expenditures and to vote against all increases in the public expenditures and against the assumption of new obligations on the part of the Government, but when these flags were exhibited to the committee and I saw their torn and tattered fragments struggling, as it were, to hold together and apparently breaking asunder, like the sunlit shreds of a cloud whose glory is about to depart forever, I was unwilling to say by my vote that those fading emblems of the national glory, those neglected tokens of a splendid heroism, those sacred rags of an unconquerable Navy, were not worth the cost of their preservation. [Applause.] If it be difficult to justify this expenditure, it is impossible to excuse an assent to the impending destruction of these flags. Written all through their precious folds there are lessons which we can not afford to forget; there are memories which we can not afford to dim; and there are hopes which we can not darken without shutting out the very sunlight of our future. These flags tell us of a day when the public good was held high above private gain, of a day when American heroes hastened to surrender and to sacrifice position, place, property, reputation, and life itself for the public good, and when they were never seen rushing with open hands into the Public Treasury when the value of noble deeds and public victories were not measured in dollars and cents.

They tell us of a day when the essence and the glory of the Union were that all the States were equal, and when geography, but not sentiment, divided our country into sections. [Loud applause.]

The preservation of the flags is necessary to the perpetuation of those lofty ideals and noble aims of which they are the emblems.

Mr. Speaker, in this age of commercialism, when avarice has become the dominant passion, and when private gain has become a more potent consideration than justice, there is an imperative need for the continued and repeated expression of all that is unselfish and noble and patriotic in the emblems as well as in the literature of the past. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. CURLEY. Mr. Chairman, I move that the gentleman's time be extended 10 minutes.

Mr. PADGETT. The gentleman is speaking in his own right, and has an hour.

Mr. BATES. Mr. Chairman, I yield to the gentleman from Mississippi such additional time as he may desire.

Mr. PADGETT. The gentleman from Pennsylvania can not yield. The gentleman from Mississippi has an hour in his own right. The time is under his control.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair was advised to the contrary, and the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. BATES] yielded five minutes.

Mr. BATES. Mr. Chairman, I yield to the gentleman from Mississippi such time as he may desire.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. BATES] yields to the gentleman from Mississippi such time as he may desire.

Mr. WITHERSPOON. Mr. Chairman, it has been urged that even if these flags be preserved they will be seen by such a small number of people that their inspiration for good will be very limited.

Mr. TRIBBLE. May I ask the gentleman a question?

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. WITHERSPOON] yield to the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. TRIBBLE]?

Mr. WITHERSPOON. I yield to the gentleman.

Mr. TRIBBLE. Do you not think that those flags ought to be brought to the National Capital and placed in the Capitol or the National Museum, or somewhere else, in order that they may be in a public place?

Mr. WITHERSPOON. Mr. Chairman, I never in my life have had the ability to speak on a question that was not up. And when the question proposed by the gentleman arises, then I will express my views upon it.

But this bill has not one single word in it about the locality in which these flags shall be kept, and according to my recollection of the testimony before the committee, a place has already been prepared at Annapolis at an expense, the amount of which I do not know; and I guess my economical friend from Georgia would like to have this bill require that these flags shall be brought to Washington, so that there would be a good excuse to appropriate $2,000,000 or $3,000,000 to erect another building in which to receive them. [Applause.]

Now, Mr. Chairman, in regard to the proposition raised by my friend from Georgia that the people will not see these flags at Annapolis, I want to say that I do not know how many people will see them there. But if it be assumed that no human being will ever visit Annapolis and observe these flags, yet I submit that the midshipmen who go to Annapolis from every congressional district of the Union will see them, and that the lessons thus taught the young defenders of our country will be worth the amount of this expenditure. [Applause.] And, Mr. Chairman, as has been stated by the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. BATES], the plan of the restoration of these flags is the work of woman. In line with her noble mission to cherish and preserve all that is best and purest in human life, it is the skill of her needle and the touch of her genius that are to make these perishing flags immortal. [Applause.]

I just want to say that if some patriotic artist could paint the picture of 200 skillful needlewomen restoring to their pristine beauty these captured flags of our Navy, such a picture as that would be more potent than the appeals of the orator, than the music of the poet, in the restoration of the nobility and patriotism of a glorious past. [Loud applause.]

Mr. BATES. Mr. Chairman, I yield five minutes of my time to the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. KOPP], a member of the committee.

Mr. KOPP. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the committee, I have little desire to take your time on this subject, and especially after the most eloquent address of the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. WITHERSPOON]. But there are two or three things, it seems to me, in view of the remarks of the gentleman from Georgia, that should be called to the committee's attention. The gentleman from Georgia [Mr. TRIBBLE] was very severe in his arraignment of the custodian of these flags at Annapolis for coming before the committee. These flags have been at Annapolis, some of them, for nearly a hundred years. They have been in boxes there, cared for as well as could be. All kinds of preservatives have been used upon them, but notwithstanding this fact these flags have been slowly crumbling to dust. The officer in charge of them saw this fact, realized that they would not long remain unless cared for, and so, performing what he supposed was a patriotic duty, he came before the committee and asked for a sufficient amount of money to care for them. And now he is being severely criticized by the gentleman from Georgia because he came and asked us to make such an appropriation.

Mr. TRIBBLE. Mr. Chairman, may I ask the gentleman a question?

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Wisconsin yield to the gentleman from Georgia?

Mr. KOPP. No; I refuse to yield.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman declines to yield.

Mr. KOPP. The gentleman from Georgia [Mr. TRIBBLE] criticizes the large amount of money that is to be expended, but I understand his criticism is met by amendments which are to be offered. However, I can not see why he should criticize the bill as it is to-day. It simply provides that the women who do this work shall be paid $1.28, $1.30, or $1.35 per day, but the gentleman from Georgia says he represents farmers, and he protests against this reckless expenditure of money.

I would like to ask him whether his constituents protest against the payment to needlewomen of $1.28 per day? If they do, I am surprised, and I am glad to assert that my constituents do not, and I believe that the constituents of most of the Members in this body have reached that point, that most of the people of this country have reached that period when they want to see the labor either of man or woman paid a wage commensurate with the value of the service rendered. [Applause.]

Now, criticism is also made of the fact that it is proposed to keep these relics at Annapolis. But, as the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. WITHERSPOON] so well said, that is not now before us. But I might inform the Members of this House, as perhaps they already know, or most of them know, that the large memorial hall which was recently erected there with the expenditure of so much money has a beautiful rotunda, and in that rotunda are appropriate glass cases, which can be made absolutely air proof, for the reception of these flags when they are prepared.

Now, it may be that the children of the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. TRIBBLE] and my children will not go to Annapolis to see these relics. Possibly they would not go to see them if they were in Washington, although it is not probable. Probably the untold millions of America would never see them even in Washington. But, be that as it may, it does seem to me that the best place for these flags is at Annapolis. Annapolis has produced some wonderful men in the past. The men who have graduated from Annapolis have achieved victories on many a sea of which this Nation and many other nations are proud. I believe that if the time should ever come, which God forbid, when we are again engaged in a great war and we must again depend upon our Navy we will find men from Annapolis who will prove to be second Farraguts, Perrys, Deweys, Sampsons, and the other great heroes of our Navy. [Applause.]

What better place is there, Mr. Chairman, for those flags than there, where daily these brightest of our young men whom we are training for the naval life can see them and reflect upon the heroism of the men who brought those flags to Annapolis and from their tattered folds receive inspiration for the glorious deeds which we hope are in store for them? [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. BATES. Mr. Chairman, I yield two minutes more to the gentleman.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. KOPP] is recognized for two minutes more.

Mr. KOPP. Now, I think, Mr. Chairman, that that meets most of the objections which have been raised by the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. TRIBBLE]. As to the main proposition, of course there is no division of opinion among Americans. We all want those flags preserved. We want all our historical landmarks and memorials preserved. The utilitarian says, "Why spend the money? What good is it?" That may be true; but there has not been a great accomplishment in the world's history that has not been permeated with sentiment. Why did we build the Washington Monument? Why did we build Bunker Hill Monument? Why did we appropriate so much money to take from Habana Harbor the wreck of the battleship Maine? My utilitarian friend will say, perhaps, that his constituents protest against that terrible expenditure of money, because it does no good. But why do we take that battered hulk out to sea, and there, with all honor due to it, bury it? Merely on account of sentiment. That is the only reason, and yet he protests because we are doing these things for sentiment.

Mr. Chairman, I believe the American people, with one voice, want these tattered flags, mute witnesses of the valor and courage of American sailors in many a naval contest, saved; want them preserved, not for to-day or to-morrow only, but for all time. [Applause.]

Mr. BATES. Mr. Chairman, I have some amendments which have been accepted.

The CHAIRMAN. They will be in order after the general debate is concluded.

Mr. PADGETT. There being no further general debate desired, I ask that the reading of the bill proceed under the five-minute rule.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That for the purpose of repair, preservation, and preparation for exhibit of the flags now stored at the United States Naval Academy, Annapolis, Md., which have been taken in battle, or after battle, by the Navy of the United States of America, the sum of $30,000 be, and is hereby, appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the same to be immediately available.

With the following committee amendment:

On page 1, line 7, after the word "America," insert "or those United States flags or trophies deemed to be of historic value."

The committee amendment was agreed to.

Mr. BATES. Mr. Chairman, I move to amend page 2, line 1, after the word "dollars," by adding the words "or as much thereof as may be necessary."

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

On page 2, line 1, after the word "dollars," insert the words "or as much thereof as may be necessary."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. BATES. Mr. Chairman, I move to amend by adding at the end of the bill the words:

Provided, That the amount so appropriated shall be expended under the direction of the Secretary of the Navy.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Pennsylvania offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

On page 2, after the word "available," in line 3, insert: "Provided, That the amount so appropriated shall be expended under the direction of the Secretary of the Navy."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. PADGETT. Mr. Chairman, I move that the committee do now rise and report the bill with amendments to the House, with the recommendation that the amendments be agreed to and that the bill as amended do pass.

The motion was agreed to.

The committee accordingly rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. BEALL of Texas, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that committee had had under consideration the bill (H. R. 15471) making appropriation for repair, preservation, and exhibition of the trophy flags now in store at the Naval Academy, Annapolis, Md., and had directed him to report the same back to the House with sundry amendments, with the recommendation that the amendments be agreed to, and that the bill as amended do pass.

The SPEAKER. Is a separate vote demanded on any amendment? If not, the Chair will put them in gross.

The amendments were agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, and was accordingly read the third time and passed.

On motion of Mr. BATES, a motion to reconsider the last vote was laid on the table.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

By unanimous consent leave of absence was granted—

To Mr. GOEKE, indefinitely, on account of illness in his family.
To Mr. ASHBROOK, for five days, on account of important business.

LOSS OF CITIZENSHIP BY DESERTERS.

Mr. PADGETT. Mr. Speaker, by direction of the Committee on Naval Affairs, I call up the bill (H. R. 17483) amending section 1998 of the Revised Statutes of the United States, and to authorize the President, in certain cases, to mitigate or remit the loss of rights of citizenship imposed by law upon deserters from the naval service.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That every person who hereafter deserts the military or naval service of the United States, or who, being duly enrolled, departs the jurisdiction of the district in which he is enrolled, or goes beyond the limits of the United States, with intent to avoid any draft into the military or naval service, lawfully ordered, shall be liable to all the penalties and forfeitures of section 1996: Provided, That the provisions of this section and said section 1996 shall not apply to any person deserting the military or naval service of the United States in time of peace: And provided further, That the loss of rights of citizenship imposed by law upon deserters from the naval service may be mitigated or remitted by the President where the offense was committed in time of peace and where the exercise of such clemency will not be prejudicial to the public interests.

With the following committee amendment:

On page 1, line 9, after the word "ninety-six," insert "of the Revised Statutes of the United States."

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. WITHERSPOON). The gentleman from Tennessee is recognized.

Mr. PADGETT. Mr. Speaker, I yield to the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. ROBERTS], the author of the bill and the Member who reported it from the committee.

Mr. ROBERTS of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, the bill now under consideration is intended to remove one of the harshest penalties that can be imposed upon a man for an offense, to wit, the loss of rights of citizenship. As the law stands at present, it is found in the Revised Statutes of the United States, and in order that the House may understand exactly the situation I will read:

SEC. 1996. All persons who deserted the military or naval service of the United States and did not return thereto or report themselves to a provost marshal within 60 days after the issuance of the proclamation by the President, dated the 11th day of March, 1865, are deemed to have voluntarily relinquished and forfeited their rights of citizenship, as well as their right to become citizens; and such deserters shall be forever incapable of holding any office of trust or profit under the United States, or of exercising any rights of citizens thereof.

Section 1998 provides:

SEC. 1998. Every person who hereafter deserts the military or naval service of the United States, or who, being duly enrolled, departs the jurisdiction of the district in which he is enrolled, or goes beyond the limits of the United States with intent to avoid any draft into the military or naval service, lawfully ordered, shall be liable to all the penalties and forfeitures of section 1996.

These are the provisions of law which to-day deprive a deserter in the time of peace from both the military and naval branches of the Government from the rights of citizenship. These two statutes which I have read were enacted in 1865, during the Civil War, confessedly as a war measure. I have always maintained since I have been a Member of this House and a member of the Naval Committee that such a drastic penalty was entirely too severe to be imposed upon an American citizen in time of peace.

Now, this is not the only punishment that these young boys receive who in a fit of homesickness or who because of vicious influences are led off the right path or for any other reason desert from the Army or the Navy in the time of peace.

In the War Department, by order of the President, the man who to-day deserts in time of peace may receive a punishment of from one to two and a half years' imprisonment at hard labor, with loss and forfeiture of all pay and a dishonorable discharge from the Army.

It seems to me that from one to two and a half years at hard labor, forfeiture of all pay, and a dishonorable discharge from the Army is a sufficient penalty for desertion in the time of peace.

In the Navy the same young man may receive a sentence from 18 months to 5 years at hard labor for desertion in time of peace and forfeiture of all pay and allowances, except $3 a month for prison expenses, and in addition a dishonorable discharge.

That is the penalty imposed by courts-martial in the Army and Navy, and then comes the law I have read you, imposing an additional penalty of loss of citizenship.

The result is that we have in this country to-day thousands upon thousands of young men of American birth who are literally men without a country, who have lost their right of citizenship by reason of the operation of that harsh Civil War law.

It is time that this matter was looked into and this Government rid its statute books of such a barbarous punishment as that. In the Sixtieth Congress a bill of a similar import passed both branches and was vetoed by the Executive. The reasons assigned were briefly that the bill as it then passed divested the President of some of his pardoning power and applied to only one branch of the military service when it should apply to both, and that the bill in its terms was somewhat confusing.

The committee submit to the House that the bill before it, with the committee amendments, will relieve this measure of all the objections then made by the Executive in the Sixtieth Congress, and that with these objections removed the bill ought to pass.

Mr. MANN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ROBERTS of Massachusetts. Certainly.

Mr. MANN. The bill proposes to amend section 1998 of the Revised Statutes, but, in fact, does not do so.

Mr. ROBERTS of Massachusetts. If the gentleman will pardon me, it amends it by adding a proviso. It reenacts section 1998 with a proviso, and the proviso is what makes the amendment to the section.

Mr. MANN. But the only reference to section 1998 of the Revised Statutes is in the title. Does not the gentleman think the bill ought to read: "Be it enacted, That section 1998 of the Revised Statutes is hereby amended to read as follows"?

Mr. ROBERTS of Massachusetts. I think the suggestion of the gentleman would obviate any opportunity for misconstruction. If the gentleman has it in writing, he can offer it.

Mr. MANN. I have it not in writing; but it is a very simple thing to reduce it to writing.

Mr. ROBERTS of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, it would unquestionably remove any possibility of misunderstanding as to the purport of the bill.

Mr. MANN. As it is now it would be an independent law, and it would not go on the statute books in place of section 1998, which undoubtedly the gentleman wants it to do.

Mr. ROBERTS of Massachusetts. It will be immaterial whether it went in as an independent statute or took the place of one it was replacing.

Mr. MANN. But section 1998 would still remain on the statute books.

Mr. ROBERTS of Massachusetts. With a later law amending it.

Mr. MANN. Not amending it, but changing the law. It would be better, it seems to me, to amend the section, which is what the gentleman wishes to do. I will draft the amendment.

Mr. ROBERTS of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, I will accept that amendment on behalf of the committee, because it does clear up any possible misunderstanding of the purport of the bill.

I would like to say that a prior Secretary of the Navy had recommended in a communication, dated January 11, 1908, the passage of an act which would, to a limited extent, relieve the deserter in time of peace from the extreme harshness of the law. He recognized at that time that there was a penalty that was barbaric in a civilized country in time of peace. The Navy Department to-day, under its present executive, acting through the Assistant Secretary of the Navy, also appreciates the rigors and hardships of this old Civil War penalty and recommends that that feature of the law be eliminated.

The department, however, recommended a different form of bill, which, in the opinion of the committee, did not reach all the cases that should be reached if we are to abolish that old law.

As I stated a moment ago, there are thousands upon thousands of young men in this country who have deserted in time of peace, who have been court-martialed, served their term in prison, forfeited their pay, received their dishonorable discharge, and who are now robbed of citizenship. They are going about, in and out in their communities, day after day, but they are not of the communities. They have none of the rights of citizenship; they can not vote; they can not hold office; and the committee thought that there should be further provision in the bill so that the President, upon application, could restore citizenship in these cases where it had been forfeited prior to the passage of the act and thus restore these young men to their rights as American citizens. That accounts for the change in the form of the bill recommended by the Navy Department.

I will also place in the RECORD a letter from the Acting Secretary of the Navy and General Orders, No. 77, of the War Department:

DEPARTMENT OF THE NAVY,
Washington, February 21, 1912.

HON. ERNEST W. ROBERTS, M. C.,
House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR CONGRESSMAN: I have the honor to acknowledge the receipt of your letter of the 20th instant. In reply you are informed that the limitation to the punishments that can be inflicted in time of peace by a general court-martial sentence are as follows for desertion:

In case of surrender after 30 days: Officer, dismissal; enlisted man, confinement for 18 months and dishonorable discharge.

In case of apprehension: Officer, dismissal and imprisonment for 4 years; enlisted man if less than 6 months in the service, confinement for 18 months and dishonorable discharge; if more than 6 months in the service, confinement for 2½ years and dishonorable discharge.

Desertion from a ship about to sail on an extended cruise: Officer, dismissal and imprisonment for 3 years; enlisted man, confinement for 8 years and dishonorable discharge.

When joined in by two or more men in the execution of a conspiracy, or for desertion in the presence of any unlawful assemblage which the naval forces may be opposing: Officer, dismissal and imprisonment for 5 years; enlisted man, confinement for 5 years and dishonorable discharge.

Loss of all pay and allowances due, or that may become due during confinement, as the case may be, excepting a sum not to exceed $3 a month for prison expenses and a further sum, not to exceed $25, to be paid upon discharge if sentenced to discharge from the service, may be added to any of the foregoing limitations. The confinement may also be at hard labor.

Conviction of desertion, according to law (secs. 1996 and 1998, Rev. Stat.) carries with it the forfeiture of the rights of citizenship and the capacity to hold any office of profit or trust under the United States.

Faithfully, yours,

BEEKMAN WINTHROP,
Acting Secretary of the Navy.

GENERAL ORDERS, NO. 77.

WAR DEPARTMENT,
Washington, June 10, 1911.

I. In connection with General Orders, No. 204, War Department, December 15, 1908; Paragraph II, General Orders, No. 42, War Department, March 15, 1910; and Paragraph II, General Orders, No. 52, War Department, April 22, 1911, the following executive order is published to the Army for the information and guidance of all concerned:

EXECUTIVE ORDER.

The Executive order dated November 25, 1908, establishing limits of punishment for enlisted men of the Army, under act of Congress approved September 27, 1890, which order was published in General Orders, No. 204, War Department, December 15, 1908, and amended by the Executive order dated March 3, 1910, published in General Orders, No. 42, War Department, March 15, 1910, and further amended by the Executive order dated April 14, 1911, published in General Orders, No. 52, War Department, April 22, 1911, is further amended by rescinding Article I and substituting therefor the following:

ARTICLE I.

In all cases of desertion the sentence may include dishonorable discharge and forfeiture of pay and allowances.

Subject to the modifications authorized in section 3 of this article, the limit of the term of confinement (at hard labor) for desertion shall be as follows:

SECTION 1. In case of surrender—

(a) When the deserter surrenders himself after an absence of not more than 30 days, 1 year.

(b) When the surrender is made after an absence of more than 30 days, 18 months.

SEC. 2. In case of apprehension—

(a) When at the time of desertion the deserter shall not have been more than 6 months in the service, 18 months.

(b) When he shall have been more than 6 months in the service, 2½ years.

SEC. 3. The foregoing limitations are subject to modification under the following conditions:

(a) The punishment of a deserter may be increased by 1 year of confinement at hard labor in consideration of each previous conviction of desertion.

(b) The punishment for desertion when joined in by two or more soldiers in the execution of a conspiracy, or for desertion in the presence of an outbreak of Indians or of an unlawful assemblage which the troops may be opposing, shall not exceed dishonorable discharge, forfeiture of all pay and allowances, and confinement at hard labor for 5 years.

This order shall become operative in the United States and contiguous Territories July 1, 1911, and elsewhere within the jurisdiction of the United States August 1, 1911.

WM. H. TAFT.

The WHITE HOUSE, May 26, 1911.

II. 1. By the Executive order of May 26, 1911, published in Paragraph I of this order, the provisions of the Executive order of June 12, 1905, as amended, in respect of maximum punishments in cases of desertion, are revived and made effective in the United States and contiguous Territories on and after July 1, 1911, and elsewhere within the jurisdiction of the United States on and after August 1, 1911. The limits of punishment which these provisions fix are believed to be sufficiently severe for the gravest cases. The graduated scale of punishments they provide is essential to be reestablished in order to avoid the inequality of punishments that has been so marked a feature of sentences of courts-martial for desertion since the uniform limit of three years was established by Executive order of November 25, 1908.

2. It is the purpose of the new and modified order to secure more appropriate sentences in the cases of inexperienced soldiers who desert in the earlier periods of their enlistment contract and in cases of soldiers who surrender themselves from desertion promptly or show a disposition to atone for the offense. It is expected that under the revised order courts-martial will not in this class of cases generally award dishonorable discharge, but will award terms of confinement with forfeiture as a corrective punishment, giving the soldier an opportunity to return to the colors and redeem himself, to the end that the Government shall not be deprived of the services of one who, as the result of such corrective punishment, will probably become a good soldier.

3. The attention of reviewing authorities is particularly invited to the policy of dealing with desertion and deserters announced in this order, the ends of which can be attained only through their cooperation in the review of trials of this offense by courts-martial.

4. Nothing in this order will be construed by anyone concerned as in any way modifying the policy at present being pursued in the matter of the apprehension of deserters, nor should it influence either courts or reviewing authorities to leniency except in the classes of cases referred to in section 2 of this paragraph.

By order of the Secretary of War:

LEONARD WOOD,
Major General, Chief of Staff.

Official:

HENRY P. MCCAIN, Adjutant General.

Mr. Speaker, I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. PADGETT. Mr. Speaker, if there is no further debate, I will ask for the adoption of the committee amendment.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will report the committee amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 1, line 9, after the word "ninety-six," insert the words "of the Revised Statutes of the United States."

Page 2, line 7, after the word "the," insert the words "military or."

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the committee amendments.

The question was taken, and the committee amendments were agreed to.

Mr. ROBERTS of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, I offer the following amendment, which I send to the desk and ask to have read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 1, line 3, at the beginning of the line insert the following: "That section 1998 of the Revised Statutes of the United States be, and the same is hereby, amended to read as follows: Sec. 1998."

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Massachusetts.

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question now is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill as amended.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

The title was amended to read: "A bill amending section 1998 of the Revised Statutes of the United States, and to authorize the President, in certain cases, to mitigate or remit the loss of rights of citizenship imposed by law upon deserters from the military or naval service."

On motion of Mr. PADGETT, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

Mr. PADGETT. Mr. Speaker, that is all the Committee on Naval Affairs desires to call up at the present time.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will call the next committee.

When the Committee on the Public Lands was called—

GRANT OF CERTAIN LANDS, POND CREEK, OKLA.

Mr. FERRIS. Mr. Speaker, I am authorized by the Committee on the Public Lands to call up the bill H. R. 17119.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under the rule the House automatically resolves itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the bill, and the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. HELM] will take the chair.

Accordingly the House resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the bill H. R. 17119, with Mr. HELM in the chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 17119) granting the courthouse reserve at Pond Creek, Okla., to the city of Pond Creek for school and municipal purposes.

Be it enacted, etc., That block No. 43, designated "Courthouse reserve" in the town site of Round Pond, Okla., as appears from the official survey and plat thereof, approved by the Commissioner of the General Land Office on September 14, 1893, be, and the same is hereby, donated and granted to the city of Pond Creek, Okla., for municipal and school purposes, and that the Secretary of the Interior shall issue patent therefor.

Mr. FERRIS. Mr. Chairman, in 1890 Congress opened a section of Oklahoma, and the town of Pond Creek, or Round Pond as it was then called, was designated the county seat of what was then L County. A few years ago by a vote of the people of that county the county seat was removed to another town. That left a block of land there vacant, unoccupied, the title to which is still in the Government of the United States. It is not a large town. It has about 1,000 people who need this block for school and park purposes, and this bill proposes to give it to them. This land is in the district of the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. McGUIRE], who is here, and I yield to him to give any further explanation that he may desire to give.

Mr. McGUIRE of Oklahoma. Mr. Chairman, there is no statement to be made in addition to what has been said by the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. FERRIS], except that the town of Pond Creek has already voted bonds for a schoolhouse there, believing that this land may be obtained for school purposes rather than courthouse purposes. The county seat having been moved to another town in the county, it is now vacant, unused, and the bonds have been voted for a schoolhouse. The bill does not cost the Government anything. Every lot in the town has been given to the residents of that town, and the only thing you do, if you pass this bill, is simply to change the purpose. It is intended for a courthouse, and if you change the purpose it will be used for a schoolhouse. The committee made a report upon this bill, and after receiving a report from the Secretary of the Interior it contained the recommendation that the land revert back to the Government in case it was not used for school-house purposes. The recommendation of the Secretary of the Interior was adopted, and that amendment is placed in the bill. That is all the statement I desire to make, and contains all the facts.

Mr. FERRIS. Mr. Chairman, unless some one who is opposed to the bill desires to speak, I move that the committee amendment be taken up and disposed of.

The CHAIRMAN. If there is no further debate on the bill before the committee, the Clerk will read the bill under the five-minute rule.

The bill was read.

The committee amendment was read, as follows:

On page 1, line 9, after the word "purposes," strike out the words "and that the Secretary of the Interior shall issue patent therefor" and insert in lieu thereof the words "Provided, That the title to said land shall revert to the United States when it is no longer used for school and municipal purposes."

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. FERRIS. Mr. Chairman, I move that the committee do now rise and report the bill as amended favorably.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the committee rose; and Mr. FLOYD of Arkansas having assumed the chair as Speaker pro tempore, Mr. HELM, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that committee had had under consideration the bill H. R. 17119, and had directed him to report the same back with an amendment, with the recommendation that the amendment be agreed to and the bill as amended do pass.

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. FERRIS, his motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

HYDRO-ELECTRIC CO.

Mr. FERRIS. Mr. Speaker, by direction of the Committee on the Public Lands I call up the bill H. R. 12572, and I yield to the gentleman from California [Mr. RAKER] to make a statement.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair will say to the gentleman from Oklahoma that this bill is on the Union Calendar, and automatically the House resolves itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

Mr. FERRIS. I so understand.

Accordingly the House resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the bill H. R. 12572, with Mr. RUSSELL in the chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The House is in Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the bill H. R. 12572, which the Clerk will report.

A bill (H. R. 12572) for the relief of the Hydro-Electric Co. of California.

Whereas the Hydro-Electric Co., a corporation of California, has constructed and is now operating a water-power plant for the generation of electric energy in Mono County, Cal., such electric energy being for use in the operation of its own mining properties and for sale for mining, manufacturing, and domestic purposes in the vicinity, and the water being available for the irrigation of otherwise arid and barren desert land; and

Whereas a small portion, approximately 3,800 feet only, of the water-pipe line of the said project is located upon unpatented land in the northeast quarter of section 14, township 2 north, range 25 east, Mount Diablo meridian, within the Mono National Forest, in California, such unpatented land being treeless, arid and barren, and not susceptible of forestation, and being claimed by said company under the mining laws of the United States: Therefore

Be it enacted, etc., That the said Hydro-Electric Co. is hereby granted a right of way over the said northeast quarter of section 14, township 2 north, range 25 east, Mount Diablo meridian, California, for its said pipe line during the period of its beneficial use only.

Mr. FERRIS. Mr. Chairman, I yield to the gentleman from California [Mr. RAKER] such time as he desires in which to present his bill.

Mr. RAKER. Mr. Chairman—

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I think that the gentleman would desire to have the members of the committee present during this debate, and, therefore, before he makes his speech, I will make the point of order that there is no quorum of the committee present.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] make the point of order that there is no quorum present?

Mr. MANN. I do.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will count. [After counting.] There are 78 Members present, not a quorum, and the Clerk will call the roll.

The roll was called, and the following-named Members failed to answer to their names:

The committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. FLOON of Virginia, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that committee having found itself without a quorum, he had directed the roll to be called, whereupon 251 members, a quorum, had answered to their names, and he returned a list of the absentees.

The SPEAKER. A quorum being present, the committee will resume its session, with the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. FINLEY] in the chair.

The committee resumed its session, with Mr. FINLEY in the chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The House is in Committee of the Whole. The Clerk will report the bill H. R. 12572.

The bill was again read.

Mr. FERRIS. The bill has already been reported.

Mr. Chairman, this bill has received wide publicity and much newspaper advertisement. The bill consists of about four or five lines and does but one thing. It grants to the Hydro-Electric Co. the right of way to lay a water main across one quarter section of worthless land.

I have been at times in this House criticized for taking steps to preserve the public domain, but I have ever tried to exercise my right and use my prerogative in that direction on the committee and elsewhere since I have been here, but it is my opinion that the todo and excitement that has been worked up over this bill is unnecessary and without warrant. I have myself made a careful investigation, and have ascertained from photographs and from statements that can not be successfully contraverted that this pipe line merely crosses one quarter section of land, consisting of 160 acres, and does nothing more.

The land has not a tree on it. The land is worthless. There is no charge here that this company seeks to extort undue charges from those taking water or light from them. There is simply an arbitrary statement to that effect on the part of some people who are overzealous and who are trying to do good, but in their overzealousness they are doing harm to their cause and holding up a company that is trying to irrigate the West.

And I want to say to my colleagues on this side of the House that the company which asks this right of way across this single quarter section of land owns the water right and owns the water, owns the land on both sides of this 160-acre tract, owns the pipe line, there being no competitor, and there is no controversy about that. You can look at this map in front of us. [Indicating.] They own the land on both sides of this quarter section. There can not be one single thing to arouse or excite the American people over this proposition. There is no element of conservation in it. There is no value to conserve. Nothing will be saved if the bill does not pass. No one can be hurt if it does pass. The newspaper advertisement this matter has had is conservation run mad. Such efforts are a detriment to the true cause of conservation, which we are all keenly interested in.

I want to leave one thought with those on this side of the Chamber, and I want to leave the same thought with the gentlemen on the other side of the Chamber—that there has heretofore been expended $60,000,000 in this Republic for irrigation from the reclamation fund; $20,000,000 were from a bond issue. So true is that that to-day the reclamation fund is prostrated and devastated and they have not the money to complete the projects they now have, let alone take up new ones that need attention and construction.

Here is a concern that is willing, on its own responsibility, owning the land, owning the water, owning the pipe line, owning the plant, willing to irrigate themselves independent of the Federal Government. I ask you with what propriety or consistency can the American Congress be thrown into fever heat over the simple proposition of laying a pipe line over 160 acres of land? Simply a right of way; the pipe even is to be covered up, and could do no damage to anyone anywhere under any conditions.

And I again ask this Congress why and with what consistency they can become excited and refuse to allow a concern in the West a right of way across 160 acres of land when that company owns the land on both sides of it and owns the water right, and there is no charge against that company that they are trying to abuse or charge exorbitant prices for the water? This bill ought to pass by unanimous consent. It is a good bill that has been treated badly. Men who have accomplished much good before and men who I respect are overwrought over a very small matter which has no principle of conservation in it. There are too many big matters of genuine conservation in this Republic to spend our energies on to idle away time on the laying of a pipe line across a barren 160 acres of land that never has in the past and never will in the future be used for any purpose. From such conservation no good results can come. From such conservation ardent believers will lose faith in a noble cause. From such conservation we will place the cause beyond the pale of respect. From such conservation we merely save at the spigot, if at all, and lose at the bung.

I assert there is nothing here to conserve, either in principle or value.

Mr. RAKER. Mr. Chairman, the Committee on the Public Lands had this bill under investigation at the extra session, and then continued it until they met in December, 1911, when they made a unanimous report in favor of its passage.

Until the morning of January 5, when this bill was originally called up, there seemed to be no objection whatever to it. Objection was then made to its consideration because it was on the Private Calendar. The following Monday, January 8, a statement was circulated in regard to this bill. The next day, in order to bring the matter clearly before the Members of the House so that they might have an understanding of the conditions, I prepared a written statement and a history of this matter and sent it to each individual Member. Believing that they have read it, I shall not take the time now to read it, but will here insert it in the RECORD as a part of my speech:

STATEMENT AS TO BILL H. R. 12572 RELATING TO RELIEF FOR THE HYDRO-ELECTRIC CO.

This bill (H. R. 12572) for the relief of the Hydro-Electric Co. of California was the subject of a very full and careful hearing before the Public Lands Committee on August 4, 1911, and the committee reported unanimously in favor of its passage. The bill has been pending six months. There has been no haste or concealment. The statements herein made may be verified by referring to the printed report of the committee hearing and to House Document 1424 of the Sixty-first Congress, third session.

SUMMARY OF FACTS.

The Hydro-Electric Co. is a small local corporation organized under the laws of California for the purpose of irrigating lands and operating mines owned by it and its stockholders.

For more than a year it has been generating electric power for that purpose, selling the surplus to other mine owners and operators, and to the towns of Bodie, Aurora, Lucky Boy, and Wonder for illumination.

It has purchased vested water rights which have been used for more than 30 years.

Its dam and all of its pipe line (except about 3,800 feet), as well as its power plant and all its buildings and machinery, are upon patented lands held by it under absolute title. It is not utilizing any water-power site belonging to the Government. It was obliged to purchase and pay for its water-power sites.

The 3,800 feet of its pipe line just referred to cross five mining claims which are claimed to be duly and regularly located by its grantors and are held by the company under the United States mining laws. The report of the master, adverse to these claims, referred to in document 1424, was never confirmed by the court. These mining claims do not cover any land valuable as a water-power site; they lie in a highly mineralized zone adjoining patented claims which have been operated for over 20 years. The lands are absolutely arid; they are rocky, barren, and precipitous, covered by slide shale and volcanic ash. Upon them is no vestige of vegetation, except an occasional bunch of sage, which survives with difficulty. They are admittedly incapable of forestation. Nevertheless, over these claims has been extended a forest reserve from the original forest reserve about 10 miles west of these lands.

Because the company's pipe line must cross this narrow strip of unpatented mining land, the officers of the Bureau of Forestry of the Department of Agriculture consider it to be their duty under the law to compel the company to waive its legal claims and accept instead the same form of revocable permit as it would be required to accept if it were not operating almost wholly upon its own land, but entirely upon forest-reserve lands belonging to the Government.

Another fact strongly in support of the equitable claim of the company for the relief asked in this bill is the fact that over and across the very land described in the bill the company and its grantors have long owned and operated an open ditch for the same purpose as it now seeks to maintain its pipe line. The ditch was constructed and operated 20 years before the lands were included within the reserve. All that is sought by the company is the right to change from an open circuitous ditch, which it admittedly has the right to maintain, to a more direct closed pipe line, to the end that it may avoid evaporation and breaks in the ditch and confine the water, thereby securing greater efficiency from the water conveyed.

It should be distinctly understood also that this change from an open ditch to a closed pipe line has already been consummated. The pipe line is now, and for more than a year has been, completely buried beneath the slide and shale, and the waters therein conveyed are being applied to beneficial uses: irrigation of otherwise arid lands, development and operation of otherwise barren mines, illumination of otherwise poorly lighted towns. Where before there was nothing but a barren desert taxable property has been created. It is to the public interest, I think, to encourage this enterprise.

THE PURPOSE OF THE BILL.

The purpose of the bill and its only effect will be to clear away any legal doubt as to the company's right to the continued maintenance of this pipe line by granting the express sanction of Congress.

NO POSSIBLE DETRIMENT CAN RESULT FROM THE PASSAGE OF THE BILL.

No principle affecting general legislation is in any way involved. No principle of forestry is at stake, and no danger to the administration of the Forestry Bureau is possible, for the reason that the project of the company is located in a treeless desert waste, miles from any forest growth or any land capable of bearing forest, and the right of way to be granted to the company is across a quarter section of land which is not riparian to any stream. No conditions of stream flow or water supply will be affected because the only water used is taken out of a little stream called Mill Creek, just before it empties into Mono Lake, which is an inland "dead sea," of brackish alkaline water that destroys all plant and animal life it touches.

The Government officers report that the company's pipe line lying buried beneath the surface as it crosses this small barren square of desert land will do absolutely no damage to any Government interests. As shown on page 5 of the report of the hearing before the Public Lands Committee, the local forest officers reported as follows. I quote:

"4. Existing improvements, if any. None.
"6. Character of land involved. Open hillside covered with sage-brush strip and rocky.
"8. Should the applicant pay for any timber cut or destroyed?
* * * None will be cut.

"10. What is the purpose of the special use? * * * The greater part of the power will be used by applicants; some may be sold; will be of commercial nature. Water used for power will be turned back to present users for irrigation.

"11. Will the desired special use involve monopoly? No.
"12. State what possible injury might result from granting the desired permit, either to national-forest interests or to the use and enjoyment of the forest by others. None.

"13. What possible complications might arise on account of private land or prior permits granted? None. Right of way over patented land has been secured and right to use water for power purposes purchased.

"15. What is the applicant's reputation and financial standing? Excellent.

"19. Recommendation of examining officer, with reasons therefor: The object of this plant is to furnish power for the mines owned by the company in Bodie and Aurora. It is their intention to generate between 1,000 and 1,300 horsepower. While it is not intended as a commercial venture, some of the power may be sold to other mine owners. The project appears to be for the development of the country, and I am assured by Mr. Cain that it has no connection with any large power company."

Also, as shown on page 41 of the report of the hearing before the committee, the Assistant Solicitor of the Agricultural Department, Mr. Williams, testified as follows:

"Mr. VOLSTEAD. But is the Government going to suffer any damage in any way that would be irreparable?

"Mr. WILLIAMS. No; no individual in the United States will suffer one penny."

This little square is the only land touched at any point by the project to which the Government has any possible claim. If it were owned by a private proprietor this little stretch could be condemned and no jury could well award more than $50 damage. However, no reasonable private owner would make any charge at all. He would be glad to help rather than hinder the enterprise.

WHAT RELIEF IS SOUGHT.

As I have already stated, the purpose of the bill and its only effect will be to clear away any legal doubt as to the company's right to the continued maintenance of its pipe line.

The company claims vested rights to the use of its pipe line as at present located under the mining laws of the United States and also under several different water and right-of-way statutes which have been passed by Congress.

The company claims that it has a right of way and vested easement for its pipe line under the act of Congress approved February 1, 1905, which grants rights of way across forest reserves for mining and municipal purposes. It has admittedly a vested easement for its open ditch under the act of July 26, 1866 (Rev. Stat., secs. 2339 and 2340).

It also claims that the mining laws of the United States clearly authorize the company to construct and to use the pipe line as it has done and is doing, for two reasons:

First, because section 2322 of the Revised Statutes expressly provides that the owner of a valid mining claim is entitled to exclusive use and enjoyment of all of the surface.

Second, because the mining laws authorize such use of mining claims as is consistent with, and reasonable in, the development of the mineral resources of the claim. That has been held true as to the building of roads, trails, tunnels, dwellings, boarding houses, reservoirs, stables, pumping plants, blacksmith shops, commissaries and stores, and even the cutting and removal or destruction of growing timber. In this case the construction of the company's pipe line was for the purpose and with the intent, among other uses, to utilize the electric power to be developed thereby in the exploitation of the very mining claims crossed by the pipe lines.

NECESSITY OF THE RELIEF.

The granting of the relief provided in the bill is necessary, because, as I have before stated, the officers of the Forestry Bureau have considered it to be their duty under the law to compel the company to waive its legal claims and accept the same form of revocable permit as it would be required to accept if it were operating not upon its own lands, but entirely upon forest-reserve lands belonging to the Government. A suit for a permanent injunction against the company has been instituted and is pending in the United States Circuit Court at San Francisco, and in this suit the Government is seeking a final decree perpetually enjoining the maintenance of the company's pipe line across this narrow strip of desert land.

I consider that this litigation is an unjust burden to be borne by this small, isolated company and by the local mining enterprises which are its customers, and that it is wholly unnecessary. In addition to the burden of expense and far outweighing it in importance is the cloud hanging over the company's title and destroying its credit.

While the Government's suit is pending the company has no security of title to the one short link in its right of way which crosses this small square of Government land. Without this one short link, the whole project and the company's valuable water rights, reservoir, pipe line, power house, transmission lines and distributing system, and the mines and mining properties it is operating are practically worthless.

This company at best must operate against heavy odds, located as it is some 60 miles from the nearest railroad, in the midst of a barren desert waste.

I do not think the Government should stand like a stone wall blocking beneficial development of this character. If this plant must shut down, practically every local industry must close.

This bill is not in the interest of the water-power grabbers. It is for this particular individual isolated concern.

Following this statement, I desire to call the attention of the committee to a demonstration of the facts involved in this case by the use of the map that I now have before the House. The top of the map is north, the bottom is south, the right hand is east, and the left hand is west. I want to say to the committee that the map is a fair representation of the condition of that country. I have photographs here in my valise and this map has been drawn from them.

You will notice here, coming from the center of the map down to the southwest, then turning across the blue area, runs a heavy line. That is the exterior boundary line of the Mono National Forest. The land on the east, such of it as is not in private ownership, is open public land. This on the west and south, comprising in the neighborhood of 100,000 acres, is in the Mono National Forest.

This land on the south and over in the east is more level than is the southwesterly part. It is desert sage-brush land without any trees on it, and the land lying on the mountains contains only a few scattered trees, as you will notice, back in these places. There is a little timber upon the lake that is now owned by this company. For miles and miles the land in the national forest is what is known as rough rolling hills, covered with sage brush and rocks, and is practically a desert.

The land marked here as patented, lying between the dotted lines and around what is known as Lundy Lake, is now and has been for more than 30 years in private ownership, the property of the present company and its predecessors. The land on the east of the tract marked in blue, "mining claims," is a tract of mining land upon which for some 30 years there has been a little mill. The land is now in the ownership of this company by mesne conveyances from the original owner. The land east and south of the mining claims marked "patented," upon which is marked a power house, is likewise patented land, owned by the present company. Most of this land has been in private ownership some 25 or 30 years.

Here is Lundy Lake, which is all on the patented land owned by this company. From Lundy Lake is a small stream known as Mill Creek, flowing into Mono Lake on the east. Mono Lake is a dead sea, destructive alike to animal life and to vegetation. The water, as I say, comes from Lundy Lake down Mill Creek into Mono Lake.

Some 30 years ago the predecessors of this company located a ditch, marked here "Old Goleta Power Ditch," which is taken out on the east side of Lundy Lake, crosses the tract of land known as the mining claims, then turns around the hill to the north and west. That side hill is shale, loose soil, and desert sage brush.

And from that ditch they formerly diverted the water, running it over an old-fashioned overhead or an undershot water wheel for the purpose of crushing the rock and other purposes.

The land at the east is in private ownership, a portion of it. The water thus used by the old company was dropped into the ditch and taken out and used by various farmers on this desert land to the east.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RAKER. I will.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Why could not the pipe line be carried around the Government land?

Mr. RAKER. I had not got to that point, but I will answer the gentleman in a moment.

Now, this present company was organized May 11, 1910, and was known as the Hydro-Electric Co. At this power site this company placed machinery which cost in the neighborhood of $250,000. They went and bought this old Goleta water ditch and all conflicting rights in it that had been adjudicated in a case in which a Mr. Miller was the plaintiff, and all the water rights in the old ditch, paying over $35,000 for these rights from the farmers and the miners and the old settlers that owned them.

When they had thus bought the water rights, this land being mineral and highly mineralized and valuable for work, they realized that over a million dollars of money had been taken out of this tract south and east of the power site and north of Mono Lake by placer mining. They realized that over at Bodie 10 years ago there was a town of 15,000 inhabitants. Right across the State line had been another, Aurora, in Nevada, of 12,000 inhabitants. They realized that they were 60 miles from a railroad and in the desert. They realized that from these mining towns so prosperous years ago, Bodie had come down to a town of 500, Aurora to a town of 300, and Lundy, at the lake, to about 150, and Lucky Boy to about 150. They realized that by a process of electricity if they bought the water, the ditches, and the mining land they could develop power by which they could develop these mining tracts, marked in blue, by cheaper and up-to-date methods.

The mining lands in back of here they owned, as well as the intake of the water for the power plant. And by the canal, marked on the plat in red, carried over the desert they could utilize the water that belonged to them for their mines, and they could use the balance for irrigation.

After having bought the land, as I have stated, and I may as well state it fully and completely, in 1910 these claims, marked here in blue, were filed upon by miners, as well as ranchers, living in this territory, and after they had filed upon the mining claims, after they had recorded their notices, before anything was done, for a valuable consideration, these mining claimants sold their claims to this particular company known as the Hydro-Electric Co.

I will state in that connection that they sold them for $4 or $5 a claim. I will come to that matter later, as one of the objections made against the company is that it has bought the claims at a nominal price.

Now, having all the land and all the water required for the development of the mining property, this company dug a ditch, marked here in red, a little above the old Goleta Ditch and laid down a wooden pipe—a redwood pipe—bound with strips of iron about a foot and a half apart, so as to carry their water from the lake to the mining claim, and then from the mining claim, which belongs to the Government, they intended to put in a pressure pipe a foot and a half in diameter and convey it to the power plant marked upon this plan.

That was the condition of this right until along about the last of July, when they had constructed their ditch clear to the blue line—about 500 feet on the Government line—laying the pipe after having bought all of those rights. They were then notified by the Government forest ranger that they must not cross this land marked in blue. They telegraphed to their attorney, and the attorney told them to go ahead and lay the pipe, that under the law, since so declared by the Supreme Court of the United States, the forest rangers had no right to arrest them if they gave bond, and to lay their pipe and protect their property. The forest rangers were advised not to arrest the agents of this corporation, but they immediately filed an ex parte application together with a complaint in court alleging that the Government owned the land and that these people intended to destroy and tear up and injure and damage the Government by crossing this particular tract of desert, sage-brush land. Upon that application the court granted ex parte a restraining order. There were affidavits filed then by the company and a hearing was had before the master in chancery. The master in chancery held that because they bought their mining claims for from $4 to $10 a claim they were fraudulent—in face of the fact that the greatest mine in Nevada to-day was discovered and sold for a few meals, and that has been the history of the development of the West. He also held that because they were going to extend their line to Bodie and to the other towns in Nevada they were doing something they had no right to do. They had the board of supervisors of Mono County call a special session, and they presented their application to the county board of supervisors for a right of way—a public highway along this pipe line—from the upper plant on over to Bodie, a distance of 20 miles. They were planning to construct that highway along the whole length of their transmission line and power line to the end that they might be able to better control their property so it would be in proper shape and proper condition.

The board granted their application and declared a public highway along the electric line to the power house, then on to Lundy Lake; but the master held that because and by reason of the fact that the company were going to construct a public highway 18 miles from Bodie along up the sidehill and farther on up to this point they were of necessity guilty of fraud and of doing something they had no right to do. He held, further, that because from these mining claims they did pick up chunks of gold as large as your fist that there had been no valid discovery of mineral. In that connection I desire to read one of the latest statements by the Appellate Court of the State of California upon the question of a valid discovery, and I will read all of the evidence in that case upon that subject. It is the case of McCleary v. Broadus, in the Fourteenth California Appellate Reports at pages 61 to 67. I will read the following statement of the court from page 64:

Did the said Fisher, in compliance with these requirements of the law, make a valid location of the claim in question? There is evidence in the record that he made the discovery on the 1st day of August, 1905. He testified as follows:

"Q. What was your object and purpose in being there the 1st day of August?—A. I was prospecting."

"Q. I will ask you to state what discovery you made of mineral at that time, if any.—A. I found gold out of the rock, or supposed it to be gold, about the center of the claim."

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. When was that decision rendered?

Mr. RAKER. On the 9th of August, 1910, a little while after I resigned. I decided this case, and the court of appeals affirmed it; so I am somewhat familiar with the questions involved. He further stated:

There was a quartz ledge there; as near as I could trace it, it would be over half the length of the claim.

That is sufficient evidence in the mining States to prove a valid location, and the Appellate Court of California refers to a decision of the Supreme Court of the United States as to location and as to rights to a valid mining claim—a right good as against everybody except the Government—and that if one goes on and spends $100 a year up to five years he owns the claim. I refer to this decision because the master in chancery says that because there was not paying gold found in advance the mining claims were not valid.

As soon as this preliminary injunction, the temporary restraining order, was issued they took the testimony before the master in chancery. I have a copy of that testimony here in my papers, and have read it all over for the purpose of being able to state, and I am now stating, the facts from that sworn statement. The master rendered his decision, holding, first, that the company had no legal rights because of conflicts in the right-of-way statutes—and there are many of them—and, second, that because these people were going to use that electric power for mining purposes, developing their mines, and for irrigation; and because they were to use the surplus to sell, therefore they had no right to cross the land. That is the ruling of the master in this case, although every decision by the courts hold to the contrary.

Mr. SHARP. Mr. Speaker, I wish to ask the gentleman if there is any opposition that comes from private parties or others who own individual claims, mining claims, and so forth, or whether it is from the Government alone?

Mr. RAKER. It is not necessarily from the Government. It is not from any private individuals here in this country. There is a territory lying out there, 60 to 80 miles from civilization, a burning desert, and the people are praying that this Government will give this company relief, that they may work their mines and develop the country, that they may light up the towns of Bodie, Aurora, and Lucky Boy; that they may not only develop the mining claims, but that they may develop this desert land, take the water that comes from the power plant and put it into irrigation ditches and keep it from going into Mono Lake and becoming useless.

Mr. SHARP. Then there is no opposition from the people who live there?

Mr. RAKER. Well, I guess I might as well be plain about the thing here, but I did not want to take up the time. However, I will thrash it out and get the matter fully before the committee. There is no opposition. The testimony before the Committee on the Public Lands shows that the Government would not be injured one dollar. The testimony shows that it is barren desert land. The testimony by the Government officials shows that these people have bought the land, as I have said, and that they have bought the water rights; that this is an old ditch that has been there for years before the Forest Service was ever established, and the attorney for the department says in his testimony that in all the cases before the department there is not one like this that has ever been presented. Why? Private ownership of the land by the company, private ownership of the source of the water by the company, private ownership of the power site by the company, actual user for over 20 years before these forestry people ever attempted to interfere. Why, my dear sirs, if you take the same method and run these privately owned mining ditches, irrigating ditches, around the mountains and the sides of the hills in California, you will develop millions of dollars' worth of property which is now going to waste, and that is what this company is trying to do. I have an article in relation to this matter, dated Washington, February 12. But before I state that I wish to say this: The department was asked this question, Is there any monopoly involved? The answer of the department is, "No." What is the character of the men who are behind this project? The answer of the department is, "Excellent." The question is, will the Government be damaged or will any trees be damaged? The answer is, there are no trees there for destruction and the Government will not lose one cent.

Mr. SHARP. In that connection may I venture the statement that I personally know quite a number of the men who are interested in this project, and I do know that they are men of high standing.

Mr. RAKER. Now, gentlemen, this statement has been made in regard to myself in this connection:

RAKER recently introduced a bill in Congress known as the hydroelectric bill, which involves great water-power rights in the Mono National Forest of this State.

That statement is untrue. Every possible water-power right here involved is already privately owned by this company, and these men desire only to move their ditch a few feet and inclose the water in a pipe. Every decision of the Supreme Court of the United States and every decision of the western courts have held that you may change your place of use of water and your mode of use, so long as you do not injure anything; they move it up the hill two or three hundred feet, and instead of having an open ditch they have a closed pipe.

The general rule is that the change in the place of the use of the water not injurious to any other person can be made at will. (Walnut v. Burke, California (110 Pac., 518); Bates v. Hall, Colorado (98 Pac., 3); Deiz v. Hartbauer, Colorado (105 Pac., 868); Whited v. Cann, Oregon (105 Pac., 396).)

Change of the character of the use or the method of the use that does not affect injuriously the rights of others can be made at will. (McDonald v. Bear River & Auburn Water & Mining Co., California (13 Cal., 220); Butte Table Mountain Co. v. Morgan (19 Cal., 609); Gallagher v. Montecito Valley Water Co. (101 Cal., 202); Robeson v. Wilmoth, Colorado (90 Pac., 95); Power v. Sweitzer, Montana (55 Pac., 523); Columbia Mining v. Holter (1 Mont., 296).)

A mill owner can change his mill from up the stream to down the stream, provided the rights of others are not injuriously affected. (Rood v. Johnson (26 Ver., 64).)

He can also change machinery and character of the use in the mill. (9 N. H., 454.)

He can also change from mining use to power development. In the case of Schwab v. Beam et al., Colorado (19 Morr. Min. Rep., 277), it was held that the change in use from placer mining by washing gravel to generation of power for commercial purposes was valid. The court says at 284:

In this connection it may be observed that washing gravel by hydrostatic pressure from a channel bank or a river is not very far removed from running a stamp mill by water power or running dynamos for making electricity. There is some difference in the machinery and appliances of the several kinds of work, but the power is the same.

I quote again from the same statement that was circulated, as follows:

Pinchot to-day states that RAKER is not acting in good faith, as far as the people are concerned.

Gentlemen, I want to say in response to that that Mr. Pinchot and I are personal friends; that while at the National Irrigation Congress, at Portland, five years ago, when he was attacked by various parties before the committee on resolutions, I was then the first man to come to the Forester's aid in regard to those charges and the first man to stand upon the floor of that Congress and defend him, and succeeded, with the aid of my colleagues, in having a resolution of indorsement adopted by that congress. But I want to say now that of all false statements issued by friend or by foe, that is the falsest ever uttered.

I quote again briefly:

And that the real influences behind the bill are the water-power magnates of the State.

That is another falsehood in toto and absolutely. There is no water-power magnate or monopolist connected with this project; but, to the contrary, the Government officials themselves say there is no monopoly involved. I quote the following from the Government officer's report:

Q. Will the desired project involve monopoly?—A. No.

Q. State what possible injury might result either to the national forest interests or to the use and enjoyment of the forest by others.—A. None.

I have here in my valise over 100 telegrams from judges, lawyers, clerks, and boards of supervisors in my district, and from miners, urging me to stand up, as I ought to do, notwithstanding criticism, and see that this bill is passed.

One of them, after he saw this in the newspaper, wrote to me: "What is the matter with you? Are you beginning to eat out of the department's hands or to fall down on our people in the West when they have such a just cause as this?" I said, "No; not yet; not for a while."

I heard it rumored on the morning of the 19th of February that there were monopolies involved in this matter. I immediately sent the following telegram to the man who is at the head of this institution; and I want to say to you to-day that there is not a finer, more elegant, and more cultured and able lawyer in the State of California than he. His name is William H. Metson. He is representing this institution, and he is one of the large stockholders in it. I would like the Clerk to read the telegram which I sent.

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. FINLEY). The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

FEBRUARY 20, 1912.

W. H. METSON,

Balboa Building, San Francisco, Cal.:

Have just heard it intimated that when the hydro-electric bill comes up for hearing it will be charged on the floor of the House that you are the head of from five to eight water-power enterprises, and that this bill is intended as an entering wedge, and its passage is sought by you in behalf of water-power grabbers and of monopoly. I have always understood the facts to be to the contrary. I want a statement from you of the exact facts and the whole truth as to this charge. Telegram immediately.

JOHN E. RAKER, M. C.

Mr. RAKER. I would like the Clerk also to read Mr. Metson's telegram which he sent me in reply.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

SAN FRANCISCO, CAL., February 20, 1912.

Hon. JNO. E. RAKER,

House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.:

I am not and never have been at the head of any electric or water-power company, not even of Hydro-Electric and its operating company. I am a stockholder in and of counsel for Hydro. I am not and never have, nor has my firm, been the attorney for any of the large electric or power companies, nor for any small ones, except Humboldt Gas & Electric, Humboldt County, wherein I was for a time a small stockholder and attorney. These relations were severed in 1910, when I sold my stock. Further, our firm was also stockholder in Sacramento Valley Power Co., where our firm got from a stockholder about $5,000 in stock as a fee in individual litigation for the stockholder. Later we acted as attorneys, and I as director, for that company, but that relation later terminated by the sale of that company. Outside of that and the Main River, where I advanced a few thousand dollars for a friend of mine, William Miller by name, and in the California-Nevada Mono Lake Irrigation project and application, near Mono Lake. I have had no employment from electric and or water powers, nor has my firm, nor have I any personal investments in such companies, nor do I owe any fealty to any other electric and or water-power corporations than as explained above. Any statements that have been made are untrue if going further than the above. In conclusion, I own no stock in enterprises of that character at all, except in the projects above named in Mono County. We are employed by none and are backing none. The Hydro bill was never thought of by me or my friends as an entering wedge to bring about water or power legislation or in the slightest for water-power grabbers, but was formulated solely to right a wrong. No one can ever truthfully charge me with being a monopolist or affiliating with any trust. I have always been on the other side.

W. H. METSON.

Mr. RAKER. It was stated that Mr. Metson was interested in oil matters. Therefore I send up the following telegrams to the Clerk's desk.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

SAN FRANCISCO, CAL., February 20, 1912.

Hon. JOHN E. RAKER,

House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.:

With reference to my other wire, it is possible that our opponents have mixed me up with Capt. William Matson, of the Matson Navigation Pipe Lines and oil investments, who is quite a heavy investor also in public utility corporations, and that I am credited with some of his investments as well as my own, as our projects are frequently intermixed. Gen. Smith, Marion Devries, of the Customs Court there, and any of the supreme court or Federal judges here would vouch for my integrity and standing. I am also satisfied that any of the banks here would do likewise.

W. H. METSON.

Mr. RAKER. Now, in answer to the question of the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. SHARP] as to the people who will use this water, I want to say that they are heartily in accord with this project. As I stated before receiving the telegrams that I have here, I received from the entire board of supervisors of the county wherein this land is located a telegram urging the passage of the bill.

Mr. MARTIN of South Dakota. Mr. Chairman—

The CHAIRMAN. Will the gentleman from California yield to the gentleman from South Dakota?

Mr. RAKER. Yes; I yield to the gentleman from South Dakota.

Mr. MARTIN of South Dakota. From what the gentleman has stated, I understand that this company is now under at least temporary injunction in the court from proceeding to use that right of way. Is that correct?

Mr. RAKER. I think so.

Mr. MARTIN of South Dakota. On the suit of the United States?

Mr. RAKER. Yes, sir.

Mr. MARTIN of South Dakota. Has that suit come to a final determination?

Mr. RAKER. It has not. It may be 3 to 10 years before it comes to a final determination.

Mr. MARTIN of South Dakota. Does the gentleman, then, consider it good legislative procedure for Congress to be asked to determine the rights of litigants pending the determination of those questions in suits already brought in the courts?

Mr. RAKER. Yes; I certainly do. I will answer that. I have not reached it, but I will answer it as well as I can. In the first place, there are many conditions to be considered. Under the water law that has been in force since 1866 in all the Western States, these people would have the right to go on there and construct the ditch, and could not be stopped by anybody. The next question is as to their mining claims. Under the same law of 1866—the mining law—they would have the same right without regulation. But you must remember that a man can bring you into court with a half million dollars' worth of property and tie you up by litigation, and the people will then refuse to invest further or help you out. They can by litigation practically ruin your enterprise and destroy your property, which would otherwise be of advantage to the Government, the county, and the State, and which might furnish revenue by taxation and turn idleness into beneficial industry.

Mr. MARTIN of South Dakota. If the suggestion of the gentleman is by reason of the inconvenience or the expense of litigation or delays in litigation he ought not, in propriety, to appeal to Congress to determine the question by legislative act.

Mr. RAKER. I would answer by stating that only yesterday we passed a bill with out objection involving matters now in litigation in the courts, and that bill was passed for the very purpose of disposing of that litigation.

Mr. MARTIN of South Dakota. I very much question if all of us knew what we were doing at the time if we did so.

Mr. RAKER. We did do it. I want to say to the gentleman that for years many were the litigations in regard to those who had made their final proof upon the land in cases pending in the Land Office and in the courts, and Congress by one fell swoop authorized and directed the issuance of patents, and thereby threw out of court over 10,000 cases of pestilential litigation.

Now, just one moment more in that connection. Consider this the same as if a private individual were the owner. The Government owns the land. Congress, consisting of the House and Senate, and the President have control of that land. Now, would a private individual hold you up? Would a county hold you up for this claim? Would a State hold you up like a highway robber?

Mr. MARTIN of South Dakota. I hope the Government would not.

Mr. RAKER. Certainly not; and therefore we have appealed to Congress to allow us to let this pipe lie where it is now, securely buried in the ground, with all of the ditches covered up. This is a question which should properly be passed upon by Congress. Section 3, Article IV, of the United States Constitution provides expressly that—

Congress shall have power to dispose of and make all needful rules and regulations respecting the territory or other property of the United States.

As said by the Supreme Court in the case of United States v. Trinidad Coal Co. (137 U. S., 160), "All the public lands of the Nation are held in trust for the people of the whole country." Also as said by the same court in the Fred Light case (220 U. S., 523):

It is not for the courts to say how that trust shall be administered. That is for Congress to determine. * * * Congress establishes a forest reserve for what it decides to be national and public purposes.

In the same way and in the exercise of this same trust it may disestablish a reserve and devote the property to some other national and public purpose.

Mr. MARTIN of South Dakota. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman permit another question?

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from California again yield to the gentleman from South Dakota?

Mr. RAKER. I do.

Mr. MARTIN of South Dakota. As I understand the present law as to right of way over all reservations, it applies to reservations and pipe lines for similar purposes. Is there any reason why a right of way could not have been had before the expenditure of that money, under proper authority, on Government land?

Mr. RAKER. If the gentleman will permit me, I will say that this company bought their claim—their water right; they had the property on the ground; they had the flume here—over four miles; they had the machinery down there, procured with an expenditure of $250,000; and then they were held up with an order to suspend operations, by order of the court.

Mr. MARTIN of South Dakota. May I ask the gentleman if this is in a forest reserve?

Mr. RAKER. Yes; it is in a forest reserve.

Mr. MARTIN of South Dakota. Under the law a right of way can be obtained by proper application for a pipe line over a forest reserve, can it not?

Mr. RAKER. Oh, in this particular case, after the suit had been brought in San Francisco, the district attorney and the attorney for the Department of the Interior and the forest ranger and the attorney for this company met in the district attorney's offices and entered into an agreement that this company should construct its ditch, should lay its pipe line, and go on with its business, and should deposit $75 to answer for any damage that might be done. This corporation then met and authorized its board of directors to sign this agreement. They gave their authorization; the company signed it; and this agreement was signed and sent to the department. When it arrived in Washington the officials said, "We have changed our rules and regulations. Now, what do we want you to do? We want you to abandon your mining claims; we want you to abandon your water right. We want you to expend for us from three to five thousand dollars putting water gauges and weirs over this mountain watershed; we want it made certain that every little official Tom, Dick, and Harry may go in and examine your books." And Heaven only knows what other requirements they have made.

Mr. DIES. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from California yield to the gentleman from Texas?

Mr. RAKER. They granted a temporary injunction when that agreement was signed, because this company would not abandon its claims, which were worth perhaps $100,000 to them. They then shut them down.

Mr. MARTIN of South Dakota. I would like to ask another question of the gentleman.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from California yield to the gentleman from South Dakota?

Mr. RAKER. I will yield to the gentleman from Texas [Mr. DIES].

Mr. DIES. I wanted to ask the gentleman from California if it is not true that the company in whose interest the bill is introduced already possesses an easement over the Government's part of the property for an open ditch for conducting the water, and that all they seek to do now is to have the same sort of an easement for the pipe line, to be conducted underground?

Mr. RAKER. Absolutely. The statement is absolutely correct.

Mr. DIES. Is it not also true that the Assistant Attorney General who testified before the committee said, in answer to a question, that no individual in the United States would suffer from the granting of an easement?

Mr. RAKER. That is true. That is a fact. Now I will yield to the gentleman from South Dakota [Mr. MARTIN].

Mr. MARTIN of South Dakota. I was going to ask the gentleman one further question. I understand that the gentleman concedes that the Secretary of the Interior or the Secretary of Agriculture has authority to grant a permanent right of way over this property?

Mr. RAKER. No, sir. Gentlemen, now listen to this proposition—

Mr. MARTIN of South Dakota. Or the Secretary of Agriculture?

Mr. RAKER. No, none of them; absolutely none. Listen: A man may go into the West and spend a million dollars in developing a water right, putting his mills there, building ditches from 50 to 100 miles, and all the right that the miner can get is a temporary permit, subject to be revoked at the pleasure of the department. That is absolutely true. I have the law here, and the regulations of the Secretary of the Interior and the Secretary of Agriculture.

Mr. MARTIN of South Dakota. I call the attention of the gentleman to the fact that within a year this Congress has passed an act giving a permanent right of way for just such things.

Mr. RAKER. I want to call the attention of the gentleman to the fact that nothing of that kind has been done except as to transmission and telegraph and telephone lines.

Mr. MARTIN of South Dakota. The law previous to that granted rights of way for irrigating ditches.

Mr. RAKER. But I am trying to tell you that after 1866 every man in the West believed that he had a grant. The Supreme Court said it was a grant. Then in 1891 and 1895 and 1898 Congress passed other similar acts. In 1901 it passed another act, in 1905 another, and in 1910 another, and the departments say they are unable to determine which act applies, but they have resolved all against the miner. They have resolved all against those who are trying to improve their property. That is the situation.

Both the Department of the Interior and the Department of Agriculture now hold that this company can not, under the law, be given any legal title to or easement or right of way for their pipe lines. I believe that the departments are clearly wrong in their position on this matter. However, such is their position, and both of these departments absolutely refuse to grant the company any right or to recognize the company as having any right, except under the Forest Service permit act—mind you, I say permit, not right of way, but permit act of February 15, 1901. See volume 31, Statutes at Large, page 790. That act expressly provides as follows—I quote from the act:

And provided further, That any permission given by the Secretary of the Interior under the provisions of this act may be revoked by him or his successor in his discretion, and shall not be held to confer any right, or easement, or interest in, to, or over any public lands, reservation, or park.

Under this law the power of arbitrary revocation rests supreme and unrestrained in the departmental officials, whether such officials act upon their own knowledge and judgment or whether they act upon the advice of some dyspeptic subordinate of less responsibility than a street-corner policeman. Why, gentlemen, no lawyer of any professional standing or integrity would advise any client to invest money upon such a shadowy security of title as is offered by one of these revocable permits. Furthermore, actual experience of investors under these permits has been such as to aggravate and intensify the feeling of insecurity concerning investments made under these permits. These permits have, as a matter of fact, been revoked by the score, arbitrarily, and without any notice or opportunity for hearing or any semblance of due process of law. For example, on March 2, 1909, Secretary Garfield, just before the expiration of his official term, revoked outright the permits of more than 35 different companies operating in the West and by one stroke of the pen destroyed the security of actual investments amounting to probably $50,000,000.

Another instance of perhaps wider publicity, which demonstrates the unreliability of these revocable permits, is that of the city of San Francisco. It was granted a permit for the development of a mountain water supply from the Hetch Hetchy Valley. This permit was granted after a full and careful investigation by Secretary Garfield. Thereafter, upon the strength of that permit, the city invested more than half a million dollars. Notwithstanding these facts, a subsequent Secretary of the Interior issued an order, which is still pending, for the city of San Francisco to show cause why its permit should not be revoked and its investment of a half million dollars practically forfeited, upon the ground that it was a mistake on the part of Secretary Garfield ever to have granted the permit at all.

In none of these cases of revocation which I have cited had there been any neglect or violation of duty charged against the permittees whose permits have been revoked. The action has always been taken arbitrarily by the public officials, according to their own personal whims and individual ideas or conceptions of propriety.

Mr. PICKETT. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RAKER. Yes.

Mr. PICKETT. Relative to the question which the gentleman from South Dakota [Mr. MARTIN] asked as to the propriety of asking for congressional relief while there was a suit pending, I will ask the gentleman if it was not stated several times in the hearing before the committee by the attorney representing the company that all the company desired was to be permitted to remain undisturbed until this litigation was adjudicated in the courts.

Mr. RAKER. The gentleman has the report of the hearing, has he?

Mr. PICKETT. Yes.

Mr. RAKER. Will the gentleman read it?

Mr. PICKETT. Did not the gentleman in the course of the hearing also say the same thing?

Mr. RAKER. Read what I said. That is the best way. I can not remember everything.

Mr. PICKETT. The gentleman was speaking before the committee, and the chairman asked:

Why would not the issue of a permit pending this litigation be satisfactory?

Mr. RAKER. It would.

I follow that with the further question if the committee did not appoint a subcommittee for the purpose of seeing the department, and if as a result of that action a stipulation was not entered into, the substance of which is to permit them to occupy this ground pending the adjudication of this litigation?

Mr. RAKER. A subcommittee was appointed to see the Secretary of Agriculture and the Secretary of the Interior, but they got no result from them.

Mr. PICKETT. Is it not a fact that the stipulation has been entered into?

Mr. RAKER. Just a moment. Let me finish. The committee then requested me to go down. I saw the Secretary of Agriculture two or three times personally—

Mr. PICKETT. I am speaking of the stipulation entered into by the Department of Justice.

Mr. RAKER. Let me finish. I can not tell it all in one breath. They then told me that they had no power or jurisdiction over this case. I then went to the Attorney General's office, and what has been actually done since I am not able to state, as to the present condition.

Mr. PICKETT. When the time comes I will insert the stipulation in the Record.

Mr. RAKER. Very well.

Mr. PICKETT. You spoke of the permit in such a way as to leave the impression that the Government had actually issued a permit.

Mr. RAKER. I said a temporary permit.

Mr. PICKETT. I will ask the gentleman if that did not bear on its face the fact that it was necessary to be approved by the Department of Agriculture?

Mr. RAKER. Why, yes; I am telling you that the Department of Agriculture was to sign the stipulation, but when it came back here they said they had drawn a new set of rules and authorizations, and they included these new conditions that were not included in the first agreement.

Mr. PICKETT. And the one referred to was never approved by the Secretary of Agriculture and never was operative?

Mr. RAKER. No; because they went back on the first agreement, the one that was signed by the officials.

Mr. CANNON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RAKER. Certainly.

Mr. CANNON. If I understand the gentleman, this company owns all this land here that I indicate on the map, and if the water runs down in this easterly direction it runs into the salt lake?

Mr. RAKER. Yes.

Mr. CANNON. There is a small strip of land here where the company has an open ditch?

Mr. RAKER. Yes; 3,800 feet long.

Mr. CANNON. And you have the right to have it open?

Mr. RAKER. Yes; and have had for 30 years.

Mr. CANNON. You now have a pipe instead of an open ditch which runs along above the open ditch and is covered up?

Mr. RAKER. Yes.

Mr. CANNON. And the question is whether you have got to take that pipe out?

Mr. RAKER. Yes; and ruin our business worth $500,000.

Mr. CANNON. Take the pipe out and put the open ditch in, or abandon it if it does not suit your purpose. Is anybody interested in land on the other side?

Mr. RAKER. Absolutely all the rights have been bought up and are owned by this company; all the waters involved in this lake and the creek from it.

Mr. CANNON. If the gentleman is correct and it was a private individual who insisted on your keeping an open ditch instead of a pipe line, I should say that he was a contentious fellow. [Laughter and applause.]

Mr. RAKER. Now, I want to tell you gentleman my experience 30 years ago as a boy in water litigation. I rode up to an adjoining town and heard that three men had been killed on the ditch. The first proprietor had gone on the stream and appropriated the water 10 years before and had used it for 10 years. Subsequently a man came in, got title to the land over which the ditch crossed, and he laid silently by until he got his patent, and then when the spring came and they wanted to dig out the ditch he came and sat down and said, "Don't you go on that ditch." They went on the ditch, but they took their shotguns and Henry rifles.

The other fellows came out with their guns and told them to get off. The result was that all three on one side were killed. That has been the history of the West for 40 years, and we are trying to adjust these matters by virtue of the consent of corporations and individuals. But here we find that we have the Government of the United States trying to hold up the corporation simply because it is a corporation. It has got the power to put it in court and hold it there for years, and thereby ruin the corporation rather than let it cross this small tract of land.

Mr. MADDEN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RAKER. I will yield to the gentleman.

Mr. MADDEN. If this bill is enacted into law, it will set the injunction aside?

Mr. RAKER. Absolutely.

Mr. MADDEN. Does the gentleman think that is good legislation?

Mr. RAKER. Absolutely.

Mr. MADDEN. Is there not a prospect that the company could get a temporary permit pending the legislation?

Mr. RAKER. I do not know.

Mr. MADDEN. Has there been any suggestion for a temporary permit to be granted pending the litigation?

Mr. RAKER. As I said to the gentleman from Iowa, there was some arrangement after this matter was reported.

Mr. MADDEN. If such an arrangement can be had, does not the gentleman think it is unwise to try to pass this bill and set aside the injunction?

Mr. RAKER. No, sir.

Mr. HAYES. Will the gentleman yield to me for a moment?

Mr. RAKER. I yield to the gentleman from California.

Mr. HAYES. I will say that no such permit is possible unless this company gives up all their rights. Permits have been refused.

Mr. PICKETT. Why, Mr. Chairman, I hold in my hand a stipulation entered into between the Department of Justice and this company.

Mr. HAYES. Yes; and as I understand that stipulation, they are obliged to give up their rights to that property and take it as though it was a part of the public domain.

Mr. PICKETT. It simply holds the matter in statu quo, I will say to the gentleman; and if there ever was a case of absolute bad faith on the part of anybody coming before this House, I will prove from the Record before we get through with it, it is the case of the representatives of this company now asking for equitable relief.

Mr. RAKER. Mr. Chairman, I will say in answer to the gentleman, understanding water rights and the conditions there, that he will be unable to show anything against this company and against its methods or anything against the justice of this claim, or that these people ought not to have the right of passage.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. RAKER. Mr. Chairman, I would like to have 15 minutes more in which to finish one other matter, and then I will be through.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman have 15 minutes more.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. Mr. Chairman, before the gentleman proceeds, will he yield to me for a moment?

Mr. RAKER. Yes.

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. Mr. Chairman, I regret to say that I was not here when the gentleman commenced his argument, but I want to ask this question: Who is going to be injured if this permit is granted?

Mr. RAKER. No one; absolutely no one.

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. Who is to be benefited by holding it up?

Mr. RAKER. No one. No one is benefited by holding it up. It is a question of the department objecting. Of course, they have objected, and they believe that they must continue in order to hold their jobs.

Mr. BUTLER. Why is it held up?

Mr. RAKER. Has the gentleman read the report of the master?

Mr. BUTLER. No; I have not.

Mr. KENDALL. This is simply litigation instituted by the Government of the United States to determine the questions involved in this legislation that is proposed now. That is true, is it not?

Mr. RAKER. Yes.

Mr. LENROOT. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RAKER. I yield to the gentleman.

Mr. LENROOT. Has the gentleman from California not seen or read a copy of the stipulation that has been entered into between the Government and the Hydro-Electric Co. for the use of this pipe line until the final ending of the litigation?

Mr. RAKER. When the stipulation was in process of formation I was at the Attorney General's office. Since it has been completed, whatever it might be in its final completion, I have not seen it.

Mr. LENROOT. Has the gentleman made any effort to ascertain that important fact?

Mr. RAKER. It was not necessary. They do not intend to let us have this until it is disposed of by the various courts, right clean up to the Supreme Court of the United States.

Mr. LENROOT. Does not the gentleman think that this committee is interested in knowing what that stipulation was?

Mr. RAKER. I think the gentleman has a copy of it in his pocket, has he not?

Mr. LENROOT. I have one in my desk, and I think the gentleman ought to be familiar with it.

Mr. BUTLER. Is it signed?

Mr. HAYES. It never has been signed. There is no stipulation in this case.

Mr. McCALL. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. RAKER. I yield to the gentleman from Massachusetts.

Mr. McCALL. I would like to ask whether it has not been proposed to this company that they might exercise this easement for a certain fixed sum of money?

Mr. RAKER. Well, that was not objected to, that one feature.

Mr. McCALL. How much was that amount?

Mr. RAKER. I think they got an arrangement of about ten or twelve dollars a year.

Mr. HAYES. Seventy-five dollars a month?

Mr. RAKER. No; that was strictly temporary; that was to go in the contingent fund.

Mr. McCALL. Does not the gentleman think, as we are granting here by bill a right of way over property of the Government, that we should not give that away without providing for the payment of something?

Mr. RAKER. Not in matters of this kind; and I will say in answer to the gentleman from Massachusetts that since 1806 there are 100,000 ditches in the West that have a grant of their right of way without paying one dollar. I want to say to the gentleman from Massachusetts that California in 1910 adopted a constitutional amendment and that the legislature in 1911 passed an act—a public utilities act—by which every individual or corporation or association that is engaged in the delivery of electric power or water must have their property valued by the State board, and they can only charge the amount that the State of California directs. Now, do you want the State to collect one toll, with the full power to do it, and then just because these people have gone out here in this desert and asked to cross and use what is really theirs in law that they should pay another toll?

Mr. McCALL. But the State would not be receiving toll, would they, if we made a distinct grant in the terms of this bill?

Mr. RAKER. That corporation under the State law and under the constitution will have its physical property valued. The board will first determine what they can charge per kilowatt, and they will not be permitted to sell one kilowatt contrary to the regulations of that board without being subject to having their charter forfeited, and they also pay to the State of California a tax for being a corporation. Do you want to put them under more penalties? Is there any stronger law against monopoly? Could there be any more stringent provision than that a board of five should physically value their property and fix the prices which they may charge?

Mr. MADDEN. Does not the propriety of Congress setting aside an order of the court enter into the consideration of this question?

Mr. RAKER. The Government can do as it pleases with its lands, and that power is retained in the Congress. As I before stated, the Federal Constitution expressly gives to Congress full power over the public lands and reservations. Just look, also, at the cases pending in all the States. Many an act has been passed to repeal a certain law changing the rights of property; many an act has been repealed by which men have been actually convicted of crime, and they have been turned loose because the judgment had not become final. Private individuals get into litigation, and subsequently make amicable settlements. And over the public land Congress has all the powers that an individual has over his property, and Congress should certainly be equally willing to effect any fair, amicable adjustment settling litigation.

Mr. MADDEN. Why did not these people act under the provisions that now exist instead of coming to Congress and asking Congress to set aside an order of the court?

Mr. RAKER. I have already answered that by pointing out that the present departmental regulations would allow the company only a bare revocable license—a mere permit. No security of title at all for their property and their investment. We have been here before Congress for some time, and last year we passed a resolution calling for this information, and it was obtained and is now printed in House Document 1424 of the Sixty-first Congress, third session. These people living in my district presented the bill, and it seemed to me as a Representative of that district, representing men interested, representing the development of the country, being in favor of turning these many thousands of acres of desert lands into valuable lands, being in favor of opening up these mineral lands in the development of this country, it seemed to me I would have been a poor Representative, it seemed to me I would have failed in every representative duty had I not presented this bill and urged upon this House the necessity and the right and the justice of passing this legislation.

Furthermore, I know of no company operating in the Western States that is situated as is this company. No general law nor any regulations which are in existence or which could be devised or enacted would be properly applicable to this case. Such laws or regulations would necessarily have in mind the protection of water-power sites, dam sites, or reservoir sites or other similar property of value to the Government. In this present case there is no such property belonging to the Government. The company owns under absolute title its reservoir site, its dam site, and its water-power site. All these the company has purchased and paid for. It owns also all of the ground crossed by its pipe line except less than 2 acres across these mining claims. You can figure it up, and you will find that even a 20-foot right of way across these 3,800 linear feet will cover actually less than 2 acres. This land is absolutely valueless. And even across this land the company and its predecessors in title have owned for more than 30 years a vested easement for an open water ditch. The company's title to this old ditch can not be denied. All that this company has done, and all that it asks the sanction of Congress for having done, upon Government land is simply that it has changed this old, open, wasteful water ditch into a less circuitous closed pipe line, which it has buried beneath the surface of the desert. It has changed less than 2 acres of open water ditch into a buried pipe line which occupies actually less than 2 acres of desert land. There is no other company similarly situated. In this regard I quote from the testimony of Mr. Williams, the assistant solicitor of the Agricultural Department, given before the committee:

Mr. MONDELL. Then, it is a fact that no one similarly situated to these people is required to sign these stipulations?

Mr. WILLIAMS. Not similarly situated, because they have been the only ones.

Now, Mr. Chairman, at this point, before I proceed further, I wish to correct some statements which I fear I have made in response to questions which were asked me a few moments ago by the gentleman from South Dakota [Mr. MARTIN], by the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. PICKETT], by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MADDEN], by the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. LENROOT], and by my colleague, Mr. HAYES, of California. I find that I have here a copy of the stipulation which was evidently referred to, particularly by the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. LENROOT] and the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. PICKETT]. I will say to the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. LENROOT] that I have made, I believe, every effort within reason to ascertain every important fact bearing upon this case. I would say also to the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. PICKETT] that if the stipulation which I now have before me is in fact the stipulation drawn by the Department of Justice to which he refers, and I think probably it is, then I do not wish that the reply which I made to his question shall stand in the record as my answer. I wish to beg the gentleman's pardon. At the moment, during the heat of debate, my mind did not recall the fact that this stipulation which I have here had been agreed to.

The stipulation, which was prepared by the Department of Justice as the result of the committee's action and of my own efforts before the department, was transmitted to me during the recess of Congress last September. I will ask that it be printed in the RECORD following the close of my remarks and that it be marked "Exhibit A" in the RECORD so that it may be more easily identified. I remember now that this stipulation was agreed to by both parties to the suit and was filed in court.

I wish to say also that this stipulation answers completely the question of the gentleman from South Dakota [Mr. MARTIN] regarding the company being now under a temporary injunction in the court from proceeding to use the right of way. This stipulation was filed with the court in October, 1911, and since that time there has been no injunction or restraining order in force against the company. The case is now simply the ordinary case of a suit by the Government in which a permanent injunction is being sought against the company. If the Government should ultimately succeed in its present suit the result would be that the company must then either tear up this short link of its pipe line and thereby destroy the value of all of its property and shut down the mines on its own ground as well as the mines at Bodie, Cal., and Aurora and Lucky Boy, Nev., or else the company must, as its only alternative, throw itself upon the mercy of the departments which have been fighting it and, as I have before stated, those departments hold that under the law the company could be granted no other security than that of a bare revocable license which might be abrogated at will. Furthermore, the departments claim for themselves also the power of unrestrained liberty and discretion either to grant or to refuse to grant this company even the temporary revocable permit which they prescribe.

In response to the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. PICKETT] and also to the gentleman from South Dakota [Mr. MARTIN] I wish to say also that to my mind there can be no question as to the propriety of Congress, as the proprietor of the public lands and the guardian of the public interests involved, withdrawing the present suit of the Government and quieting the company's title to its right of way covering 2 acres of worthless desert land. It would be the duty of an individual proprietor, and I hold it to be the duty of Congress in its capacity of proprietor of this land, to settle fairly and sanely and justly this vexatious litigation, which is now clouding the title of, and jeopardizing the legitimate investment in, this power plant and in the mining properties in the several important adjoining mining camps which are dependent upon this company. It is true that when the hearing was had before the committee last August the company then asked only for special relief as an emergency measure. At that time the caucus rule of the special session of Congress forbade any other legislation of this character except that required by some special emergency. At that time there was a temporary restraining order in force against the company under which the Forestry Service officials were attempting to force the company to tear up its pipe line immediately without giving it the opportunity of even a fair hearing before the court. No evidence had been taken except the preliminary hearing before the master in chancery and the company then asked, as a special emergency measure of relief only, that the company be relieved from the threats of immediate destruction which were being made against it by the Forest Service officials.

However, there has been no subterfuge or concealment or misrepresentation in this matter either by the company or by myself. At the regular session, the present session of Congress, when the matter was again taken up before the committee on December 19 and 20, 1911, it was then plainly stated before the committee that the stipulation which will appear in the RECORD as "Exhibit A" had been filed with the court; that there was no longer any temporary restraining order in force against the company, nor any danger of immediate destruction of its property. The company then asked to be relieved from the pending suit which still involves the possible granting of a permanent injunction. This was understood by the committee clearly, and with that understanding the committee voted to report the bill favorably for passage.

In order to set the matter fully and fairly before this House in its every detail, I wish to give a very brief chronological synopsis showing the various stages in the development of the controversy and referring, where possible, to the particular pages of House Document 1424 of the Sixty-first Congress, third session. In that document will be found printed all of the correspondence up to the 4th of March, 1911.

Summer of 1909, up to and including the early summer of 1910, the representatives of the proposed company, which was not yet organized, made preliminary plans and purchased from private owners all of the property touched in any way by the project except the 3,800 linear feet of pipe line described in the present bill, and purchased also all water rights and the old Goleta ditch, which crosses this same land.

Spring of 1910, local residents familiar with mining operations and local conditions located 20 or 21 mining claims along the mineral ledge, which crosses the land described in the present bill. These claims join the old patented mining property, now belonging to the Hydro-Electric Co., upon the north and extend along the outcroppings southerly. Of these claims only five are crossed by the pipe line, although the corner of a sixth one is touched by the pipe line.

Spring of 1910, company purchased all these mining claims.

July, 1910, construction of dam, pipe line, and power house begun.

August 3, 1910, pipe line constructed over company's patented land and over several hundred feet of the land described in the present bill. At this time the ditch was completely excavated throughout its entire length.

August 3, 1910, forest officers stopped the work and threatened arrest of workmen.

August 10, 1910, Government suit filed and temporary restraining order secured ex parte upon affidavit.

September 6-10, 1910, hearing before master in chancery on order to show cause why the temporary restraining order should not be continued and an injunction pendente lite issued.

October 17, 1910, master renders report adverse to company. This report was never confirmed by the court.

November 12, 1910, district forestry office at San Francisco telegraphs to the Forester at Washington suggesting such temporary agreement as would permit continuance of construction work without jeopardizing the pending suit of the Government. (See telegram, p. 68, H. Doc. 1424; also letter on same page.)

November 14, 1910, Forester at Washington authorizes and directs such temporary agreement as is described in the telegram on page 68 of House Document 1424. (See p. 67, H. Doc. 1424.)

November 17, 1910, temporary agreement permitting construction work was drawn in compliance with Forester's direction and was executed and acknowledged by company and approved by board of directors. (See pp. 65, 66, 67, H. Doc. 1424.)

With this agreement the company continued always to comply faithfully. Upon the strength of this agreement, as directed by the Forester's telegram, the company consented, in open court, to withdraw its objections and exceptions to the master's report and to consent voluntarily to the issuance of an injunction pendente lite.

November 18, 1910, company consents in court to issuance of injunction pendente lite in accordance with its agreement. (See two telegrams, p. 64, H. Doc. 1424.)

November 23, 1910, Forester issues temporary permit in accordance with agreement. (See letter to Messrs. Copp, Luckett & Pierce, the company's attorneys, p. 61, H. Doc. 1424.)

November 26, 1910, Forester sends out notice to the district forester that the permit issued on November 23, while unconditional in form, would be revoked unless a new stipulation and agreement more onerous than that signed by the company on November 17, 1910 (see pp. 65, 66, 67, H. Doc. 1424), should be agreed to by the company before December 30, 1910. This more onerous stipulation appears on pages 57, 58, 59, 60, and the upper half of page 61, House Document 1424. This notice was not formally served upon the company until December 30, 1910. (See first paragraph of letter to district forester, p. 53, H. Doc. 1424.)

December 29, 1910 (one day before formal service of Forester's demands), company requests certain modifications of the proposed more onerous agreement. (See pp. 56, 57, H. Doc. 1424.)

January 1, 1911, projects completed and electric current turned on wires.

January 21, 1911, Forester refuses to modify objectionable stipulation or agreement. (See pp. 53, 54, H. Doc. 1424.)

February 10, 1911, company's attorney appears personally before Forester in Washington, requesting reconsideration and the granting of the modifications requested. Request is summarily refused, with remark that the company can "fish, cut bait, or swim ashore." (See paragraph at top of p. 48, H. Doc. 1424.)

February 13, 1911, company appeals to the Secretary of Agriculture from the Forester's refusal to modify objectionable agreement. (See pp. 47, 48, 49, 50, 51, H. Doc. 1424.)

February 15, 1911, Secretary denies company's appeal. (See pp. 46 and 47, H. Doc. 1424.) The company's attorney states—and it is uncontradicted—that the appeal of February 13 was not mailed until after midnight of that day, and could not have reached any official's desk for consideration earlier than 11 o'clock of February 14, and that within 24 hours thereafter, namely, before 11 o'clock of February 15, he had received definite word of the rejection of the appeal by the Secretary. (See speech of Hon. W. F. Englebright, printed in RECORD of Mar. 5, 1911.)

February 17, 1911, Congressman Englebright introduces resolution of inquiry (H. Res. 980).

March 2, 1911, resolution adopted.

March 4, 1911, House document 1424 transmitted.

April 12, 1911, United States district attorney notifies company's attorneys by letter, as follows:

UNITED STATES V. HYDRO-ELECTRIC POWER CO.

APRIL 12, 1911.

MESSRS. CAMPBELL, METSON, DREW, OATMAN & MACKENZIE,
San Francisco.

GENTLEMEN: I am in receipt of a letter from the Attorney General instructing me to inform you, as counsel for the Hydro-Electric Power Co., that the injunction heretofore issued in the above-entitled case will be enforced against the company and its agents according to its terms, and that you will be allowed a reasonable time, not exceeding 60 days, within which to restore its exceptions to the master's report and to present to the court such contentions as you may care to make against the continuance of the injunction throughout the litigation.

It is stated to be the desire of the Department of Justice that this litigation should be proceeded with vigorously, so that a conclusion may be reached as soon as possible. The department refuses to allow any permit, except a general permit in the usual form required by the practice and regulations of the department governing such matters.

Yours, very truly,

ROBT. T. DEVLIN,
United States Attorney.

This action restored the company to statu quo as of November 17, 1910—that is to say, to the same position before the court as it occupied before it had acted in accordance with the Forester's telegram of November 14. The Department of Justice, in taking this action, recognized that the company had acted in good faith upon the agreement drawn November 17, 1910, in accordance with the Forester's instructions of November 14, 1910, and that the action of the Forest Service in abrogating that agreement, as it did by letter of November 26, 1910, had made it necessary for the Government, in fairness to the company, to replace the company in the same position as it had occupied before it had acted upon faith and reliance in the Forester's telegram.

April 12, 1911, the order, given on this date, just referred to above placed the company back under the force of a temporary injunction. However, the company had, in reliance upon the agreement of November 17 and the permit issued November 23, 1911, invested its money and completely constructed its plant. Therefore the Forestry Service officials, who subsequent to April 12, 1911, attempted to enforce the temporary restraining order of the court against the use of the company's pipe line thereby—that is to say, by attempting, as they did, to enforce the temporary restraining order—were attempting to force the company, before any final hearing could be had, to tear up its pipe line, which it had constructed according to the agreement of November 17, 1910.

July 15, 1911, on account of the circumstances above outlined, I introduced the present bill granting the company a right of way.

August 4, 1911, three hours' hearing was had on the bill before the Public Lands Committee. The committee voted unanimously to grant the company at that time the following relief as an emergency measure, namely, it appointed a subcommittee to request of the Department of Agriculture that that department discontinue its attempts to force the company to tear up its pipe line pending litigation. This the department refused to do, but referred me personally, after the subcommittee had exhausted its efforts, to the Department of Justice.

September, 1911. During this month, after adjournment of Congress, the Department of Justice submitted the stipulation which follows my remarks under the designation "Exhibit A."

October, 1911, the stipulation was executed and filed. There been no temporary restraining order, nor any injunction or other order of court against the company. However, the suit for permanent injunction is still pending by which the Government seeks to obtain a final order of court forcing the company to tear up its pipe line.

December 19 and 20, 1911, hearing on the bill before Public Lands Committee.

December 20, 1911, unanimous report of the committee in favor of the bill.

January 5, 1912, bill ordered removed from Private Calendar and placed on House Union Calendar.

In view of this prolonged fight, and in view of the wide publicity which has been given to this case, and in view of the bitterly contentious attitude which the department is so widely known to have taken against the company, there is a general public feeling of distrust as to the security of the company's title and as to the outcome of the case in the courts. Also there is, unfortunately, a very widespread belief that if the company should by any chance be defeated in the litigation the department would, by reason of the strong personal prejudices which have been aroused among its officials, be inclined to continually harass the company thereafter. All of these considerations and all of these circumstances tend now and will continue to have a strong tendency to unsettle business conditions in all of the mining camps dependent upon this company, to discourage legitimate mineral development and the opening up of new mines, and to hamper and interfere with the financial support and the operations of the company. I can see no reason why the Government, through this Congress, should practice such odious and utterly useless tactics. I believe that the Government should grant this right of way and thereby encourage legitimate industry. Merely from those considerations of reasonable fairness and equity which should prompt any private proprietor, this company should be granted its right of way by this Congress.

Mr. HAYES. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RAKER. I yield to my colleague from California.

Mr. HAYES. I thought the gentleman had finished.

Mr. RAKER. I want to finish this on the question of conservation, so that I may conclude. While in my campaign in 1910 I found my people were against conservation, frequently because of the method and the manner of using the forest reserves. I took the position that the Forestry Department of the Government had taken a stand that was right and that we should maintain these reserves; that we should conduct them in a proper method and in a proper manner. And in a public platform, of which I sent out tens of thousands, I made the following statements:

I am in favor of conservation of our natural national and State resources, and a progressive upbuilding policy, honestly and economically enforced—that we control our natural resources and use them now, in the present—but still control them so that the future use of them will be saved for the people of this Nation. Keep them from the hands of the few.

That was my statement then; that is my belief now and my position.

Let me read you another article now by the greatest conservationist in the land, as well as the greatest progressive—a man whom these progressives are pretending to follow. This article is from La Follette's Weekly Magazine of February 17, 1912, and is as follows:

WISE USE; NOT FOOLISH DISUSE.

True conservation consists not in hoarding our resources, but in using them properly. Our water powers running night and day from year to year without turning a wheel are of no value to the public. To permit the mature trees of our forests to rot in waste is not conservation. To deny to this generation the advantage of the proper development of our coal fields and other mineral wealth is to deny to them participation in the benefits which rightly belong to them. The problem before us is not to hoard our resources, but to develop them in such a way that the benefits flowing from development will inure not to a few men, but to the rightful owners—all the people of the United States.

My language is a little stronger and a little better than the language of the great conservationist and progressive, Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I made my statement two years ago and he made his a week ago.

Use what you have to-day. Do not let the water run to waste. Use the mature trees, and do not let them die and decay or be burned up. Use your mineral resources now instead of letting them lie in the ground unhunted, unsought, and undeveloped. That is all we ask for, and I again appeal to this committee to look to this map as a speaking illustration of what we are asking here to-day, and as demonstrating to you the value of the Government's property that will be involved.

I want to ask you that if you owned this barren, treeless, desert waste, 60 miles from a railroad or from civilization, would you want to stop the development of an enterprise of this kind? Why, every man would say "no."

Mr. Chairman, I have another statement here that I want to have printed in the RECORD as Exhibit B, following the close of my remarks. It is a letter from James F. Farraher, written under date of January 17, 1912. He is one of the ablest lawyers in the State of California. The letter will follow later, marked "Exhibit B."

I also wish to submit a copy of an amendment to the constitution and a copy of the public-utilities bill of the State of California covering this subject, to show that the State government and not the Federal Government is regulating these matters. These will follow later as Exhibits C and D, respectively. I want to submit one other matter.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. RAKER. Mr. Chairman, I would like just one minute in order to put this document in the RECORD.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman have two minutes more.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. RAKER. I wish to submit in the RECORD a memorandum showing the various right-of-way statutes passed by Congress and the decisions of the various courts, showing the rights of this company to this land. In addition to the memorandum I have had collected and copied verbatim several of the conflicting right-of-way statutes now in force. The verbatim copies of statutes I will append for purposes of reference as Exhibit E. The memorandum concerning this company's rights here follows:

RIGHT-OF-WAY STATUTES.

Memorandum concerning the hydro-electric bill (H. R. 12572).

The Hydro-Electric Co. should never have been required to come to Congress for relief in this case. They are entitled to the right of way as a matter of plain legal right under the general laws which have been enacted by Congress.

ACT OF 1866.

As early as 1866 Congress passed a general right-of-way act granting rights of way for ditches and canals for the beneficial use of water for mining, agricultural, manufacturing, and other like purposes. The original act was passed July 26, 1866 (14 Stat. L., 253), and is entitled "An act granting the right of way to ditch and canal owners over the public lands, and for other purposes." Section 9 of the act, since embodied in the Revised Statutes as section 2339, provided:

"Whenever by priority of possession, rights to the use of water for mining, agricultural, manufacturing, or other purposes have vested and accrued and the same are recognized and acknowledged by the local customs, laws, and decisions of courts, the possessors and owners of such vested rights shall be maintained and protected in the same, and the right of way for the construction of ditches and canals for the purposes herein specified is acknowledged and confirmed."

This act is still the law. It has never been repealed or modified by Congress, and that the Hydro-Electric Co. is entitled to its right of way under the terms of this statute is established by the admitted facts of the case. It has been conclusively established, as shown by the printed report of the hearing on this bill before the Public Lands Committee, that the Hydro-Electric Co. is the owner of the water which it uses by virtue of more than 20 years of priority of possession and actual use by itself and its predecessors in interest. It was shown at the hearing, and is admitted by the Government officers, that the company is using this water for mining, milling, and the reduction of ores, and for agricultural purposes in the irrigation of otherwise arid land, just as prescribed by the statute. It comes, therefore, clearly within the terms of the statute and is entitled to its benefits.

IRRIGATION ACT OF 1891.

However, this is not the only law under which the company is plainly entitled to the right of way for its pipe line. It is entitled to its right of way under the irrigation right-of-way act passed by Congress on March 3, 1891 (26 Stat. L., 1095). Section 18 of that act provides:

"That the right of way through the public lands and reservations of the United States is hereby granted to any canal or ditch company formed for the purpose of irrigation and duly organized under the laws of any State or Territory."

It is an established fact and not denied that the Hydro-Electric Co. is a canal and ditch company organized for the purpose of irrigation as prescribed by that law of Congress. The water after it passes through the company's pipe line and over its water wheel at the power house is available for the irrigation of otherwise arid lands, and as reported by the Government officer the water is to be utilized for that purpose. Not only does the company's pipe lines convey this water for irrigation, but by its dam at the lake—Lundy Lake—it stores the storm and flood waters which otherwise would run to waste and conserves them, thereby increasing the water available for irrigation.

It is true that this irrigation right-of-way act of 1891 provides in terms for the filing of certain maps and plats before the Secretary of the Interior, but these provisions have been held by the United States Supreme Court to be permissive only and not conditions precedent. It has been held by the United States Supreme Court, and repeatedly by the Secretary of the Interior, that actual construction of the ditch and laying of the pipe line amounts to full compliance with the law and vests in the company full legal title to its right of way with or without previous or subsequent filing of any plats or maps. The Hydro-Electric Co. has admittedly completed the digging of its ditch and the laying and covering of its pipe line. Its right of way is therefore clearly vested. The point is so well established that no one at all familiar with the subject will question it. See the Supreme Court decision in the case of Jamestown & Northern R. R. Co. v. Jones (177 U. S., 125) and the decisions there referred to. That decision involved a construction by the court of the railroad right-of-way act of 1875, but the two acts are practically identical in terms, and the controlling authority of the Supreme Court's decision just cited over cases arising under the irrigation right of way act has been expressly recognized repeatedly in the decision of the Secretary of the Interior. (See vols. 38 and 39, Land Decisions.)

It is true that the departmental officials have, by regulations and decisions, attempted to rob this irrigation right-of-way act of its beneficial effect by claiming that it is not applicable unless the water is used solely for irrigation. However, Congress attempted expressly to remedy such a narrowness of construction by the amendatory act which it passed on May 11, 1898 (30 Stat. L., 404). That amendatory act provides that rights of way under this irrigation act of 1891—I quote from the act—"may be used for purposes of a public nature; and said rights of way may be used for purposes of water transportation, for domestic purposes, or for the development of power as subsidiary to the main purpose of irrigation." I claim that under these acts this Hydro-Electric Co., and other companies which are developing the industries of the West, are entitled by plain provisions of law to rights of way in such cases as the present one.

MINING ACT OF 1905.

However, there is yet another act of Congress which is applicable in even more pointed and express terms to the present case. I refer to the act of February 1, 1905 (33 Stat. L., 628). Section 4 of that act provides:

"That rights of way for the construction and maintenance of dams, reservoirs, water plants, ditches, flumes, pipes, tunnels, and canals, within and across the forest reserves of the United States, are hereby granted to citizens and corporations of the United States for municipal or mining purposes and for the purpose of milling and reduction of ores during the period of their beneficial use, under such rules and regulations as may be prescribed by the Secretary of the Interior and subject to the laws of the State or Territory in which said reserves are respectively located."

That act describes with exact precision the admitted purposes and object of this Hydro-Electric Co. The testimony shows, and the Government admits, that the company's object is the development of its own mining properties, the milling and reduction of its own ores, and the sale of its surplus power to other miners and mine owners and operators. By this act Congress plainly granted to this company, and to every other company and individual in the West similarly situated, a right of way for ditches and pipe lines. The object of the act, its scope and purpose, are clear and unmistakable. This act was passed by Congress for the benefit and encouragement of the legitimate industry of mining, milling, and ore reduction. The Supreme Court of the United States declared in the case of United States v. Verde Copper Co. (196 U. S., 207) that acts of this character—I quote from the decision of the court—"are not to be so construed as to defeat the intent of the legislature or to withhold what is given there expressly or by necessary or fair implication." In this right-of-way act which I have quoted to you there is no possible ground for doubt or uncertainty, no hint of ambiguity. And even if there were any ambiguity such ambiguity should be resolved liberally in favor of the industry which Congress intended to encourage, namely, that of mining and mineral development. In the statute under consideration, in the Verde Copper case just referred to, there was some ambiguity, but the court said that even "ambiguity should not be resolved to take from the industries designated by Congress the license given them." The court said:

"When an act operates as a general law and manifests clearly the intention of Congress to secure public advantage or to subserve the public interests and welfare by means of benefits more or less valuable offered to individuals or to corporations as an inducement to undertake and accomplish great and expensive enterprises or works of a quasi public character in or through immense and undeveloped public domain, such legislation stands upon a somewhat different footing from a private grant and should receive at the hands of the courts a more liberal construction in favor of the purpose for which it was enacted."

Language more aptly fitting to the present case could not well be imagined. The law grants the right of way. This company has accepted its terms and actuated by the inducement offered it has undertaken and completed in a barren desert region—60 miles from the nearest railroad—this enterprise of great local public benefit.

Nevertheless, in spite of the language of the Supreme Court just quoted, the Land Department has, by regulation and decision, attempted to defeat this law of Congress of its beneficial effect and to deprive the mining industry in the Western States of the legitimate encouragement which Congress granted it. In the Northern California Power Co. case (37 Land Dec., 80) the Secretary of the Interior imported into this statute restrictions not found in the act and inconsistent with its terms.

The Secretary held that no right of way could be granted to any mining company unless such right of way was to be used solely and exclusively for the operation of mines and the milling and reduction of ores owned by the company itself. In other words, that this Hydro-Electric Co., though using the right of way for mining and milling and municipal purposes, as prescribed by the act, nevertheless could not have the benefit of the act because some of the power was to be utilized by other mine owners in the locality. In this way this beneficial act of Congress has, in effect, been abrogated by departmental rule and decision. The will of Congress has been set aside and overruled in the face of the plainest possible language that Congress could use.

And there is no possible justification for such a judicial quibble as this decision represents. At the time this act was passed the Supreme Court and the Department of the Interior had both held under the similar right-of-way act for irrigation companies, passed March 3, 1891, that the ultimate use of the right of way and not any question of ownership was the determining factor. The language in the irrigation right-of-way act is, "That the right of way * * * is hereby granted * * * for the purpose of irrigation."

In the mining right-of-way act of February 1, 1905, just referred to, the language is just the same—"That rights of way * * * are hereby granted * * * for municipal or mining purposes and for the purpose of milling and reduction of ores."

As showing the scope and effect of the ruling of the Supreme Court under the irrigation right-of-way act, just referred to, I quote from the decision of the Secretary of the Interior, rendered November 19, 1909, in the case of the Sierra Buttes Canal & Water Co. In that decision the Secretary of the Interior said:

"The decision of the Supreme Court in the case of Gutierrez v. Albuquerque Land & Irrigation Co. (188 U. S., 545) * * * held in that case that in order to be entitled to the benefits of the acts of Congress providing for rights of way over the public domain it was not necessary for the company securing such rights of way to engage in the irrigation of land or to own the lands intended to be irrigated."

It was held to be sufficient if the water was sold to others who used it for irrigation.

That is certainly the only reasonable construction of that act, and the same application, by every recognized rule of statutory construction, must be given to the mining right-of-way act of February 1, 1905. That act was passed by Congress subsequent to the Supreme Court decision on the irrigation act, and in the light of that decision Congress incorporated the same language. The same construction must be given, and under that construction the Hydro-Electric Co. is legal owner of the right of way and entitled to have its title confirmed by this pending bill.

And the company's right under this statute is not dependent upon the filing of any map or plat. It has definitely located and designated its line by actual construction upon the ground. The construction work is already completed. The line is legally designated thereby, and the title to the right is vested by operation of law without the filing of any plat or map. This was the decision of the Supreme Court in the case of Jamestown & Northern R. R. Co. v. Jones, which I have already cited, and it is equally applicable to this case.

EQUITABLE CONSIDERATIONS IN FAVOR OF THIS BILL.

The legal and equitable considerations to which I have heretofore called your attention are such as are applicable generally to the enterprises which are attempting to develop and open up the western public domain. It is vitally essential that all such legitimate development should be fostered and encouraged, not discouraged and obstructed.

But in this particular instance there are far greater reasons of equity and justice in favor of the company named in the bill. It is a small local corporation, operating against exceptional odds in a barren desert region far removed from railroad communication, where every item of cost is excessive and where nothing but the hardest courage and boldest individual initiative would dare to venture. Where before was nothing but barren desert and unproductive mines this company is creating taxable and productive property. It is irrigating the desert lands and stimulating mineral development.

Furthermore, it is not operating on Government land. It is an exceptional instance, where only an insignificant shoe string of unpatented Government land must be crossed.

This shoe string is admittedly valueless. It is not a water-power site in any sense of that term. The water-power sites are at the lake, where the dam is situated, and at the power-house site, where the fall is secured. Both of these sites are owned by the company by absolute title in fee simple. This shoe string of land involved in the bill merely happens to lie in the path of the pipe line and is neither a power site nor riparian land.

Furthermore, the company, as proven at the hearings, has for 20 years, by itself and its predecessors, owned an open ditch across this same parcel of land and has done nothing more than to shorten the ditch and change it into a buried pipe line in order better to conserve the power of the water.

I think that the company is clearly entitled to the relief sought.

Mr. KAHN. Was this bill reported unanimously from the Committee on Public Lands?

Mr. RAKER. I have before me the original bill, given to me by the clerk of the committee, with his writing on it, as follows: "Unanimously adopted after amendment."

Mr. KAHN. So that it is the unanimous report of the committee?

Mr. RAKER. That is the unanimous report handed to me by the clerk of the Committee on Public Lands, and after that I made out the report, took it back to the committee, and read it—read the report that they were going to file in the House and in the committee—and not one living man said a word or made objection to it.

Mr. PICKETT. Mr. Chairman, I want to call the attention of the gentleman from California to the fact that I stated I was opposed to the bill that summer and that I reserved the right to oppose it on the floor of the House.

EXHIBIT A.

IN THE CIRCUIT COURT OF THE UNITED STATES, NINTH JUDICIAL DISTRICT, NORTHERN DISTRICT OF CALIFORNIA.

United States of America, plaintiff,

v. Hydro-Electric Co., a corporation, defendant. } No. —.

STIPULATION.

Whereas the said defendant is desirous of permission to maintain and operate, within the limits of the Mono National Forest, during the pendency of this cause, the conduit and pipe line mentioned and described in the pleadings in this cause and in the proceedings heretofore had herein, and has represented and insisted to the plaintiff that it desires in good faith to use and operate the said conduit and pipe line in its business of generating electrical energy, and that refusal of such permission would entail great and irreparable injury and loss to the defendant and possibly the destruction of its said business; and

Whereas the plaintiff is willing to accord such aforesaid permission, provided this may be done with due regard to the public rights and interests, and provided further such permission shall be availed of by the defendant in good faith for the preservation of its business as aforesaid in the actual operation of its electrical plant during the pendency of this cause:

It is hereby stipulated and agreed by and between the parties that the said defendant may until a final decree shall be entered in this cause operate and maintain the said conduit as the same now is within the national forest, subject to the following terms, conditions, and limitations; that is to say:

1. In case any injury to the said forest or other damage to the plaintiff shall be occasioned by water breaking, leaking, or flowing from the said pipe and conduit or from any dam, reservoir, or conduit owned by the defendant or subject to its control, or in case any injury to the said forest or damage to the plaintiff through any other force or agency shall be occasioned by the willful action or negligence in any respect of the defendant or any of its officers, agents, or employees, or any of its present or future contractors, or any of their officers, agents, or employees, the amount or amounts of money reasonably required to compensate the plaintiff for such damage or injury shall in each such case be examined into, fixed, and determined by the district forester having supervision over said forest at the time of such examination, or by such other official as then shall be exercising the functions of district forester in respect of said forest; and the amount or amounts so fixed and determined shall be thereupon immediately paid by the defendant to the plaintiff by payment to such national depository or such officer as the Attorney General shall designate to receive the same.

2. The defendant shall make such disposition of brush and refuse on the lands described in the bill of complaint as may be from time to time required by the forest officer.

3. The defendant shall protect all forest service and other telephone lines at crossings of and at all places of proximity to the transmission line in a standard manner and satisfactory to the forest officers, and maintain the line in such a manner as not to injure stock grazing on the forest.

4. The defendant shall do and cause to be done all within its power, and that of its employees, contractors, and employees of contractors, both independently and upon the request of the forest officers, to prevent and suppress forest fires.

5. The defendant shall build and repair roads and trails as required by the forest officer, or other duly authorized officer or agent of the United States, whenever any roads or trails are destroyed or injured by the construction work of the defendant or by flooding, and build and maintain suitable crossings as required by the forest officer, or other duly authorized officer or agent of the United States, for all roads and trails which intersect the said conduit and pipe line on the said described lands.

6. The defendant shall forthwith execute and file with the United States district attorney for the district above named a good and sufficient bond, to be approved by the said United States attorney, in the sum of $5,000, conditioned upon the faithful compliance by the defendant with all and singular the terms and provisions of this stipulation.

7. If by the final decree to be rendered in this cause it shall be determined and adjudged as to said conduit and pipe line that the same or any material portion thereof was constructed or maintained by the defendant without authority of Congress, then and in that event the defendant shall pay to such Government depository or officer, as may hereafter be designated by the Attorney General, a sum of money for the plaintiff to be computed at the rate of $75 per year from and after the 1st day of August, 1910, to and until the time when the defendant shall have fully complied with the terms of such final decree.

8. This stipulation shall not be construed to extend any right, privilege, or permission whatever to the defendant beyond the time when a final decree shall be entered in this cause.

Upon the execution, filing, and approval of such bond as above provided and the noting of the fact by the United States attorney upon this stipulation, the complainant's motion for a preliminary injunction may be withdrawn and the restraining order now in force may be vacated. This provision is subject to the distinct understanding that in case of any violation by the defendant of any of the terms hereof this stipulation shall, at the election of the plaintiff, be and become thenceforth null and of no effect, and the plaintiff shall be at liberty to restore and insist upon said motion for preliminary injunction without prejudice from or on account of this stipulation or from or on account of any action that shall have been taken or thing that shall have been done hereunder, but the exercise of such election shall not operate to release the defendant or its sureties on said bond from any liability which theretofore shall have arisen in favor of the plaintiff.

EXHIBIT B.

YREKA, CAL., January 17, 1912.

HON. JOHN E. RAKER,
Member of Congress from California,
Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR JUDGE: Inclosed is carbon copy of dispatch filed last evening, which expresses, I think, a reasonable view upon a very live to-day proposition. I was present for quite a good portion of the time at the extra session of the legislature in the interest of legislation on water rights based upon actual field conditions in our end of the State, and aided in framing measures based upon the principle that the highest possible degree of service should be exacted from every inch of water available from a gravity source. With this principle as the measure of the right, not only as to appropriationists but as to riparianists, supplemented as it is by the regulatory powers granted by the public utilities bill, which has also become a law, it would seem, in so far at least as California is concerned, that we are in a position not only to exact the service, but to control distribution and cost to public consumers. If there is an answer to Government ownership of public utilities, these measures, reasonably applied, would seem to furnish it, since they permit initiative on the one side and restrain its abuse on the other—sounds like good democracy, doesn't it?

It is needless to add, I hope, that my information as to the Hydro-Electric Co. shows it to be within the classification and under the control indicated. With best wishes, I am,

Very truly yours,

JAMES F. FARRAHER.

12. Senate constitutional amendment 47.

CHAPTER 60.

A resolution proposing to the people of the State of California an amendment to section 23 of article 12 of the constitution of the State of California, to confer upon the railroad commission power and jurisdiction to regulate and control the business of furnishing certain commodities and performing certain services to or for the public.

The Legislature of the State of California at its regular session, commencing on the 2d day of January, 1911, two-thirds of all the members elected to each of the two houses of said legislature voting in favor thereof, hereby proposes to the people of the State of California that section 23 of article 12 of the constitution of the State of California be amended so as to read as follows:

"SEC. 23. Every private corporation and every individual or association of individuals owning, operating, managing, or controlling any commercial railroad, interurban railroad, street railroad, canal, pipe line, plan, or equipment, or any part of such railroad, canal, pipe line, plant, or equipment within this State, for the transportation or conveyance of passengers or express matter, or freight of any kind, including crude oil, or for the transmission of telephone or telegraph messages, or for the production, generation, transmission, delivery, or furnishing of heat, light, water, or power, or for the furnishing of storage or wharfage facilities, either directly or indirectly, to or for the public, and every common carrier is hereby declared to be a public utility subject to such control and regulation by the railroad commission, as may be provided by the legislature, and every class of private corporations, individuals, or associations of individuals hereafter declared by the legislature to be public utilities shall likewise be subject to such control and regulation. The railroad commission shall have and exercise such power and jurisdiction to supervise and regulate public utilities in the State of California and to fix the rates to be charged for commodities furnished or services rendered by public utilities as shall be conferred upon it by the legislature, and the right of the legislature to confer powers upon the railroad commission respecting public utilities is hereby declared to be plenary and to be unlimited by any provision of this constitution.

"From and after the passage by the legislature of laws conferring powers upon the railroad commission respecting public utilities all powers respecting such public utilities vested in boards of supervisors or municipal councils, or other governing bodies of the several counties, cities and counties, cities and towns in this State, or in any commission created by law and existing at the time of the passage of such laws, shall cease so far as such powers shall conflict with the powers so conferred upon the railroad commission: Provided, however, That this section shall not affect such powers of control over any public utility vested in any city and county or incorporated city or town as, at an election to be held pursuant to laws to be passed hereafter by the legislature, a majority of the qualified electors voting thereon of such city and county or incorporated city or town shall vote to retain, and until such election such powers shall continue unimpaired; but if the vote so taken shall not favor the continuation of such powers they shall thereafter vest in the railroad commission as provided by law: And provided further, That where any such city and county or incorporated city or town shall have elected to continue any powers respecting public utilities it may, by vote of a majority of its qualified electors voting thereon, thereafter surrender such powers to the railroad commission in the manner to be prescribed by the legislature; or if such municipal corporation shall have surrendered any powers to the railroad commission it may, by like vote, thereafter reinvest itself with such power. Nothing in this section shall be construed as a limitation upon any power conferred upon the railroad commission by any provision of this constitution now existing or adopted concurrently herewith."

Section 23 of article 12, proposed to be amended as above, now reads as follows:

"SEC. 23. Until the legislature shall district the State the following shall be the railroad districts: The first district shall be composed of the counties of Alpine, Amador, Butte, Calaveras, Colusa, Del Norte, Eldorado, Humboldt, Lake, Lassen, Mendocino, Modoc, Napa, Nevada, Placer, Plumas, Sacramento, Shasta, Sierra, Siskiyou, Solano, Sonoma, Sutter, Tehama, Trinity, Yolo, and Yuba, from which one railroad commissioner shall be elected. The second district shall be composed of the counties of Marin, San Francisco, and San Mateo, from which one railroad commissioner shall be elected. The third district shall be composed of the counties of Alameda, Contra Costa, Fresno, Inyo, Kern, Los Angeles, Mariposa, Merced, Mono, Monterey, San Benito, San Bernardino, San Diego, San Joaquin, San Luis Obispo, Santa Barbara, Santa Clara, Santa Cruz, Stanislaus, Tulare, Tuolumne, and Ventura, from which one railroad commissioner shall be elected."

cle be used for the transportation of passengers or freight, and regardless of its class.

Sec. 12. The commission shall make and submit to the governor on or before the first day of December of each year subsequent to the year 1912 a report containing a full and complete account of its transactions and proceedings for the preceding fiscal year, together with such other facts, suggestions, and recommendations as it may deem of value to the people of the State.

Sec. 13. (a) All charges made, demanded, or received by any public utility, or by any two or more public utilities, for any product or commodity furnished or to be furnished or any service rendered or to be rendered shall be just and reasonable. Every unjust or unreasonable charge made, demanded, or received for such product or commodity or service is hereby prohibited and declared unlawful.

(b) Every public utility shall furnish, provide, and maintain such service, instrumentalities, equipment, and facilities as shall promote the safety, health, comfort, and convenience of its patrons, employees, and the public and as shall be in all respects adequate, efficient, just, and reasonable.

(c) All rules and regulations made by a public utility affecting or pertaining to its charges or service to the public shall be just and reasonable.

Sec. 14. (a) Every common carrier shall file with the commission and shall print and keep open to the public inspection schedules showing the rates, fares, charges, and classifications for the transportation between termini within this State of persons and property from each point upon its route to all other points thereon; and from each point upon its route to all points upon every other route leased, operated, or controlled by it; and from each point on its route or upon any route leased, operated, or controlled by it to all points upon the route of any other common carrier, whenever a through route and a joint rate shall have been established or ordered between any two such points. If no joint rate over a through route has been established, the schedules of the several carriers in such through route shall show the separately established rates, fares, charges, and classifications applicable to the through transportation. The schedules printed as aforesaid shall plainly state the places between which property and persons will be carried and shall also contain the classification of passengers or property in force, and shall also state separately all terminal charges, storage charges, icing charges, and all other charges which the commission may require to be stated, all privileges or facilities granted or allowed, and all rules or regulations which may in any wise change, affect, or determine any part or the aggregate of such rates, fares, charges, and classifications or the value of the service rendered to the passenger, shipper, or consignee. Subject to such rules and regulations as the commission may prescribe, such schedules shall be plainly printed in large type, and a copy thereof shall be kept by every such carrier readily accessible to and for inspection by the public in every station or office of such carrier where passengers or property are respectively received for transportation, when such station or office is in charge of an agent, and in every station or office of such carrier where passenger tickets or tickets for sleeping, parlor car, or other train accommodations are sold or bills of lading or waybills or receipts for property are issued. Any or all of such schedules kept as aforesaid shall be immediately produced by such carrier for inspection upon the demand of any person. A notice printed in bold type and stating that such schedules are on file with the agent and open to inspection by any person, and that the agent will assist any person to determine from such schedules any rates, fares, rules, or regulations in force, shall be kept posted by the carrier in two public and conspicuous places in every such station or office. The form of every such schedule shall be prescribed by the commission and shall conform in the case of common carriers subject to the act of Congress entitled "An act to regulate commerce," approved February 4, 1887, and the acts amendatory thereof and supplementary thereto, as nearly as may be to the form of schedules prescribed by the Interstate Commerce Commission under said act.

(b) Under such rules and regulations as the commission may prescribe, every public utility other than a common carrier shall file with the commission within such time and in such form as the commission may designate, and shall print and keep open to public inspection schedules showing all rates, tolls, rentals, charges, and classifications collected or enforced, or to be collected or enforced, together with all rules, regulations, contracts, privileges, and facilities which in any manner affect or relate to rates, tolls, rentals, classifications, or service. The rates, tolls, rentals, and charges shown on such schedules when filed by a public utility as to which the commission by this act acquires the power to fix any rates, tolls, rentals, or charges shall not, within any portion of the territory as to which the commission acquires as to such public utility such power, exceed the rates, tolls, rentals, or charges in effect on the 10th day of October, 1911. The rates, tolls, rentals, and charges shown on such schedules, when filed by any public utility as to any territory as to which the commission does not by this act acquire as to such public utility such power, shall not exceed the rates, tolls, rentals, and charges in effect at the time the commission acquires as to such territory and as to such public utility the power to fix rates, tolls, rentals, or charges. Nothing in this section contained shall prevent the commission from approving or fixing rates, tolls, rentals, or charges from time to time in excess of or less than those shown by said schedules.

Sec. 15. Unless the commission otherwise orders, no change shall be made by any public utility in any rate, fare, toll, rental, charge, or classification, or in any rule, regulation, or contract relating to or affecting any rate, fare, toll, rental, charge, classification, or service, or in any privilege or facility, except after 30 days' notice to the commission and to the public as herein provided. Such notice shall be given by filing with the commission and keeping open for public inspection new schedules stating plainly the change or changes to be made in the schedule or schedules then in force and the time when the change or changes will go into effect. The commission, for good cause shown, may allow changes without requiring the 30 days' notice herein provided for by an order specifying the changes so to be made and the time when they shall take effect and the manner in which they shall be filed and published. When any change is proposed in any rate, fare, toll, rental, charge, or classification, or in any form of contract or agreement, or in any rule, regulation, or contract relating to or affecting any rate, fare, toll, rental, charge, classification, or service, or in any privilege or facility, attention shall be directed to such change on the schedule filed with the commission by some character to be designated by the commission immediately preceding or following the item.

Sec. 16. The names of the several public utilities which are parties to any joint tariff, rate, fare, toll, contract, classification, or charge shall be specified in the schedule or schedules showing the same. Unless otherwise ordered by the commission, a schedule showing such joint tariff, rate, fare, toll, contract, classification, or charge need be filed with the commission by only one of the parties to it: Provided, That there is also filed with the commission in such form as the commission may require a concurrence in such joint tariff, rate, fare, toll, contract, classification, or charge by each of the other parties thereto.

Sec. 17. (a) 1. No common carrier subject to the provisions of this act shall engage or participate in the transportation of persons or property between points within this State until its schedules of rates, fares, charges, and classifications shall have been filed and published in accordance with the provisions of this act.

2. No common carrier shall charge, demand, collect, or receive a greater or less or different compensation for the transportation of persons or property, or for any service in connection therewith, than the rates, fares, and charges applicable to such transportation as specified in its schedules filed and in effect at the time; nor shall any such carrier refund or remit in any manner or by any device any portion of the rates, fares, or charges so specified, except upon order of the commission as hereinafter provided, nor extend to any corporation or person any privilege or facility in the transportation of passengers or property except such as are regularly and uniformly extended to all corporations and persons.

3. No common carrier subject to the provisions of this act shall, directly or indirectly, issue, give, or tender any free ticket, free pass, or free or reduced-rate transportation for passengers between points within this State, except to its officers, agents, employees, attorneys, physicians, and surgeons, and members of their families; to ministers of religion, traveling secretaries of railroad men's religious associations, or executive officers, organizers, or agents of railroad employees' mutual benefit associations giving the greater portion of their time to the work of any such association; inmates of hospitals or charitable or eleemosynary institutions, and persons exclusively engaged in charitable or eleemosynary work, and persons and property engaged or employed in educational work or scientific research when permitted by the commission; to the executive officers of mercantile or promotion boards or bodies within this State when traveling in the performance of duties affecting the advancement of the business of such boards or bodies, or the development of trade or industry within or without this State, when authorized by the commission; to hotel employees of season resort hotels, when authorized by the commission; to indigent, destitute, and homeless persons and to such persons when transported by charitable societies or hospitals, and the necessary agents employed in such transportation; to inmates of the national homes or State homes for disabled volunteer soldiers and of soldiers' and sailors' homes, including those about to enter and those returning home after discharge; to necessary caretakers, going and returning, of live stock, poultry, milk, fruit, and other freight, under uniform and nondiscriminatory regulations; to employees of sleeping-car corporations, express corporations, and telegraph and telephone corporations; to Railway Mail Service employees, United States internal-revenue officers, post-office inspectors, customs officers and inspectors, and immigration inspectors when traveling in the course of their official duty; to newsboys on trains, baggage agents, witnesses attending any legal investigation in which the carrier is interested, persons injured in accidents or wrecks and physicians and nurses attending such persons: Provided, That the term "employees" as used in this section shall include furloughed, pensioned, and superannuated employees, persons who have become disabled or infirm in the service of any such carrier, ex-employees traveling for the purpose of entering the service of any such carrier, and the remains of persons dying while in the employment of any such carrier; and the term "families" as used in this section shall include the families of those persons heretofore named in this proviso, the families of persons killed, and the widows during widowhood and minor children during minority of persons who died while in the service of any such carrier: And provided further, That no free ticket, free pass, or free or reduced-rate transportation shall be issued, given, or tendered to any officer, agent, or employee of a common carrier, who is at the same time a shipper or receiver of freight, or an officer, agent, or employee of a shipper or receiver of freight, unless such officer, agent, or employee devotes substantially his entire time to the service of such carrier: And provided further, That the members of the railroad commission, their officers and employees, shall be entitled, when in the performance of their official duties, to free transportation over the lines of all common carriers within this State: And provided further, That passenger transportation may issue to the proprietors and employees of newspapers and magazines and the members of their immediate families, in exchange for advertising space in such newspapers or magazines at full rates, subject, however, to such reasonable restrictions as the commission may impose.

Nothing in this act contained shall be construed to prohibit the issue by express corporations of free or reduced-rate transportation for express matter to their officers, agents, employees, attorneys, physicians, and surgeons, and members of their families, or the interchange of free or reduced-rate transportation for passengers or express matter between common carriers, their officers, agents, employees, attorneys, physicians, and surgeons, and members of their families: Provided, That such express matter be for the personal use of the person to or for whom such free or reduced-rate transportation is granted, or of his family; nor to prohibit the issue of passes or franks by telegraph or telephone corporations to their officers, agents, employees, attorneys, physicians, and surgeons, and members of their families, or the exchange of passes or franks between such telegraph and telephone corporations or between such corporations and such common carriers, for their officers, agents, employees, attorneys, physicians, and surgeons, and members of their families; nor to prevent the carrying out of contracts for free or reduced-rate passenger transportation heretofore made, founded upon adequate consideration and lawful when made; nor to prevent a common carrier from transporting, storing, or handling free or at reduced rates the household goods and personal effects of its employees, or persons entering or leaving the service, and of persons killed or dying while in its service.

4. Every common carrier subject to the provisions of this act may transport, free or at reduced rates, persons or property for the United States, State, county or municipal governments, or for charitable purposes, or to provide relief in cases of general epidemic, pestilence, or other calamitous visitation, and property to or from fairs or exhibitions for exhibit thereat; also contractors and their employees, material or supplies for use or engaged in carrying out their contracts with said carriers, for construction, operation, or maintenance work or work incidental thereto on the line of the issuing carrier, to the extent only that such free or reduced-rate transportation is provided for in the specifications upon which the contract is based and in the contract itself. Common carriers may also enter into contracts with telegraph and telephone corporations for an exchange of service.

(b) Except as in this section otherwise provided, no public utility shall charge, demand, collect, or receive a greater or less or different compensation for any product or commodity furnished or to be furnished, or for any service rendered or to be rendered, than the rates, tolls, rentals, and charges applicable to such product or commodity or service as specified in its schedules on file and in effect at the time, nor shall any such public utility refund or remit, directly or indirectly, in any manner or by any device, any portion of the rates, tolls, rentals, and charges so specified, nor extend to any corporation or person any form of contract or agreement or any rule or regulation or any facility or privilege except such as are regularly and uniformly extended to all corporations and persons: Provided, That the commission may by rule or order establish such exceptions from the operation of this prohibition as it may consider just and reasonable as to each public utility.

SEC. 18. Every common carrier and every telegraph and telephone corporation shall print and file or cause to be filed with the commission schedules showing all the rates, fares, tolls, rentals, charges, and classifications for the transportation of persons or property or the transmission of messages or conversations between all points within this State and all points without the State upon its route, and between all points within this State and all points without the State upon every route leased, operated, or controlled by it, and between all points on its route or upon any route, leased, operated, or controlled by it within this State and all points without the State upon the route of any other common carrier or telegraph or telephone corporation, whenever a through route and joint rate shall have been established between any two such points.

SEC. 19. No public utility shall, as to rates, charges, service, facilities, or in any other respect make or grant any preference or advantage to any corporation or person or subject any corporation or person to any prejudice or disadvantage. No public utility shall establish or maintain any unreasonable difference as to rates, charges, service, facilities, or in any other respect, either as between localities or as between classes of service. The commission shall have the power to determine any question of fact arising under this section.

SEC. 20. Nothing in this act shall be taken to prohibit any public utility from itself profiting, to the extent permitted by the commission, from any economies, efficiencies, or improvements which it may make, and from distributing by way of dividends, or otherwise disposing of, the profits to which it may be so entitled, and the commission is authorized to make or permit such arrangement or arrangements with any public utility as it may deem wise for the purpose of encouraging economies, efficiencies, or improvements and securing to the public utility making the same such portion, if any, of the profits thereof as the commission may determine.

SEC. 21. Nothing in this act shall be taken to prohibit a corporation or person engaged in the production, generation, transmission, or furnishing of heat, light, water, or power, or telegraph or telephone service, from establishing a sliding scale of charges: Provided, That a schedule showing such scale of charges shall first have been filed with the commission and such schedule and each rate set out therein approved by it. Nothing in this act shall be taken to prohibit any such corporation or person from entering into an arrangement for a fixed period for the automatic adjustment of charges for heat, light, water, or power, or telegraph or telephone service, in relation to the dividends to be paid to stockholders of such corporation, or the profit to be realized by such person: Provided, That a schedule showing the scale of charges under such arrangement shall first have been filed with the commission and such schedule and each rate set out therein approved by it. Nothing in this section shall prevent the commission from revoking its approval at any time and fixing other rates and charges for the product or commodity or service, as authorized by this act.

SEC. 22. (a) Every common carrier shall afford all reasonable, proper, and equal facilities for the prompt and efficient interchange and transfer of passengers, tonnage, and cars, loaded or empty, between the lines owned, operated, controlled, or leased by it and the lines of every other common carrier, and shall make such interchange and transfer promptly without discrimination between shippers, passengers, or carriers either as to compensation charged, service rendered, or facilities afforded. Every railroad corporation shall receive from every other railroad corporation at any point of connection freight cars of proper standard and in proper condition, and shall haul the same either to destination, if the destination be upon a line owned, operated, or controlled by such railroad corporation, or to point of transfer according to route billed, if the destination be upon the line of some other railroad corporation.

Nothing in this section contained shall be construed as in any wise limiting or modifying the duty of a common carrier to establish joint rates, fares, and charges for the transportation of passengers and property over the lines owned, operated, controlled, or leased by it and the lines of other common carriers, nor as in any manner limiting or modifying the power of the commission to require the establishment of such joint rates, fares, and charges.

(b) Every telephone corporation and telegraph corporation operating in this State shall receive, transmit, and deliver, without discrimination or delay, the conversations and messages of every other telephone or telegraph corporation with whose line a physical connection may have been made.

SEC. 23. (a) No common carrier, or any officer or agent thereof, or any person acting for or employed by it, shall, by means of known false billing, classification, weight, weighing, or report of weight, or by any other device or means assist, suffer, or permit any corporation or person to obtain transportation for any person or property between points within this State at less than the rates and fares then established and in force as shown by the schedules filed and in effect at the time. No person, corporation, or any officer, agent, or employee of a corporation shall, by means of false billing, false or incorrect classification, false weight or weighing, false representation as to contents or substance of a package, or false report or statement of weight, or by any other device or means, whether with or without the consent or connivance of a common carrier or any of its officers, agents, or employees, seek to obtain or obtain such transportation for such property at less than the rates then established and in force therefor.

obtain any allowance, rebate, or payment for damage, in connection with or growing out of the transportation of persons or property, or an agreement to transport such persons or property, whether with or without the consent or connivance of a common carrier or any of its officers, agents, or employees, nor shall any common carrier, or any officer, agent, or employee thereof, knowingly pay or offer to pay any such allowance, rebate, or claim for damage.

SEC. 24. (a) No common carrier subject to the provisions of this act shall charge or receive any greater compensation in the aggregate for the transportation of persons or of a like kind of property for a shorter than for a longer distance over the same line or route in the same direction, within this State, the shorter being included within the longer distance, or charge any greater compensation as a through rate than the aggregate of the intermediate rates, but this shall not be construed as authorizing any such common carrier to charge or receive as great a compensation for a shorter as for a longer distance or haul. Upon application to the commission such common carrier may, in special cases, after investigation be authorized by the commission to charge less for a longer than for a shorter distance for the transportation of persons or property, and the commission may from time to time prescribe the extent to which such carrier may be relieved from the operation and requirements of this section.

(b) No telephone or telegraph corporation subject to the provisions of this act shall charge or receive any greater compensation in the aggregate for the transmission of any long-distance message or conversation for a shorter than for a longer distance over the same line or route in the same direction within this State, the shorter being included within the longer distance, or charge any greater compensation for a through service than the aggregate of the intermediate rates or tolls subject to the provisions of this act, but this shall not be construed as authorizing any such telephone or telegraph corporation to charge and receive as great a compensation for a shorter as for a longer distance. Upon application to the commission a telephone or telegraph corporation may, in special cases, after investigation be authorized by the commission to charge less for a longer than for a shorter distance service for the transmission of messages or conversations, and the commission may from time to time prescribe the extent to which such telephone or telegraph corporation may be relieved from the operation and requirements of this section.

SEC. 25. (a) Every railroad corporation, upon the application of any corporation or person, being a shipper or receiver or contemplated shipper or receiver of freight, for a connection between the railroad of such railroad corporation and any existing or contemplated private track, tracks, or railroad of such corporation or person, shall make such connection and provide such switches and tracks as may be necessary for that purpose and deliver and receive cars thereover: Provided, That such connection is reasonably practicable and can be installed and used without materially increasing the hazard of the operation of the railroad with which such connection is sought, and that the business which may reasonably be expected to be received by such railroad corporation over such connection is sufficient to justify the expense of such connection to such railroad corporation.

SEC. 26. No foreign corporation other than those which by a complicity with the laws of this State are entitled to transact a public-utility business within this State shall henceforth transact within this State any public-utility business, nor shall any foreign corporation which is at present lawfully transacting business within this State henceforth transact within this State any public-utility business of a character different from that which it is at present authorized by its charter or articles of incorporation to transact, nor shall any license, permit, or franchise to own, control, operate or manage any public-utility business, or any part or incident thereof, be henceforth granted or transferred, directly or indirectly, to any foreign corporation which is not at present lawfully transacting within this State a public-utility business of like character: Provided, That foreign corporations engaging in commerce with foreign nations or commerce among the several States of this Union may transact within this State such commerce and intrastate commerce of a like character.

SEC. 27. No street or interurban railroad corporation shall charge, demand, collect, or receive more than 5 cents for one continuous ride in the same general direction within the corporate limits of any city and county, or city or town, except upon a showing before the commission that such greater charge is justified: Provided, That until the decision of the commission upon such showing a street or interurban railroad corporation may continue to demand, collect, and receive the fare in effect on October 10, 1911, or at the time the commission acquires as to such corporation the power to fix fares within such city and county or city or town. Every street or interurban railroad corporation shall, upon such terms as the commission shall find to be just and reasonable, furnish to its passengers transfers entitling them to one continuous trip in the same general direction over and upon the portions of its lines within the same city and county, or city or town, not reached by the originating car.

SEC. 28. (a) Every public utility shall furnish to the commission, in such form and such detail as the commission shall prescribe, all tabulations, computations, and all other information required by it to carry into effect any of the provisions of this act, and shall make specific answers to all questions submitted by the commission.

(b) Every public utility receiving from the commission any blanks, with directions to fill the same, shall cause the same to be properly filled out so as to answer fully and correctly each question propounded therein; in case it is unable to answer any question, it shall give a good and sufficient reason for such failure.

(d) No information furnished to the commission by a public utility, except such matters as are specifically required to be open to public inspection by the provisions of this act, shall be open to public inspection or made public except on order of the commission, or by the commission or a commissioner in the course of a hearing or proceeding. Any officer or employee of the commission who, in violation of the provisions of this subsection, divulges any such information shall be guilty of a misdemeanor.

Sec. 29. Every public utility shall annually furnish to the commission, at such time and in such form as the commission may require, a report in which the utility shall specifically answer all questions propounded by the commission upon or concerning which the commission may desire information. The commission shall have authority to require any public utility to file monthly reports of earnings and expenses, and to file periodical or special, or both periodical and special, reports concerning any matter about which the commission is authorized by this or any other act to inquire or to keep itself informed or which it is required to enforce. All reports shall be under oath when required by the commission.

Sec. 30. Every public utility shall obey and comply with each and every requirement of every order, decision, direction, rule, or regulation made or prescribed by the commission in the matters herein specified, or any other matter in any way relating to or affecting its business as a public utility, and shall do everything necessary or proper in order to secure compliance with and observance of every such order, decision, direction, rule, or regulation by all of its officers, agents, and employees.

Sec. 31. The railroad commission is hereby vested with power and jurisdiction to supervise and regulate every public utility in the State and to do all things, whether herein specifically designated or in addition thereto, which are necessary and convenient in the exercise of such power and jurisdiction.

Sec. 32. (a) Whenever the commission, after a hearing had upon its own motion or upon complaint, shall find that the rates, fares, tolls, rentals, charges, or classifications, or any of them, demanded, observed, charged, or collected by any public utility for any service or product or commodity, or in connection therewith, including the rates or fares for execution or commutation tickets, or that the rules, regulations, practices, or contracts, or any of them, affecting such rates, fares, tolls, rentals, charges, or classifications, or any of them, are unjust, unreasonable, discriminatory, or preferential, or in anywise in violation of any provision of law, or that such rates, fares, tolls, rentals, charges, or classifications are insufficient, the commission shall determine the just, reasonable, or sufficient rates, fares, tolls, rentals, charges, classifications, rules, regulations, practices, or contracts to be thereafter observed and in force and shall fix the same by order, as hereinafter provided.

Sec. 33. Whenever the commission, after a hearing had upon its own motion or upon complaint, shall find that the rates, fares, or charges in force over two or more common carriers between any two points in this State are unjust, unreasonable, or excessive, or that no satisfactory through route or joint rate, fare, or charge exists between such points, and that the public convenience and necessity demand the establishment of a through route and joint rate, fare, or charge between such points, the commission may order such common carriers to establish such through route and may establish and fix a joint rate, fare, or charge which will be fair, just, reasonable, and sufficient, to be followed, charged, enforced, demanded, and collected in the future, and the terms and conditions under which such through route shall be operated. The commission may order that freight moving between such points shall be carried by the different common carriers parties to such through route and joint rate without being transferred from the originating cars. In case the common carriers do not agree upon the division between them of the joint rates, fares, or charges established by the commission over such through routes, the commission shall, after hearing, by supplemental order, establish such division: Provided, That where any railroad which is made a party to a through route has itself over its own line an equally satisfactory through route between the termini of the through route established, such railroad shall have the right to require as its division of the joint rate, fare, or charge its local rate, fare, or charge over the portion of its line comprised in such through route, and the commission may, in its discretion, allow to such railroad more than its local rate, fare, or charge whenever it will be equitable so to do. The commission shall have the power to establish and fix through routes and joint rates, fares, or charges over common carriers and stage or auto-stage lines and to fix the division of such joint rates, fares, or charges.

Sec. 34. The commission shall have the power to investigate all existing or proposed interstate rates, fares, tolls, charges, and classifications, and all rules and practices in relation thereto, for or in relation to the transportation of persons or property or the transmission of messages or conversations where any act in relation thereto shall take place within this State; and when the same are, in the opinion of the commission, excessive or discriminatory or in violation of the act of Congress entitled "An act to regulate commerce," approved February 4, 1887, and the acts amendatory thereof and supplementary thereto, or of any other act of Congress, or in conflict with the rulings, orders, or regulations of the Interstate Commerce Commission, the commission may apply, by petition or otherwise, to the Interstate Commerce Commission or to any court of competent jurisdiction for relief.

Sec. 35. Whenever the commission, after a hearing had upon its own motion or upon complaint, shall find that the rules, regulations, practices, equipment, appliances, facilities, or service of any public utility, or the methods of manufacture, distribution, transmission, storage, or supply employed by it, are unjust, unreasonable, unsafe, improper, inadequate, or insufficient, the commission shall determine the just, reasonable, safe, proper, adequate, or sufficient rules, regulations, practices, equipment, appliances, facilities, service, or methods to be observed, furnished, constructed, enforced, or employed and shall fix the same by its order, rule, or regulation. The commission shall prescribe rules and regulations for the performance of any service or the furnishing of any commodity of the character furnished or supplied by any public utility, and, on proper demand and tender of rates, such public utility shall furnish such commodity or render such service within the time and upon the conditions provided in such rules.

Sec. 36. Whenever the commission, after a hearing had upon its own motion or upon complaint, shall find that additions, extensions, repairs, or improvements to, or changes in, the existing plant, equipment, apparatus, facilities, or other physical property of any public utility or of any two or more public utilities ought reasonably to be made, or that a new structure or structures should be erected, to promote the security or convenience of its employees or the public, or in any other way to secure adequate service or facilities, the commission shall make and serve an order directing that such additions, extensions, repairs, improvements, or changes be made or such structure or structures be erected in the manner and within the time specified in said order. If the commission orders the erection of a new structure, it may also fix the site thereof. If any additions, extensions, repairs, improvements, or changes, or any new structure or structures which the commission has ordered to be erected, require joint action by two or more public utilities, the commission shall notify the said public utilities that such additions, extensions, repairs, improvements or changes, or new structure or structures have been ordered and that the same shall be made at their joint cost, whereupon the said public utilities shall have such reasonable time as the commission may grant within which to agree upon the portion or division of cost of such additions, extensions, repairs, improvements or changes, or new structure or structures which each shall bear. If at the expiration of such time such public utilities shall fail to file with the commission a statement that an agreement has been made for a division or apportionment of the cost or expense of such additions, extensions, repairs, improvements or changes, or new structure or structures, the commission shall have authority, after further hearing, to make an order fixing the proportion of such cost or expense to be borne by each public utility and the manner in which the same shall be paid or secured.

Sec. 37. Whenever the commission, after a hearing had upon its own motion or upon complaint, shall find that any railroad corporation or street railroad corporation does not run a sufficient number of trains or cars, or possess or operate sufficient motive power, reasonably to accommodate the traffic, passenger or freight, transported by or offered for transportation to it, or does not run its trains or cars with sufficient frequency or at a reasonable or proper time having regard to safety, or does not stop the same at proper places, or does not run any train or trains, car or cars, upon a reasonable time schedule for the run, the commission shall have power to make an order directing any such railroad corporation or street railroad corporation to increase the number of its trains or of its cars or its motive power or to change the time for starting its trains or cars or to change the time schedule for the run of any train or car, or to change the stopping place or places thereof, or to make any other order that the commission may determine to be reasonably necessary to accommodate and transport the traffic, passenger or freight, transported or offered for transportation.

Sec. 38. Whenever the commission, after a hearing had upon its own motion or upon complaint, shall find that the public convenience and necessity would be subserved by having connections made between the tracks of any two or more railroad or street railroad corporations, so that cars may readily be transferred from one to the other, at any of the points hereinafter in this section specified, the commission may order any two or more such corporations owning, controlling, operating, or managing tracks of the same gauge to make physical connections at any and all crossings, and at all points where a railroad or street railroad shall begin or terminate or run near to any other railroad or street railroad. After the necessary franchise or permit has been secured from the city and county, or city or town, the commission may likewise order such physical connection, within such city and county, or city or town, between two or more railroads which enter the limits of the same. The commission shall by order direct whether the expense of the connections referred to in this section shall be borne jointly or otherwise.

Sec. 39. (a) Whenever the commission, after a hearing had upon its own motion or upon complaint, shall find that application has been made by any corporation or person to a railroad corporation for a connection or spur as provided in section 25 of this act, and that the railroad corporation has refused to provide such connection or spur and that the applicant is entitled to have the same provided for him under said section 25, the commission shall make an order requiring the providing of such connection or spur and the maintenance and use of the same upon reasonable terms which the commission shall have the power to prescribe. Whenever any such connection or spur has been so provided, any corporation or person shall be entitled to connect with the private track, tracks, or railroad thereby connected with the railroad of the railroad corporation and to use the same or to use the spur so provided upon payment to the party or parties incurring the primary expense of such private track, tracks, or railroad, or the connection therewith or of such spur, of a reasonable proportion of the cost thereof to be determined by the commission after notice to the interested parties and a hearing thereon: Provided, That such connection and use can be made without unreasonable interference with the rights of the party or parties incurring such primary expense.

Sec. 40. Whenever the commission, after a hearing had upon its own motion or upon complaint, shall find that a physical connection can reasonably be made between the lines of two or more telephone corporations or two or more telegraph corporations whose lines can be made to form a continuous line of communication, by the construction and maintenance of suitable connections for the transfer of messages or conversations, and that public convenience and necessity will be subserved thereby, or shall find that two or more telegraph or telephone corporations have failed to establish joint rates, tolls, or charges for service by or over their said lines, and that joint rates, tolls, or charges ought to be established, the commission may, by its order, require that such connection be made, except where the purpose of such connection is primarily to secure the transmission of local messages or conversations between points within the same city and county, or city or town, and that conversations be transmitted and messages transferred over such connection under such rules and regulations as the commission may establish, and prescribe through lines and joint rates, tolls, and charges to be made, and to be used, observed, and in force in the future. If such telephone or telegraph corporations do not agree upon the division between them of the cost of such physical connection or connections or the division of the joint rates, tolls, or charges established by the commission over such through lines, the commission shall have authority, after further hearing, to establish such division by supplemental order.

Sec. 41. Whenever the commission, after a hearing had upon its own motion or upon complaint of a public utility affected, shall find that public convenience and necessity require the use by one public utility of the conduits, subways, tracks, wires, poles, pipes, or other equipment, or any part thereof, on, over, or under any street or highway, and belonging to another public utility, and that such use will not result in irreparable injury to the owner or other users of such conduits, subways, tracks, wires, poles, pipes, or other equipment or in any substantial detriment to the service, and that such public utilities have failed to agree upon such use or the terms and conditions or compensation for the same, the commission may by order direct that such use be permitted, and prescribe a reasonable compensation and reasonable terms and conditions for the joint use. If such use be directed, the public utility to whom the use is permitted shall be liable to the owner or other users of such conduits, subways, tracks, wires, poles, pipes, or other equipment for such damage as may result therefrom to the property of such owner or other users thereof.

SEC. 42. The commission shall have power, after a hearing had upon its own motion or upon complaint, by general or special orders, rules, or regulations, or otherwise, to require every public utility to maintain and operate its line, plant, system, equipment, apparatus, tracks, and premises in such manner as to promote and safeguard the health and safety of its employees, passengers, customers, and the public, and to this end to prescribe, among other things, the installation, use, maintenance, and operation of appropriate safety or other devices or appliances, including interlocking and other protective devices at grade crossings or junctions and block or other systems of signalling, to establish uniform or other standards of equipment, and to require the performance of any other act which the health or safety of its employees, passengers, customers, or the public may demand.

SEC. 43. (a) No public road, highway, or street shall hereafter be constructed across the track of any railroad corporation at grade, nor shall the track of any railroad corporation be constructed across a public road, highway, or street at grade, nor shall the track of any railroad corporation be constructed across the track of any other railroad or street railroad corporation at grade, nor shall the track of a street railroad corporation be constructed across the track of a railroad corporation at grade, without having, first, secured the permission of the commission: Provided, That this subsection shall not apply to the replacement of lawfully existing tracks. The commission shall have the right to refuse its permission or to grant it upon such terms and conditions as it may prescribe.

(b) The commission shall have the exclusive power to determine and prescribe the manner, including the particular point of crossing, and the terms of installation, operation, maintenance, use, and protection of each crossing of one railroad by another railroad or street railroad, and of a street railroad by a railroad, and of each crossing of a public road or highway by a railroad or street railroad and of a street by a railroad or vice versa, subject to the provisions of section 2694 of the Political Code, so far as applicable, and to alter or abolish any such crossing, and to require where, in its judgment it would be practicable, a separation of grades at any such crossing heretofore or hereafter established and to prescribe the terms upon which such separation shall be made and the proportions in which the expense of the alteration or abolition of such crossings or the separation of such grades shall be divided between the railroad or street railroad corporations affected or between such corporations and the State, county, municipality, or other public authority in interest.

SEC. 44. The commission shall investigate the cause of all accidents occurring within this State upon the property of any public utility or directly or indirectly arising from or connected with its maintenance or operation, resulting in loss of life or injury to person or property and requiring, in the judgment of the commission, investigation by it, and shall have the power to make such order or recommendation with respect thereto as in its judgment may seem just and reasonable: Provided, That neither the order or recommendation of the commission nor any accident report filed with the commission shall be admitted as evidence in any action for damages based on or arising out of the loss of life or injury to person or property in this section referred to. Every public utility is hereby required to file with the commission, under such rules and regulations as the commission may prescribe, a report of each accident so occurring of such kinds or classes as the commission may from time to time designate.

SEC. 45. (a) The commission shall have power to provide by proper rules and regulations the time within which all railroad corporations shall furnish, after demand therefor, all cars, equipment, and facilities necessary for the handling of freight in carload and less than carload lots, the time within which consignors or persons ordering cars shall load the same, and the time within which consignees or persons to whom freight may be consigned shall unload and discharge the same and receive freight from the freight rooms, and to provide penalties to be paid for failure on the part of the railroad corporations, consignors, and consignees to conform to such rules. Charges for demurrage shall be uniform so that the same penalty shall be paid by both shipper or consignee and railroad corporation for an equal number of cars for each day for which demurrage is charged.

(b) The commission shall also have power to provide the time within which express packages shall be received, gathered, transported, and delivered at destination, and the limits within which express packages shall be gathered and distributed and telegraph and telephone messages delivered without extra charge.

SEC. 46. (a) The commission shall have power, after hearing had upon its own motion or upon complaint, to ascertain and fix just and reasonable standards, classifications, regulations, practices, measurements, or service to be furnished, imposed, observed, and followed by all electrical, gas, and water corporations; to ascertain and fix adequate and serviceable standards for the measurement of quantity, quality, pressure, initial voltage, or other condition pertaining to the supply of the product, commodity, or service furnished or rendered by any such public utility; to prescribe reasonable regulations for the examination and testing of such product, commodity, or service, and for the measurement thereof; to establish reasonable rules, regulations, specifications, and standards to secure the accuracy of all meters and appliances for measurements; and to provide for the examination and testing of any and all appliances used for the measurement of any product, commodity, or service of any such public utility.

(c) Any consumer or user of any product, commodity, or service of a public utility may have any appliance used in the measurement thereof tested upon paying the fees fixed by the commission. The commission shall establish and fix reasonable fees to be paid for testing such appliances on the request of the consumer or user, the fee to be paid by the consumer or user at the time of his request, but to be paid by the public utility and repaid to the consumer or user if the appliance is found defective or incorrect to the disadvantage of the consumer or user, under such rules and regulations as may be prescribed by the commission.

SEC. 47. The commission shall have power to ascertain the value of the property of every public utility in this State and every fact which, in its judgment, may or does have any bearing on such value. The commission shall have power to make revaluations from time to time and to ascertain all new construction, extensions, and additions to the property of every public utility.

SEC. 48. The commission shall have power to establish a system of accounts to be kept by the public utilities subject to its jurisdiction, or to classify said public utilities and to establish a system of accounts for each class, and to prescribe the manner in which such accounts shall be kept. It may also, in its discretion, prescribe the forms of accounts, records, and memoranda to be kept by such public utilities, including the accounts, records, and memoranda of the movement of traffic, as well as the receipts and expenditures of moneys, and any other forms, records, and memoranda which, in the judgment of the commission, may be necessary to carry out any of the provisions of this act. The system of accounts established by the commission and the forms of accounts, records, and memoranda prescribed by it shall not be inconsistent, in the case of corporations subject to the provisions of the act of Congress entitled "An act to regulate commerce," approved February 4, 1887, and the acts amendatory thereof and supplementary thereto, with the systems and forms from time to time established for such corporations by the Interstate Commerce Commission, but nothing herein contained shall affect the power of the commission to prescribe forms of accounts, records, and memoranda covering information in addition to that required by the Interstate Commerce Commission. The commission may, after hearing had upon its own motion or upon complaint, prescribe by order the accounts in which particular outlays and receipts shall be entered, charged, or credited. Where the commission has prescribed the forms of accounts, records, or memoranda to be kept by any public utility for any of its business, it shall thereafter be unlawful for such public utility to keep any accounts, records, or memoranda for such business other than those so prescribed, or those prescribed by or under the authority of any other State or of the United States, excepting such accounts, records, or memoranda as shall be explanatory of and supplemental to the accounts, records, or memoranda prescribed by the commission.

SEC. 49. The commission shall have power, after hearing, to require any or all public utilities to carry a proper and adequate depreciation account in accordance with such rules, regulations, and forms of account as the commission may prescribe. The commission may, from time to time, ascertain and determine and by order fix the proper and adequate rates of depreciation of the several classes of property of each public utility. Each public utility shall conform its depreciation accounts to the rates so ascertained, determined, and fixed, and shall set aside the moneys so provided for out of earnings and carry the same in a depreciation fund and expend such fund only for such purposes and under such rules and regulations, both as to original expenditure and subsequent replacement, as the commission may prescribe. The income from investments of moneys in such fund shall likewise be carried in such fund.

SEC. 50. (a) No street railroad corporation, gas corporation, electrical corporation, telephone corporation, or water corporation shall hereafter begin the construction of a street railroad, or of a line, plant, or system, or of any extension of such street railroad, or line, plant, or system, without having first obtained from the commission a certificate that the present or future public convenience and necessity require or will require such construction: Provided, That this section shall not be construed to require any such corporation to secure such certificate for an extension within any city and county or city or town within which it shall have theretofore lawfully commenced operations, or for an extension into territory either within or without a city and county or city or town contiguous to its street railroad, or line, plant, or system and not theretofore served by a public utility of like character, or for an extension within or to territory already served by it, necessary in the ordinary course of its business: And provided further, That if any public utility, in constructing or extending its line, plant, or system, shall interfere or be about to interfere with the operation of the line, plant, or system of any other public utility already constructed, the commission, on complaint of the public utility claiming to be injuriously affected, may, after hearing, make such order and prescribe such terms and conditions for the location of the lines, plants, or systems affected as to it may seem just and reasonable.

(b) No public utility of a class specified in subsection (a) hereof shall hereafter exercise any right or privilege under any franchise or permit hereafter granted, or under any franchise or permit heretofore granted but not heretofore actually exercised, or the exercise of which has been suspended for more than one year, without first having obtained from the commission a certificate that public convenience and necessity require the exercise of such right or privilege: Provided, That when the commission shall find, after hearing, that a public utility has heretofore begun actual construction work and is prosecuting such work in good faith uninterruptedly and with reasonable diligence in proportion to the magnitude of the undertaking, under any franchise or permit heretofore granted but not heretofore actually exercised, such public utility may proceed, under such rules and regulations as the commission may prescribe, to the completion of such work, and may, after such completion, exercise such right or privilege: And provided further, That this section shall not be construed to validate any right or privilege now invalid or hereafter becoming invalid under any law of this State.

(c) Before any certificate may issue under this section a certified copy of its articles of incorporation or charter, if the applicant be a corporation, shall be filed in the office of the commission. Every applicant for a certificate shall file in the office of the commission such evidence as shall be required by the commission to show that such applicant has received the required consent, franchise, or permit of the proper county, city and county, municipal, or other public authority. The commission shall have power, after hearing, to issue said certificate, as prayed for, or to refuse to issue the same, or to issue it for the construction of a portion only of the contemplated street railroad, line, plant, or system, or extension thereof, or for the partial exercise only of said right or privilege, and may attach to the exercise of the rights granted by said certificate such terms and conditions as in its judgment the public convenience and necessity may require. If a public utility desires to exercise a right or privilege under a franchise or permit which it contemplates securing, but which has not as yet been granted to it, such public utility may apply to the commission for an order preliminary to the issue of the certificate. The commission may thereupon make an order declaring that it will thereafter, upon application, under such rules and regulations as it may prescribe, issue the desired certificate, upon such terms and conditions as it may designate, after the public utility has obtained the contemplated franchise or permit. Upon the presentation to the commission of evidence satisfactory to it that such franchise or permit has been secured by such public utility the commission shall thereupon issue such certificate.

SEC. 51. (a) No railroad corporation, street railroad corporation, pipeline corporation, gas corporation, electrical corporation, telephone corporation, telegraph corporation, or water corporation shall thenceforth sell, lease, assign, mortgage, or otherwise dispose of or encumber the whole or any part of its railroad, street railroad, line, plant, or system, necessary or useful in the performance of its duties to the public, or any franchise or permit, or any right thereunder, nor by any means whatsoever, direct or indirect, merge or consolidate its railroad, street railroad, line, plant, or system, or franchises or permits, or any part thereof, with any other public utility, without having first secured from the commission an order authorizing it so to do. Every such sale, lease, assignment, mortgage, disposition, encumbrance, merger, or consolidation made other than in accordance with the order of the commission authorizing the same shall be void. The permission and approval of the commission to the exercise of a franchise or permit under section 50 of this act, or the sale, lease, assignment, mortgage, or other disposition or encumbrance of a franchise or permit under this section shall not be construed to revive or validate any lapsed or invalid franchise or permit, or to enlarge or add to the powers or privileges contained in the grant of any franchise or permit, or to waive any forfeiture. Nothing in this subsection contained shall be construed to prevent the sale, lease, or other disposition by any public utility of a class designated in this subsection of property which is not necessary or useful in the performance of its duties to the public, and any sale of its property by such public utility shall be conclusively presumed to have been by property which is not useful or necessary in the performance of its duties to the public, as to any purchaser of such property in good faith for value.

(b) No public utility shall hereafter purchase or acquire, take, or hold any part of the capital stock of any other public utility, organized or existing under or by virtue of the laws of this State without having been first authorized to do so by the commission. Every assignment, transfer, contract, or agreement for assignment or transfer of any stock by or through any person or corporation to any corporation or otherwise in violation of any of the provisions of this section shall be void and of no effect, and no such transfer shall be made on the books of any public utility. Nothing herein contained shall be construed to prevent the holding of stock heretofore lawfully acquired.

SEC. 52. (a) The power of public utilities to issue stocks and stock certificates, and bonds, notes, and other evidences of indebtedness and to create liens on their property situated within this State is a special privilege, the right of supervision, regulation, restriction, and control of which is and shall continue to be vested in the State, and such power shall be exercised as provided by law and under such rules and regulations as the commission may prescribe.

(b) A public utility may issue stocks and stock certificates, and bonds, notes, and other evidences of indebtedness, payable at periods of more than 12 months after the date thereof, for the following purposes and no others, namely, for the acquisition of property, or for the construction, completion, extension, or improvement of its facilities, or for the improvement or maintenance of its service, or for the discharge or lawful refunding of its obligations, or for the reimbursement of moneys actually expended from income or from any other moneys in the treasury of the public utility not secured by or obtained from the issue of stocks or stock certificates, or bonds, notes, or other evidences of indebtedness of such public utility, within five years next prior to the filing of an application with the commission for the required authorization, for any of the aforesaid purposes except maintenance of service and replacements, in cases where the applicant shall have kept its accounts and vouchers for such expenditures in such manner as to enable the commission to ascertain the amount of moneys so expended and the purposes for which such expenditure was made: Provided, That such public utility, in addition to the other requirements of law, shall first have secured from the commission an order authorizing such issue and stating the amount thereof and the purpose or purposes to which the issue or the proceeds thereof are to be applied, and that, in the opinion of the commission, the money, property, or labor to be procured or paid for by such issue is reasonably required for the purpose or purposes specified in the order, and that, except as otherwise permitted in the order in the case of bonds, notes, or other evidences of indebtedness, such purpose or purposes are not, in whole or in part, reasonably chargeable to operating expenses or to income. To enable it to determine whether it will issue such order the commission shall hold a hearing and may make such additional inquiry or investigation, and examine such witnesses, books, papers, documents, and contracts and require the filing of such data as it may deem of assistance. The commission may by its order grant permission for the issue of such stocks or stock certificates, or bonds, notes, or other evidences of indebtedness, in the amount applied for, or in a lesser amount, or not at all, and may attach to the exercise of its permission such condition or conditions as it may deem reasonable and necessary. The commission may authorize issues of bonds, notes, or other evidences of indebtedness less than, equivalent to, or greater than the authorized or subscribed capital stock of a public utility corporation, and the provisions of sections 309 and 456 of the Civil Code of this State, in so far as they contain prohibitions against the creation by corporations of indebtedness, evidenced by bonds, notes, or otherwise, in excess of their total authorized or subscribed capital stock, shall have no application to public utility corporations. No public utility shall, without the consent of the commission, apply the issue of any stock or stock certificate, or bond, note, or other evidence of indebtedness, or any part thereof, or any proceeds thereof, to any purpose not specified in the commission's order or to any purpose specified in the commission's order in excess of the amount authorized for such purpose, or issue or dispose of the same on any terms less favorable than those specified in such order or a modification thereof. A public utility may issue notes, for proper purposes and not in violation of any provision of this act or any other act, payable at periods of not more than 12 months after the date of issuance of the same, without the consent of the commission, but no such note shall, in whole or in part, be refunded by any issue of stocks or stock certificates, or of bonds, notes of any term or character, or any other evidence of indebtedness, without the consent of the commission. The commission shall have no power to authorize the capitalization of the right to be a corporation, or to authorize the capitalization of any franchise or permit whatsoever, or the right to own, operate, or enjoy any such franchise or permit, in excess of the amount (exclusive of any tax or annual charge) actually paid to the State or to a political subdivision thereof as the consideration for the grant of such franchise, permit, or right; nor shall any contract for consolidation or lease be capitalized; nor shall any public utility hereafter issue any bonds, notes, or other evidences of indebtedness against or as a lien upon any contract for consolidation or merger.

(c) The commission shall have the power to require public utilities to account for the disposition of the proceeds of all sales of stocks and stock certificates, and bonds, notes, and other evidences of indebtedness, in such form and detail as it may deem advisable, and to establish such rules and regulations as it may deem reasonable and necessary to insure the disposition of such proceeds for the purpose or purposes specified in its order.

(d) All stock and every stock certificate, and every bond, note, or other evidence of indebtedness, of a public utility, issued without an order of the commission authorizing the same then in effect, shall be void, and, likewise, all stock and every stock certificate, and every bond, note, or other evidence of indebtedness, of a public utility, issued with the authorization of the commission, but not conforming in its provisions to the provisions, if any, which it is required by the order of authorization of the commission to contain, shall be void; but no failure in any other respect to comply with the terms or conditions of the order of authorization of the commission shall render void any stock or stock certificate, or any bond, note, or other evidence of indebtedness, except as to a corporation or person taking the same otherwise than in good faith and for value and without actual notice.

(f) Every officer, agent, or employee of a public utility, and every other person who knowingly authorizes, directs, aids in, issues, or executes, or causes to be issued or executed, any stock or stock certificate or bond, note, or other evidence of indebtedness in nonconformity with the order of the commission authorizing the same, or contrary to the provisions of this act or of the constitution of this State, or who, in any proceeding before the commission, knowingly makes any false statement or representation or with knowledge of its falsity files or causes to be filed with the commission any false statement or representation, which said statement or representation so made, filed, or caused to be filed may tend in any way to influence the commission to make an order authorizing the issue of any stock or stock certificate or any bond, note, or other evidence of indebtedness, or which results in procuring from the commission the making of any such order, or who, with knowledge that any false statement or representation was made to the commission in any proceeding tending in any way to influence the commission to make such order, issues or executes or negotiates, or causes to be issued, executed, or negotiated, any such stock or stock certificate or bond, note, or other evidence of indebtedness, or who, directly or indirectly, knowingly applies, or causes or assists to be applied, the proceeds, or any part thereof, from the sale of any stock or stock certificate or bond, note, or other evidence of indebtedness to any purpose not specified in the commission's order, or to any purpose specified in the commission's order in excess of the amount authorized for such purpose, or who, with knowledge that any stock or stock certificate or bond, note, or other evidence of indebtedness has been issued or executed in violation of any of the provisions of this act, negotiates, or causes the same to be negotiated, shall be guilty of a felony.

(g) No provision of this act, and no deed or act done or performed under or in connection therewith, shall be held or construed to obligate the State of California to pay or guarantee, in any manner whatsoever, any stock or stock certificate or bond, note, or other evidence of indebtedness authorized, issued, or executed under the provisions of this act.

(h) All stocks and stock certificates and bonds, notes, and other evidences of indebtedness issued by any public utility, after this act takes effect, upon the authority of any articles of incorporation or amendments thereto or vote of the stockholders or directors filed, taken, or had, or other proceedings taken or had, previous to the filing effect of this act, shall be void, unless an order of the commission authorizing the issue of such stocks or stock certificates or bonds, notes, or other evidences of indebtedness shall have been obtained from the commission prior to such issue. The commission may by its order impose such condition or conditions as it may deem reasonable and necessary.

SEC. 53. All hearings and investigations before the commission or any commissioner shall be governed by this act and by rules of practice and procedure to be adopted by the commission, and in the conduct thereof neither the commission nor any commissioner shall be bound by the technical rules of evidence. No informality in any proceeding or in the manner of taking testimony before the commission or any commissioner shall invalidate any order, decision, rule, or regulation made, approved, or confirmed by the commission.

SEC. 54. The commission and each commissioner shall have power to issue writs of summons, subpoenas, warrants of attachment, warrants of commitment, and all necessary process in proceedings for contempt in the like manner and to the same extent as courts of record. The process issued by the commission or any commissioner shall extend to all parts of the State and may be served by any person authorized to serve process of courts of record, or by any person designated for that purpose by the commission or a commissioner. The person executing any such process shall receive such compensation as may be allowed by the commission, not to exceed the fees now prescribed by law for similar services, and such fees shall be paid in the same manner as provided herein for payment of the fees of witnesses.

SEC. 55. (a) The commission and each commissioner shall have power to administer oaths, certify to all official acts, and to issue subpoenas for the attendance of witnesses and the production of papers, waybills, books, accounts, documents, and testimony in any inquiry, investigation, hearing, or proceeding in any part of the State. Each witness who shall appear by order of the commission or a commissioner shall receive for his attendance the same fees and mileage allowed by law to a witness in civil cases, which amount shall be paid by the party at whose request such witness is subpoenaed. When any witness who has not been required to attend at the request of any party shall be subpoenaed by the commission, his fees and mileage shall be paid from the funds appropriated for the use of the commission in the same manner as other expenses of the commission are paid. Any witness subpoenaed, except one whose fees and mileage may be paid from the funds of the commission, may, at the time of service, demand the fee to which he is entitled for travel to and from the place at which he is required to appear and one day's attendance. If such witness demands such fees at the time of service, and they are not at that time paid or tendered, he shall not be required to attend before the commission or commissioner as directed in the subpoena. All fees or mileage to which any witness is entitled under the provisions of this section may be collected by action therefor instituted by the person to whom such fees are payable. No witness furnished with free transportation shall receive mileage for the distance he may have traveled on such free transportation.

(b) The superior court in and for the county, or city and county, in which any inquiry, investigation, hearing, or proceeding may be held by the commission or any commissioner shall have the power to compel the attendance of witnesses, the giving of testimony, and the production of papers, including waybills, books, accounts, and documents, as required by any subpoena issued by the commission or any commissioner. The commission or the commissioner before whom the testimony is to be given or produced, in case of the refusal of any witness to attend or testify or produce any papers required by such subpoena, may report to the superior court in and for the county, or city and county, in which the proceeding is pending, by petition, setting forth that due notice has been given of the time and place of attendance of said witness, or the production of said papers, and that the witness has failed and refused to attend or produce the papers required by the subpoena, before the commission or commissioner, in the cause or proceeding named in the notice and subpoena, or has refused to answer questions propounded to him in the course of such proceeding, and ask an order of said court, compelling the witness to attend and testify or produce said papers before the commission. The court, upon the petition of the commission or such commissioner, shall enter an order directing the witness to appear before the court at a time and place to be fixed by the court in such order, the time to be not more than 10 days from the date of the order, and then and there show cause why he has not attended and testified or produced said papers before the commission. A copy of said order shall be served upon said witness. If it shall appear to the court that said subpoena was regularly issued by the commission or a commissioner the court shall thereupon enter an order that said witness appear before the commission or said commissioner at the time and place fixed in said order, and testify or produce the required papers, and upon failure to obey said order, said witness shall be dealt with as for contempt of court. The remedy provided in this subsection is cumulative, and shall not be construed to impair or interfere with the power of the commission or a commissioner to enforce the attendance of witnesses and the production of papers, and to punish for contempt in the same manner and to the same extent as courts of record.

(c) The commission or any commissioner or any party may, in any investigation or hearing before the commission, cause the deposition of witnesses residing within or without the State to be taken in the manner prescribed by law for like depositions in civil actions in the superior courts of this State, and to that end may compel the attendance of witnesses and the production of books, waybills, documents, papers, and accounts.

(d) No person shall be excused from testifying or from producing any book, waybill, document, paper, or account in any investigation or inquiry by or hearing before the commission or any commissioner, when ordered to do so, upon the ground that the testimony or evidence, book, waybill, document, paper, or account required of him may tend to incriminate him or subject him to penalty or forfeiture, but no person shall be prosecuted, punished, or subjected to any penalty or forfeiture for or on account of any act, transaction, matter, or thing concerning which he shall, under oath have testified or produced documentary evidence: Provided, That no person so testifying shall be exempt from prosecution or punishment for any perjury committed by him in his testimony. Nothing herein contained shall be construed as in any manner giving to any public utility immunity of any kind.

Sec. 56. (a) Copies of all official documents and orders filed or deposited according to law in the office of the commission, certified by a commissioner or by the secretary under the official seal of the commission to be true copies of the originals, shall be evidence in like manner as the originals.

(b) Every order, authorization or certificate issued or approved by the commission under any provision of sections 38, 39, 40, 41, 43, 50, 51, or 52 of this act shall be in writing and entered on the records of the commission. Any such order, authorization, or certificate, or a copy thereof, or a copy of the record of any such order, authorization, or certificate, certified by a commissioner or by the secretary under the official seal of the commission to be a true copy of the original order, authorization, certificate, or entry, may be recorded in the office of the recorder of any county, or city and county, in which is located the principal place of business of any public utility affected thereby, or in which is situated any property of any such public utility, and such record shall impart notice of its provisions to all persons. A certificate under the seal of the commission that any such order, authorization, or certificate has not been modified, stayed, suspended, or revoked may also be recorded in the same offices in the same manner and with like effect.

Sec. 57. The commission shall charge and collect the following fees: For copies of papers and records not required to be certified or otherwise authenticated by the commission, 10 cents for each folio; for certified copies of official documents and orders filed in its office, 15 cents for each folio and $1 for every certificate under seal affixed thereto; for certifying a copy of any report made by a public utility, $2; for each certified copy of the annual report of the commission, $1.50; for certified copies of evidence and proceedings before the commission, 15 cents for each folio; for certificate authorizing an issue of bonds, notes, or other evidences of indebtedness, $1 for each $1,000 of the face value of the authorized issue or fraction thereof up to $1,000,000, and 50 cents for each $1,000 over $1,000,000 and up to $10,000,000, and 25 cents for each $1,000 over $10,000,000, with a minimum fee in any case of $250: Provided, That no fee shall be required when such issue is made for the purpose of guaranteeing, taking over, refunding, discharging, or retiring any bond, note, or other evidence of indebtedness up to the amount of the issue guaranteed, taken over, refunded, discharged, or retired. No fees shall be charged or collected for copies of papers, records, or official documents furnished to public officers for use in their official capacity, or for the annual reports of the commission in the ordinary course of distribution, but the commission may fix reasonable charges for publications issued under its authority. All fees charged and collected under this section shall be paid at least once each week, accompanied by a detailed statement thereof, into the treasury of the State to the credit of a fund to be known as the railroad commission fund, which fund is hereby created.

Sec. 58. The commission, each commissioner, and each officer and person employed by the commission shall have the right, at any and all times, to inspect the accounts, books, papers, and documents of any public utility, and the commission, each commissioner, and any officer of the commission or any employee authorized to administer oaths shall have power to examine under oath any officer, agent, or employee of such public utility in relation to the business and affairs of said public utility: Provided, That any person other than a commissioner or an officer of the commission demanding such inspection shall produce, under the hand and seal of the commission, his authority to make such inspection: And provided further, That a written record of the testimony or statement so given under oath shall be made and filed with the commission.

Sec. 59. The commission may require, by order served on any public utility in the manner provided herein for the service of orders, the production within this State at such time and place as it may designate, of any books, accounts, papers, or records kept by said public utility in any office or place without this State, or, at its option, verified copies in lieu thereof, so that an examination thereof may be made by the commission or under its direction.

Sec. 60. Complaint may be made by the commission of its own motion or by any corporation or person, chamber of commerce, board of trade, or any civic, commercial, mercantile, traffic, agricultural, or manufacturing association or organization, or any body politic or municipal corporation, by petition or complaint in writing, setting forth any act or thing done or omitted to be done by any public utility, including any rule, regulation, or charge heretofore established or fixed by or for any public utility, in violation, or claimed to be in violation, of any provision of law or of any order or rule of the commission: Provided, That no complaint shall be entertained by the commission, except upon its own motion, as to the reasonableness of any rates or charges of any gas, electrical, water, or telephone corporation, unless the same be signed by the mayor or the president or chairman of the board of trustees or a majority of the council, commission, or other legislative body of the city and county, or city or town, if any, within which the alleged violation occurred, or not less than 25 consumers or purchasers or prospective consumers or purchasers, of such gas, electricity, water, or telephone service. All matters upon which complaint may be founded may be joined in one hearing, and no motion shall be entertained against a complaint for misjoinder of causes of action or grievances or misjoinder or nonjoinder of parties: and in any review by the courts of orders or decisions of the commission the same rule shall apply with regard to the joinder of causes and parties as herein provided. The commission shall not be required to dismiss any complaint because of the absence of direct damage to the complainant. Upon the filing of a complaint the commission shall cause a copy thereof to be served upon the corporation or person complained of. Service in all hearings, investigations, and proceedings pending before the commission may be made upon any person upon whom a summons may be served in accordance with the provisions of the Code of Civil Procedure of this State, and may be made personally or by mailing in a sealed envelope, registered, with postage prepaid. The commission shall fix the time when and place where a hearing will be had upon the complaint, and shall serve notice thereof, not less than 10 days before the time set for such hearing, unless the commission shall find that public necessity requires that such hearing be held at an earlier date.

Sec. 61. (a) At the time fixed for any hearing before the commission or a commissioner, or the time to which the same may have been continued, the complainant and the corporation or person complained of, and such corporations or persons as the commission may allow to intervene, shall be entitled to be heard and to introduce evidence. The commission shall issue process to enforce the attendance of all necessary witnesses. After the conclusion of the hearing the commission shall make and file its order containing its decision. A copy of such order, certified under the seal of the commission, shall be served upon the corporation or person complained of or his or its attorney. Said order shall, of its own force, take effect and become operative 20 days after the service thereof, except as otherwise provided, and shall continue in force either for a period which may be designated therein or until changed or abrogated by the commission. If an order can not, in the judgment of the commission, be complied with within 20 days, the commission may grant and prescribe such additional time as in its judgment is reasonably necessary to comply with the order, and may, on application and for good cause shown, extend the time for compliance fixed in its order. A full and complete record of all proceedings had before the commission or any commissioner on any formal hearing had and all testimony shall be taken down by a reporter appointed by the commission, and the parties shall be entitled to be heard in person or by attorney. In case of an action to review any order or decision of the commission, a transcript of such testimony, together with all exhibits or copies thereof introduced and all information secured by the commission on its own initiative and considered by it in rendering its order or decision, and of the pleadings, record, and proceedings in the cause shall constitute the record of the commission: Provided, That on review of an order or decision of the commission the petitioner and the commission may stipulate that a certain question or questions alone and a specified portion only of the evidence shall be certified to the supreme court for its judgment, whereupon such stipulation and the question or questions and the evidence therein specified shall constitute the record on review.

Sec. 62. Any public utility shall have a right to complain on any of the grounds upon which complaints are allowed to be filed by other parties, and the same procedure shall be adopted and followed as in other cases, except that the complaint may be heard ex parte by the commission or may be served upon any parties designated by the commission.

Sec. 63. (a) No public utility shall raise any rate, fare, toll, rental, or charge or so alter any classification, contract, practice, rule, or regulation as to result in an increase in any rate, fare, toll, rental, or charge, under any circumstances whatsoever, except upon a showing before the commission and a finding by the commission that such increase is justified.

or regulations proposed, in whole or in part, or others in lieu thereof, which it shall find to be just and reasonable. All such rates, fares, tolls, rentals, charges, classifications, contracts, practices, rules, or regulations not so suspended shall, on the expiration of 30 days from the time of filing the same with the commission, or at such lesser time as the commission may grant, go into effect and be the established and effective rates, fares, tolls, rentals, charges, classifications, contracts, practices, rules, and regulations, subject to the power of the commission, after a hearing had on its own motion or upon complaint, as herein provided, to alter or modify the same.

SEC. 64. The commission may at any time, upon notice to the public utility affected, and after opportunity to be heard as provided in the case of complaints, rescind, alter, or amend any order or decision made by it. Any order rescinding, altering, or amending a prior order or decision shall, when served upon the public utility affected, have the same effect as is herein provided for original orders or decisions.

SEC. 65. In all collateral actions or proceedings the orders and decisions of the commission which have become final shall be conclusive.

SEC. 66. After any order or decision has been made by the commission, any party to the action or proceeding, or any stockholder or bondholder or other party peculiarly interested in the public utility affected, may apply for a rehearing in respect to any matters determined in said action or proceeding and specified in the application for rehearing, and the commission may grant and hold such rehearing on said matters if in its judgment sufficient reason therefor be made to appear. No cause of action arising out of any order or decision of the commission shall accrue in any court to any corporation or person unless such corporation or person shall have made, before the effective date of said order or decision, application to the commission for a rehearing. Such application shall set forth specifically the ground or grounds on which the applicant considers said decision or order to be unlawful. No corporation or person shall in any court urge or rely on any ground not so set forth in said application. Any application for a rehearing made 10 days or more before the effective date of the order as to which a rehearing is sought shall be either granted or denied before such effective date or the order shall stand suspended until such application is granted or denied. Any application for a rehearing made within less than 10 days before the effective date of the order as to which a rehearing is sought, and not granted within 20 days, may be taken by the party making the application to be denied, unless the effective date of the order is extended for the period of the pendency of the application. If any application for a rehearing be granted without a suspension of the order involved, the commission shall forthwith proceed to hear the matter with all dispatch and shall determine the same within 20 days after final submission, and if such determination is not made within said time, it may be taken by any party to the rehearing that the order involved is affirmed. An application for rehearing shall not excuse any corporation or person from complying with and obeying any order or decision or any requirement of any order or decision of the commission theretofore made or operate in any manner to stay or postpone the enforcement thereof, except in such cases and upon such terms as the commission may by order direct. If, after such rehearing and a consideration of all the facts, including those arising since the making of the order or decision, the commission shall be of the opinion that the original order or decision or any part thereof is in any respect unjust or unwarranted or should be changed, the commission may abrogate, change, or modify the same. An order or decision made after such rehearing abrogating, changing, or modifying the original order or decision shall have the same force and effect as an original order or decision, but shall not affect any right or the enforcement of any right arising from or by virtue of the original order or decision unless so ordered by the commission.

SEC. 67. Within 30 days after the application for a rehearing is denied, or, if the application is granted, then within 30 days after the rendition of the decision on rehearing, the applicant may apply to the supreme court of this State for a writ of certiorari or review (hereinafter referred to as a writ of review) for the purpose of having the lawfulness of the original order or decision or the order or decision on rehearing inquired into and determined. Such writ shall be made returnable not later than 30 days after the date of the issuance thereof, and shall direct the commission to certify its record in the case to the court. On the return day the cause shall be heard by the supreme court, unless for a good reason shown the same be continued. No new or additional evidence may be introduced in the supreme court, but the cause shall be heard on the record of the commission as certified to by it. The review shall not be extended further than to determine whether the commission has regularly pursued its authority, including a determination of whether the order or decision under review violates any right of the petitioner under the Constitution of the United States or of the State of California. The findings and conclusions of the commission on questions of fact shall be final and shall not be subject to review; such questions of fact shall include ultimate facts and the findings and conclusions of the commission on reasonableness and discrimination. The commission and each party to the action or proceeding before the commission shall have the right to appear in the review proceeding. Upon the hearing the supreme court shall enter judgment either affirming or setting aside the order or decision of the commission. The provisions of the code of civil procedure of this State relating to writs of review shall, so far as applicable and not in conflict with the provisions of this act, apply to proceedings instituted in the supreme court under the provisions of this section. No court of this State (except the supreme court to the extent herein specified) shall have jurisdiction to review, reverse, correct, or annul any order or decision of the commission or to suspend or delay the execution or operation thereof, or to enjoin, restrain, or interfere with the commission in the performance of its official duties: Provided, That the writ of mandamus shall lie from the supreme court to the commission in all proper cases.

SEC. 68. (a) The pendency of a writ of review shall not of itself stay or suspend the operation of the order or decision of the commission, but during the pendency of such writ the supreme court, in its discretion, may stay or suspend, in whole or in part, the operation of the commission's order or decision.

(c) In case the order or decision of the commission is stayed or suspended the order of the court shall not become effective until a suspending bond shall first have been executed and filed with, and approved by the commission (or approved, on review, by the supreme court), payable to the people of the State of California, and sufficient in amount and security to insure the prompt payment, by the party petitioning for the review, of all damages caused by the delay in the enforcement of the order or decision of the commission, and of all moneys which any person or corporation may be compelled to pay, pending the review proceedings, for transportation, transmission, product, commodity, or service in excess of the charges fixed by the order or decision of the commission, in case said order or decision is sustained. The supreme court, in case it stays or suspends the order or decision of the commission in any matter affecting rates, fares, tolls, rentals, charges, or classifications, shall also by order direct the public utility affected to pay into court, from time to time, there to be impounded until the final decision of the case, or into some bank or trust company paying interest on deposits, under such conditions as the court may prescribe, all sums of money which it may collect from any corporation or person in excess of the sum such corporation or person would have been compelled to pay if the order or decision of the commission had not been stayed or suspended.

(d) In case the supreme court stays or suspends any order or decision lowering any rate, fare, toll, rental, charge, or classification, the commission, upon the execution and approval of said suspending bond, shall forthwith require the public utility affected, under penalty of the immediate enforcement of the order or decision of the commission (pending the review and notwithstanding the suspending order), to keep such accounts, verified by oath, as may, in the judgment of the commission, suffice to show the amounts being charged or received by such public utility, pending the review, in excess of the charges allowed by the order or decision of the commission, together with the names and addresses of the corporations or persons to whom overcharges will be refundable in case the charges made by the public utility, pending the review, be not sustained by the supreme court. The court may, from time to time, require said party petitioning for a review to give additional security on, or to increase the said suspending bond, whenever in the opinion of the court the same may be necessary to insure the prompt payment of said damages and said overcharges. Upon the final decision by the supreme court all moneys which the public utility may have collected, pending the appeal in excess of those authorized by such final decision, together with interest, in case the court ordered the deposit of such moneys in a bank or trust company, shall be promptly paid to the corporations or persons entitled thereto, in such manner and through such methods of distribution as may be prescribed by the commission. If any such moneys shall not have been claimed by the corporations or persons entitled thereto within one year from the final decision of the supreme court, the commission shall cause notice to such corporations or persons to be given by publication, once a week for two successive weeks, in a newspaper of general circulation, printed and published in the city and county of San Francisco, and such other newspaper or newspapers as may be designated by the commission, said notice to state the names of the corporations or persons entitled to such moneys and the amount due each corporation or person. All moneys not claimed within three months after the publication of said notice shall be paid by the public utility, under the direction of the commission, into the State treasury for the benefit of the general fund.

SEC. 69. All actions and proceedings under this act, and all actions or proceedings to which the commission or the people of the State of California may be parties, and in which any question arises under this act, or under or concerning any order or decision of the commission, shall be preferred over all other civil causes except election causes and shall be heard and determined in preference to all other civil business except election causes, irrespective of position on the calendar. The same preference shall be granted upon application of the attorney of the commission in any action or proceeding in which he may be allowed to intervene.

SEC. 70. For the purpose of ascertaining the matters and things specified in section 47 of this act, concerning the value of the property of public utilities, the commission may cause a hearing or hearings to be held at such time or times and place or places as the commission may designate. Before any hearing is had the commission shall give the public utility affected thereby at least 30 days' written notice, specifying the time and place of such hearing, and such notice shall be sufficient to authorize the commission to inquire into the matters designated in this section and in said section 47 of this act, but this provision shall not prevent the commission from making any preliminary examination or investigation into the matters herein referred to, or from inquiring into such matters in any other investigation or hearing. All public utilities affected shall be entitled to be heard and to introduce evidence at such hearing or hearings. The commission is empowered to resort to any other source of information available. The evidence introduced at such hearing shall be reduced to writing and certified under the seal of the commission. The commission shall make and file its findings of fact in writing upon all matters concerning which evidence shall have been introduced before it which in its judgment have bearing on the value of the property of the public utility affected. Such findings shall be subject to review by the supreme court of this State in the same manner and within the same time as other orders and decisions of the commission. The findings of the commission so made and filed, when properly certified under the seal of the commission, shall be admissible in evidence in any action, proceeding, or hearing before the commission or any court, in which the commission, the State, or any officer, department, or institution thereof, or any county, city and county, municipality, or other body politic and the public utility affected may be interested whether arising under the provisions of this act or otherwise, and such findings, when so introduced, shall be conclusive evidence of the facts therein stated as of the date therein stated under conditions then existing, and such facts can only be controverted by showing a subsequent change in conditions bearing upon the facts therein determined. The commission may, from time to time, cause further hearings and investigations to be had for the purpose of making revaluations or ascertaining the value of any betterments, improvements, additions, or extensions made by any public utility subsequent to any prior hearing or investigation, and may examine into all matters which may change, modify, or affect any finding of fact previously made, and may at such time make findings of fact supplementary to those theretofore made. Such hearings shall be had upon the same notice and be conducted in the same manner, and the findings so made shall have the same force and effect as is provided herein for such original notice, hearing, and findings: Provided, That such findings made at such supplemental hearings or investigations shall be considered in connection with and as a part of the original findings except in so far as such supplemental findings shall change or modify the findings made at the original hearing or investigation.

SEC. 71. (a) When complaint has been made to the commission concerning any rate, fare, toll, rental, or charge for any product or commodity furnished or service performed by any public utility, and the commission has found, after investigation, that the public utility has charged an excessive or discriminatory amount for such product, commodity, or service, the commission may order that the public utility make due reparation to the complainant therefor, with interest from the date of collection: Provided, No discrimination will result from such reparation.

(b) If the public utility does not comply with the order for the payment of reparation within the time specified in such order, suit may be instituted in any court of competent jurisdiction to recover the same. All complaints concerning excessive or discriminatory charges shall be filed with the commission within two years from the time the cause of action accrues, and the petition for the enforcement of the order shall be filed in the court within one year from the date of the order of the commission. The remedy in this section provided shall be cumulative and in addition to any other remedy or remedies in this act provided in case of failure of a public utility to obey an order or decision of the commission.

SEC. 72. It is hereby made the duty of the commission to see that the provisions of the constitution and statutes of this State affecting public utilities, the enforcement of which is not specifically vested in some other officer or tribunal, are enforced and obeyed, and that violations thereof are promptly prosecuted and penalties due the State therefor recovered and collected, and to this end it may sue in the name of the people of the State of California. Upon the request of the commission it shall be the duty of the attorney general or the district attorney of the proper county or city and county to aid in any investigation, hearing, or trial had under the provisions of this act, and to institute and prosecute actions or proceedings for the enforcement of the provisions of the constitution and statutes of this State affecting public utilities and for the punishment of all violations thereof.

SEC. 73. (a) In case any public utility shall do, cause to be done, or permit to be done any act, matter, or thing prohibited, forbidden, or declared to be unlawful, or shall omit to do any act, matter, or thing required to be done, either by the constitution, any law of this State, or any order or decision of the commission, such public utility shall be liable to the persons or corporations affected thereby for all loss, damages, or injury caused thereby or resulting therefrom, and if the court shall find that the act or omission was willful, the court may, in addition to the actual damages, award damages for the sake of example and by way of punishment. An action to recover for such loss, damage, or injury may be brought in any court of competent jurisdiction by any corporation or person.

(b) No recovery as in this section provided shall in any manner affect a recovery by the State of the penalties in this act provided or the exercise by the commission of its power to punish for contempt.

SEC. 74. (a) This act shall not have the effect to release or waive any right of action by the State, the commission, or any person or corporation for any right, penalty, or forfeiture which may have arisen or accrued, or may hereafter arise or accrue, under any law of this State.

SEC. 75. Whenever the commission shall be of the opinion that any public utility is failing or omitting, or about to fail or omit, to do anything required of it by law, or by any order, decision, rule, direction, or requirement of the commission, or is doing anything, or about to do anything, or permitting anything or about to permit anything to be done contrary to or in violation of law or of any order, decision, rule, direction, or requirement of the commission, it shall direct the attorney of the commission to commence an action or proceeding in the superior court in and for the county, or city and county, in which the cause or some part thereof arose, or in which the corporation complained of, if any, has its principal place of business, or in which the person, if any, complained of resides, in the name of the people of the State of California, for the purpose of having such violations or threatened violations stopped and prevented, either by mandamus or injunction. The attorney of the commission shall thereupon begin such action or proceeding by petition to such superior court, alleging the violation or threatened violation complained of, and praying for appropriate relief by way of mandamus or injunction. It shall thereupon be the duty of the court to specify a time, not exceeding 20 days after the service of the copy of the petition, within which the public utility complained of must answer the petition, and in the meantime said public utility may be restrained. In case of default in answer, or after answer, the court shall immediately inquire into the facts and circumstances of the case. Such corporations or persons as the court may deem necessary or proper to be joined as parties in order to make its judgment, order, or writ effective may be joined as parties. The final judgment in any such action or proceeding shall either dismiss the action or proceeding or direct that the writ of mandamus or injunction issue or be made permanent as prayed for in the petition, or in such modified or other form as will afford appropriate relief. An appeal may be taken to the supreme court from such final judgment in the same manner and with the same effect, subject to the provisions of this act, as appeals are taken from judgments of the superior court in other actions for mandamus or injunction.

SEC. 76. (a) Any public utility which violates or fails to comply with any provision of the constitution of this State or of this act, or which fails, omits, or neglects to obey, observe, or comply with any order, decision, decree, rule, direction, demand, or requirement, or any part or provision thereof, of the commission, in a case in which a penalty has not hereinbefore been provided for such public utility, is subject to a penalty of not less than $500 nor more than $2,000 for each and every offense.

(b) Every violation of the provisions of this act or of any order, decision, decree, rule, direction, demand, or requirement of the commission, or any part or portion thereof, by any corporation or person is a separate and distinct offense, and in case of a continuing violation each day's continuance thereof shall be and be deemed to be a separate and distinct offense.

(c) In construing and enforcing the provisions of this act relating to penalties, the act, omission, or failure of any officer, agent, or employee of any public utility, acting within the scope of his official duties or employment, shall in every case be and be deemed to be the act, omission, or failure of such public utility.

SEC. 77. Every officer, agent, or employee of any public utility who violates or fails to comply with, or who procures, aids, or abets any violation by any public utility of any provision of the constitution of this State or of this act, or who fails to obey, observe, or comply with any order, decision, rule, direction, demand, or requirement, or any part or provision thereof, of the commission, or who procures, aids, or abets any public utility in its failure to obey, observe, and comply with any such order, decision, rule, direction, demand, or requirement, or any part or provision thereof, in a case in which a penalty has not hereinbefore been provided for such officer, agent, or employee, is guilty of a misdemeanor and is punishable by a fine not exceeding $1,000, or by imprisonment in a county jail not exceeding one year, or by both such fine and imprisonment.

SEC. 78. Every corporation other than a public utility which violates any provision of this act, or which fails to obey, observe, or comply with any order, decision, rule, direction, demand, or requirement, or any part or provision thereof, of the commission, in a case in which a penalty has not hereinbefore been provided for such corporation, is subject to a penalty of not less than $500 nor more than $2,000 for each and every offense.

SEC. 79. Every person who, either individually or acting as an officer, agent, or employee of a corporation other than a public utility, violates any provision of this act or fails to obey, observe, or comply with any order, decision, rule, direction, demand, or requirement, or any part or portion thereof, of the commission, or who procures, aids, or abets any such public utility in its violation of this act or in its failure to obey, observe, or comply with any such order, decision, rule, direction, demand, or requirement, or any part or portion thereof, in a case in which a penalty has not hereinbefore been provided for such person is guilty of a misdemeanor, and is punishable by a fine not exceeding $1,000, or by imprisonment in a county jail not exceeding one year, or by both such fine and imprisonment.

SEC. 80. Actions to recover penalties under this act shall be brought in the name of the people of the State of California in the superior court in and for the county, or city and county, in which the cause or some part thereof arose, or in which the corporation complained of, if any, has its principal place of business, or in which the person, if any, complained of, resides. Such action shall be commenced and prosecuted to final judgment by the attorney of the commission. In any such action all penalties incurred up to the time of commencing the same may be sued for and recovered. In all such actions the procedure and rules of evidence shall be the same as in ordinary civil actions, except as otherwise herein provided. All fines and penalties recovered by the State in any such action, together with the costs thereof, shall be paid into the State treasury to the credit of the general fund. Any such action may be compromised or discontinued on application of the commission upon such terms as the court shall approve and order.

SEC. 81. Every public utility, corporation, or person which shall fail to obey, observe, or comply with any order, decision, rule, regulation, direction, demand, or requirement, or any part or portion thereof, of the commission or any commissioner shall be in contempt of the commission, and shall be punishable by the commission for contempt in the same manner and to the same extent as contempt is punished by courts of record. The remedy prescribed in this section shall not be a bar to or affect any other remedy prescribed in this act, but shall be cumulative and in addition to such other remedy or remedies.

SEC. 82. This act shall not affect such powers of control over any public utility vested in any city and county or incorporated city or town as at an election to be held pursuant to laws to be hereafter passed by the legislature, a majority of the qualified electors voting thereon of such city and county, or incorporated city or town, shall vote to retain, and until such election such powers shall continue unimpaired in such city and county or incorporated city or town; but if the vote so taken shall not favor the continuation of such powers they shall thereafter vest in the commission: Provided, That where any such city and county or incorporated city or town shall have elected to continue any powers respecting public utilities it may, by a vote of a majority of its qualified electors voting thereon, thereafter surrender such powers to the commission in the manner to be prescribed by the legislature; or if such municipal corporation shall have surrendered any powers to the commission it may by like vote thereafter reinvest itself with such power.

SEC. 83. (a) This act shall not affect pending actions or proceedings brought by or against the people of the State of California or the commission, or by any other person or corporation under the provisions of chapters 20 or 386 of the laws of 1911, but the same may be prosecuted and defended with the same effect as though this act had not been passed. Any investigation, hearing, or examination undertaken, commenced, instituted, or prosecuted prior to the taking effect of this act may be conducted and continued to a final determination in the same manner and with the same effect as if it had been undertaken, commenced, instituted, or prosecuted in accordance with the provisions of this act. All proceedings hitherto taken by the commission in any such investigation, hearing, or examination are hereby ratified, approved, validated, and confirmed, and all such proceedings shall have the same force and effect as if they had been undertaken, commenced, instituted, and prosecuted under the provisions of this act and in the manner herein prescribed.

(b) No cause of action arising under the provisions of chapters 20 or 386 of the laws of 1911 shall abate by reason of the passage of this act, whether a suit or action has been instituted thereon at the time of the taking effect of this act or not, but actions may be brought upon such causes in the same manner, under the same terms and conditions, and with the same effect as though said chapters had not been repealed.

(c) All orders, decisions, rules, or regulations heretofore made, issued, or promulgated by the commission shall continue in force and have the same effect as though they had been lawfully made, issued, or promulgated under the provisions of this act.

(d) This act, in so far as it embraces the same subject matter, shall be construed as a continuation of chapter 20 of the Laws of 1911, approved February 10, 1911, and chapter 386 of the Laws of 1911, approved April 6, 1911.

SEC. 84. If any section, subsection, sentence, clause, or phrase of this act is for any reason held to be unconstitutional, such decision shall not affect the validity of the remaining portions of this act. The legislature hereby declares that it would have passed this act, and each section, subsection, sentence, clause, and phrase thereof, irrespective of the fact that any one or more other sections, subsections, sentences, clauses, or phrases be declared unconstitutional.

SEC. 85. Neither this act nor any provision thereof, except when specifically so stated, shall apply or be construed to apply to commerce with foreign nations or commerce among the several States of this Union, except in so far as the same may be permitted under the provisions of the Constitution of the United States and the acts of Congress.

SEC. 86. All moneys which are paid into the State treasury by the commission up to and including the 30th day of June, 1913, under the provisions of section 57 of this act and credited to the railroad-commission fund are hereby appropriated to be used by the commission in carrying out the provisions of this act, and the controller is hereby directed to draw his warrant on said fund from time to time in favor of the commission for the amounts expended under its direction, and the treasurer is hereby authorized and directed to pay the same.

SEC. 87. The railroad-commission act approved February 10, 1911, and the act entitled "An act to amend the railroad-commission act by amending section 15 thereof, relating to powers and duties of the railroad commission of the State of California, and to amend section 37 thereof, relating to free and reduced-rate transportation for freight and passengers," approved April 6, 1911, and all acts or parts of acts inconsistent with the provisions of this act are hereby repealed.

SEC. 88. This act shall take effect 90 days after the final adjournment of this session of the legislature.

EXHIBIT E.

COPIES OF RIGHT-OF-WAY STATUTES—RIGHT-OF-WAY ACT OF 1866.

The act of July 26, 1866 (14 Stat. L. 253), was entitled "An act granting the right of way to ditch and canal owners over the public lands, and for other purposes."

This legislation has since been embodied in the Revised Statutes as sections 2339 and 2340, which provide:

"SEC. 2339. Whenever, by priority of possession, rights to the use of water for mining, agricultural, manufacturing, or other purposes, have vested and accrued, and the same are recognized and acknowledged by the local customs, laws, and decisions of courts, the possessors and owners of such vested rights shall be maintained and protected in the same; and the right of way for the construction of ditches and canals for the purposes herein specified is acknowledged and confirmed; but whenever any person, in the construction of any ditch or canal injures or damages the possession of any settler on the public domain, the party committing such injury or damage shall be liable to the party injured for such injury or damage.

"SEC. 2340. All patents granted or preemption or homesteads allowed shall be subject to any vested and accrued water rights or rights to ditches and reservoirs used in connection with such water rights, as may have been acquired under or recognized by the preceding section."

RIGHT-OF-WAY ACT OF MARCH 3, 1891.

Sections 18 to 21, inclusive, of this act provide:

"SEC. 18. That the right of way through the public lands and reservations of the United States is hereby granted to any canal or ditch company formed for the purpose of irrigation and duly organized under the laws of any State or Territory, which shall have filed or may hereafter file with the Secretary of the Interior a copy of its articles of incorporation, and due proofs of its organization under the same, to the extent of the ground occupied by the water of the reservoir and of the canal and its laterals, and 50 feet on each side of the marginal limits thereof; also, the right to take from the public lands adjacent to the line of the canal or ditch material, earth, and stone necessary for the construction of such canal or ditch: Provided, That no such right of way shall be so located as to interfere with the proper occupation by the Government of any such reservation, and all maps of location shall be subject to the approval of the department of the Government having jurisdiction of such reservation, and the privilege herein granted shall not be construed to interfere with the control of water for irrigation and other purposes under authority of the respective States or Territories.

"SEC. 19. That any canal or ditch company desiring to secure the benefits of this act shall within 12 months after the location of 10 miles of its canal, if the same be upon surveyed lands and if upon unsurveyed lands, within 12 months after the survey thereof by the United States, file with the register of the land office for the district where such land is located a map of its canal or ditch and reservoir; and upon the approval thereof by the Secretary of the Interior the same shall be noted upon the plats in said office, and thereafter all such lands over which such rights of way shall pass shall be disposed of subject to such right of way. Whenever any person or corporation, in the construction of any canal, ditch, or reservoir, injures or damages the possession of any settler on the public domain, the party committing such injury or damage shall be liable to the party injured for such injury or damage.

"SEC. 20. That the provisions of this act shall apply to all canals, ditches, or reservoirs heretofore or hereafter constructed, whether constructed by corporations, individuals, or association of individuals, on the filing of the certificates and maps herein provided for. If such ditch, canal, or reservoir has been or shall be constructed by an individual or association of individuals, it shall be sufficient for such individual or association of individuals to file with the Secretary of the Interior and with the register of the land office where said land is located a map of the line of such canal, ditch, or reservoir, as in case of a corporation, with the name of the individual owner or owners thereof, together with the articles of association, if any there be. Plats heretofore filed shall have the benefits of this act from the date of their filing, as though filed under it: Provided, That if any section of said canal or ditch shall not be completed within five years after the location of said section, the rights herein granted shall be forfeited as to any uncompleted section of said canal, ditch, or reservoir, to the extent that the same is not completed at the date of the forfeiture.

"SEC. 21. That nothing in this act shall authorize such canal or ditch company to occupy such right of way except for the purpose of said canal or ditch, and then only so far as may be necessary for the construction, maintenance, and care of said canal or ditch."

NOTE.—It was held by the United States Supreme Court, under the railroad right-of-way act of March 3, 1875 (18 Stat. L., 482), that construction is equivalent for every purpose to the filing and approval of maps and plats. The two acts are practically identical in language, and therefore the Department of the Interior has held repeatedly that actual construction under the foregoing act vests in irrigation companies complete legal title to their rights of way in advance of and irrespective of the filing or approval of any plats or maps. (See Jamestown & Northern Railroad Co. v. Jones (177 U. S., 125), De Weese v. Henry Investment Co. (39 L. D., 27).)

RIGHT-OF-WAY ACT OF JANUARY 21, 1895.

(28 Stat. L., 635.)

That the Secretary of the Interior be, and hereby is, authorized and empowered, under general regulations to be fixed by him, to permit the use of the right of way through the public lands of the United States not within the limits of any park, forest, military, or Indian reservation for tramroads, canals, or reservoirs, to the extent of the ground occupied by the water of the canals and reservoirs and 50 feet on each side of the marginal limits thereof, or 50 feet on each side of the center line of the tramroad, by any citizen or any association of citizens of the United States engaged in the business of mining or quarrying or of cutting timber and manufacturing lumber.

RIGHT-OF-WAY ACT OF MAY 14, 1896.

(29 Stat. L., 120.)

That the act entitled "An act to permit the use of the right of way through the public lands for tramroads, canals, and reservoirs, and for other purposes," approved January 21, 1895, be, and the same is hereby, amended by adding thereto the following:

"SEC. 2. That the Secretary of the Interior be, and hereby is, authorized and empowered, under general regulations to be fixed by him, to permit the use of rights of way to the extent of 25 feet, together with the use of necessary ground, not exceeding 40 acres, upon the public lands and forest reservations of the United States by any citizen or association of citizens of the United States, for the purpose of generating, manufacturing, or distributing electric power."

RIGHT-OF-WAY ACT OF MAY 11, 1898.

That the act entitled "An act to permit the use of the right of way through the public lands for tramroads, canals, and reservoirs, and for other purposes," approved January 21, 1895, be, and the same is hereby, amended by adding thereto the following:

"That the Secretary of the Interior be, and hereby is, authorized and empowered, under general regulations to be fixed by him, to permit the use of rights of way upon the public lands of the United States not within the limits of any park, forest, military, or Indian reservations, for tramways, canals, or reservoirs, to the extent of the ground occupied by the water canals and reservoirs and 50 feet on each side of the marginal limits thereof, or 50 feet on each side of the center line of the tramroad, by any citizen or association of citizens of the United States, for the purposes of furnishing water for domestic, public, and other beneficial uses.

"SEC. 2. That the rights of way for ditches, canals, or reservoirs heretofore or hereafter approved under the provisions of sections 18, 19, 20, and 21 of the act entitled 'An act to repeal timber-culture laws, and for other purposes,' approved March 3, 1891, may be used for purposes of a public nature; and said rights of way may be used for purposes of water transportation, for domestic purposes, or for the development of power as subsidiary to the main purpose of irrigation."

(31 Stat. L., 790.)

That the Secretary of the Interior be, and hereby is, authorized and empowered, under general regulations to be fixed by him, to permit the use of rights of way through the public lands, forest, and other reservations of the United States, and the Yosemite, Sequoia, and General Grant National Parks, Cal., for electrical plants, poles, and lines for the generation and distribution of electrical power, and for telephone and telegraph purposes, and for canals, ditches, pipes and pipe lines, flumes, tunnels, or other water conduits, and for water plants, dams, and reservoirs used to promote irrigation or mining or quarrying, or the manufacturing or cutting of timber or lumber, or the supplying of water for domestic, public, or any other beneficial uses to the extent of the ground occupied by such canals, ditches, flumes, tunnels, reservoirs, or other water conduits or water plants, or electrical or other works permitted hereunder, and not to exceed 50 feet on each side of the marginal limits thereof, or not to exceed 50 feet on each side of the center line of such pipes and pipe lines, electrical, telegraph, and telephone lines and poles, by any citizen, association, or corporation of the United States, where it is intended by such to exercise the use permitted hereunder or any one or more of the purposes herein named: Provided, That such permits shall be allowed within or through any of said parks or any forest, military, Indian, or other reservation only upon the approval of the chief officer of the department under whose supervision such park or reservation falls and upon a finding by him that the same is not incompatible with the public interest: Provided further, That all permits given hereunder for telegraph or telephone purposes shall be subject to the provision of title 65 of the Revised Statutes of the United States, and amendments thereto, regulating rights of way for telegraph companies over the public domain: And provided further, That any permission given by the Secretary of the Interior under the provisions of this act may be revoked by him or his successor in his discretion, and shall not be held to confer any right or easement, or interest in, to, or over any public land, reservation, or park.

RIGHT-OF-WAY ACT OF FEBRUARY 1, 1905.

(33 Stat. L., 628.)

This is the Forest Service transfer act, which transferred that service from the Department of the Interior to the Department of Agriculture. Section 4 of the act provides:

"SEC. 4. That rights of way for the construction and maintenance of dams, reservoirs, water plants, ditches, flumes, pipes, tunnels, and canals within and across the forest reserves of the United States are hereby granted to citizens and corporations of the United States for municipal or mining purposes and for the purposes of the milling and reduction of ores during the period of their beneficial use under such rules and regulations as may be prescribed by the Secretary of the Interior and subject to the laws of the State or Territory in which said reserves are respectively situated."

WATER-RIGHT ACT OF MARCH 3, 1877.

(19 Stat. L., 377.)

The first section provided for the preemption of desert lands. It then provided:

"Provided, however, That the right to the use of the water by the person so taking the same on or to any tract of desert land of 640 acres shall depend upon bona fide prior appropriation, and such right shall not exceed the actual amount of water appropriated and necessarily used for the purposes of irrigation and reclamation.

"And all surplus water over and above such actual appropriation and use, together with the water of all lakes, rivers, and other sources of supply upon the public lands and not available, shall remain and be held free for the appropriation and use of the public for irrigation, mining, and manufacturing purposes, subject to existing rights."

WATER RIGHTS WITHIN FOREST RESERVATIONS.

The Forest Service administration act of June 4, 1897 (30 Stat. L., 11, 36), provides:
 "All waters on such reservations may be used for domestic, mining, milling, or irrigation purposes under the laws of the State wherein such forest reservations are situated or under the laws of the United States and the rules and regulations established thereunder."

Mr. HAYES. Mr. Chairman—

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from California is recognized.

Mr. HAYES. Mr. Chairman—

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, how did the gentleman from California [Mr. HAYES] get the floor?

The CHAIRMAN. I recognized him.

Mr. MANN. The Chair has not the right to recognize two gentlemen on the same side of the question.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair was not informed as to how the gentleman from California [Mr. HAYES] stood. Is the gentleman from California opposed to the bill?

Mr. HAYES. No; I am in favor of the bill.

Mr. FERRIS. Mr. Chairman, I desire to make the motion that the committee do now rise. It is apparent that we shall not finish the bill to-night, and I understand that a number of gentlemen on the other side want to be heard. I move that the committee do now rise.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. Sisson, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that committee had had under consideration the bill (H. R. 12572) for the relief of the Hydro-Electric Co. of California, and had come to no resolution thereon.

Mr. PALMER. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House do now adjourn.

ARGUMENT ON INJUNCTION IN LABOR DISPUTES BEFORE JUDICIARY COMMITTEE, 1904.

Mr. HUGHES of New Jersey. Mr. Speaker, pending that motion, I desire to submit the following statement on the subject of injunction legislation.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New Jersey asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. HUGHES of New Jersey. This is the statement:

STATEMENT OF MR. A. FURUSETH, REPRESENTING THE INTERNATIONAL SEAMEN'S UNION OF AMERICA.

"Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the committee, the contention that has been brought here and which I am here now to dispute is that there is a property right in labor.

"This bill and the hearings thereon bring to your attention a conflict which is but another phase of that oldest of struggles in human society, the struggle between the house of Have and the house of Want; on the part of labor the cry for freedom, on the part of capital the argument of necessity.

"There are some positions taken by the employers and their attorneys which, to say the least, will be startling reading for thoughtful men, and which, properly considered, will bring the public to our side as surely as the American public mind is yet of the opinion which made this country pour out its blood and treasure to abolish the ownership of man by man in any sense.

"What is the strife between employers and employees? It is usually called the labor question. What is it? What does it mean?

"In the old Roman world, from which we obtain many of our ideas, especially our ideas about law, and certainly our injunctions, the basic principle was autocracy or absolutism—absolutism in religion, absolutism in the state, and absolutism in industry. The whole philosophy of life was in the concept that there were sons of the gods to teach, to govern, to pray; and sons of the earth, without souls, to be saved or damned, to be taught, to be governed, to be preyed upon. Into this came the teachings of the Christ, the concept that there is but one God and that all men are His children, equal heirs to all the bounties of the Father. We have been taught to pray, 'Thy kingdom come, Thy will be done, as in heaven so also on earth.' We have been taught to bear each other's burden; that God is no respecter of persons; that each will be responsible for his own acts, and so forth.

"It took some fifteen hundred years of intense struggle, expressing itself through organizations based upon religious discontent, to establish religious freedom. It took 300 more years for organizations based upon political discontent to give us such political freedom as we now have. And the labor movement is but this fundamental Christian idea taking hold of the industrial field in an endeavor to transform it into its own image.

This, gentlemen, is, in short, the labor movement. Absolutism has been removed from church and the state; it yet holds full sway in industry. Yet the employer says, 'This is my business; I am this business.' Like the dictum of Louis the Fourteenth, 'I am the state.' We of the labor movement dispute this. We hold that since the business can not exist without the worker, he has something to say, or should have something to say, about it. We do not claim that we are always right in what we say, but since the toiler can not be divorced from his labor power, the claim set up here of a vested right in so much labor power as will make a plant profitable is not only un-Christian but un-American.

"This evolution toward 'The Kingdom' meets on the industrial field a most formidable power. There are plants which employ in different ways 150,000 men. Allowing 5 to a family, this means 750,000 men, women, and children. The owner or owners claim the right to determine the hours of labor, which means what time the employee may be with his family. They claim the sole right to determine wages. This means the power to say in what kind of house the worker shall live, what kind of clothing shall be worn by his wife and children, what shall be their food, what kind of education they shall gain, what character shall be developed by the rising generation. The power of kings is as nothing to this. Kingly power only touches the life of the people in spots—at intervals. Here is a power which goes into the very essence of life, and at no time in the history of the Gotho-Germanic race was such a power vested in individual man. As it has grown it has sought to control the political action of the workmen subject to it, and did so control it that it was necessary to make the ballot secret. It controls in a measure the legal profession through patronage and place; the newspapers, through their advertising columns; the churches, through the pew; the institutions of learning, through endowments; and the jury system is threatened through an unwarranted use of the writ of injunction—nay, we have found judges who were not proof against this power and who have used their holy office contrary to the settled law. Thus the virus of industrial absolutism is burrowing through every safeguard and filling the holes with maggots of its own making.

"What can the working class do? In the developments and the law, of which we complain, we are considered and treated as a class. Here is a power which watches over us in the shop, at our home, at our evening meeting, and at the polls. To incur its displeasure means discharge, and this means the finding, if we can, employment in some other line of industry and loss of such value as our acquired skill may have.

"We apply the lessons, taught us by the animals, of 'mutual aid.' We come together for protection and endeavor to put into practice the instruction 'to bear each other's burden,' but are promptly met by an order from the court under which this is called 'conspiracy'; and the oldest of Saxon rights, the trial by jury, is swept away.

"Not that all our employers act thus. Many, nay, perhaps a majority, would have it otherwise; but they have to keep up with the procession or go out of business.

"We exercise the right of assembly; we discuss our grievances; we appoint our committee and respectfully submit our petition for redress; and we are told that Jones, Smith & Co. would gladly grant our petition, but there is Hogg, Hunger & Co. working one hour more per day now and paying less wages. Jones, Smith & Co. can not grant our request. It would mean going out of business. We know that there is some truth in this statement, and we set aside a few cents per week, and after a while we send somebody to the employees of Hogg, Hunger & Co. to inform them that we and they may have better conditions if they will make common cause, and that we have saved together a few dollars which we will share with them in feeding the little ones if they will stand in. They weigh the chances of success or failure and determine to risk all in an effort to better the condition of themselves and those dependent on them. Their petition is presented to their employers, who promptly refuse even to consider it.

"The employers are that business, and the mere presenting of the petition is to dispute their authority. The bearers of the petition are promptly dismissed from the service. Then follows a strike—a refusal to furnish the labor power, without which the great plant is of no value. Working people far and near are notified of the strike and requested to keep away; pickets are placed to inform those who come and may have heard nothing or who may have been influenced by some false statement from the agents sent out by the company to find men. A vacant lot near the plant is handy. The strikers obtain permission to occupy it, and they establish a camp, where they are together, encourage each other, watch each other and the men going into the plant. They do not destroy tangible property or assault the men; but their presence, the look of reproach on the faces, and the knowledge of why they are out of work quicken the conscience of those at work, and they, too, quit.

"This, gentlemen of the committee, was the development up to and including the situation at the Collins Colliery Co. in West Virginia when that corporation submitted its petition to the court for an injunction. It illustrates, as well as I can, the whole movement in the general lines upon which it develops. The 'fear of want,' which appears in every step, is not given the weight to which it is entitled; but it follows every step, like the shark follows the ship in distress. In every strike hope had conquered fear when the petition was presented.

"The Collins Colliery Co., finding the men leaving its employ, goes into court and sets forth that it has a coal plant in which it has invested $250,000, upon which it must pay $10,000 per annum as royalty. It has a market in several States; it is under contract to deliver the coal, but can not, because the laborers, for reasons of their own, refuse to work. True, their reasons for quitting were given, so were the conditions upon which they would continue; but in place of dealing with the men the company now comes to the court. The company figured on the labor supply being there when it invested its money and assumed obligations. The investment, plant, and contracts give to the company a vested right in necessary labor supply with which to operate the plant, which will otherwise 'lie idle and deteriorate in value.'

"Its real stock in trade was the labor, and since labor can not be divorced from the laborer it was in the laborers. There was no rioting, no disturbance of peace, of which the peace officers of the country could take cognizance; there was no tangible property destroyed. The earning power of the plant had passed, or was about to pass, and the court was appealed to to protect that kind of property. The court took the view of the company and issued the injunction. That this was an assertion that property right in labor went with the ownership of the mine, and that this property right on the part of the mine owner destroyed the property right of the miner himself and put him outside the Bill of Rights never occurred to the judge. These men had done nothing but meeting, marching, persuading, inducing, and making 'inflammatory speeches,' and this they had done many times before—nay, prior to election they had done it under fear of discharge and want if refusing.

"I have said that the court destroyed the property right of the miners in themselves. Is there any law permitting any judge, or is there any inherent power in any judge, to prevent one freeman from inducing another freeman to do what he has a legal right to do, unless such action would destroy the vested right of some third person? John Doe, who is working for Hogg, Hunger & Co., has the right to quit work; but in so doing he exposes himself and family to want, and hence he continues at work. The employees of Jones, Smith & Co. offer to share with them their savings, to give them food and shelter, and the court steps in and forbids. John Doe and his family are isolated and must continue in the employ of Hogg, Hunger & Co. against their will. The court has, by preventing help coming to them, accomplished by indirection what it could not do directly.

"If Hogg, Hunger & Co. has no property right in John Doe—if John Doe is a freeman—why can he not be advised, persuaded, and helped? Again, if Jones, Smith & Co. should offer to John Doe a place in their employ, John may leave and accept the new employment. So that, as against some other employer, there is no vested right in the wage earner. The employers are on an equality as to him, and he may go from one to the other. He has the right to choose a new master if he can find one; but he may not be given such assistance as will enable him to refuse to work at all unless the employer can find somebody to take his place, keep the business going, and thus prevent the plant from being idle and deteriorating. If he be free, if his body be his own, by what right is his coming and going obstructed? That the obstruction comes through depriving him of the means to move and is indirect makes it no whit less effective, no less real. If he be part of that business, if the plant has a property right in him, then the whole proceeding is logical and right. Upon any other concept how can this be defended?

"As citizens he and his fellows are under the protection of the Bill of Rights; as workmen they are property—not as individuals, no; but as a class, yes. Is this American? We hold that the workman is merged in the citizen and that the Declaration of Independence issued 'in decent respect to the opinions of mankind,' where it says that 'All men are created equal and are by their Creator endowed with certain inalienable rights, among which are life, liberty, and the pursuit of happiness,' meant then and means now what it says, and that the wage earner is no exception. We maintain that the equal protection of the bill of rights and the laws to all men, regardless of their station, is the American idea. We claim no immunity from any law; we claim the same right to be considered innocent until proven guilty as other citizens; that we shall be held, as other men, to be law-abiding.

"Would anybody dream of protecting the earning power of a small store by getting out an injunction against the department store? Why not serve us with an injunction forbidding us to transfer our patronage from one store to another? Is it because they both have a vested right in our patronage that we may not combine to withhold it from either? Yet these absurdities, these invasions of our right to individual liberty, this claim of vested right in our labor and our patronage are gravely called by employers their 'property rights,' which must be protected by injunction. They organize a society to take the place of the State in enforcing the law, and send their delegates here to file an indictment against the system of government, preparatory to, as they threaten, taking the law into their own hands if the Congress shall refuse to sustain their new American claim to property right in the labor of the wage earner.

"There are two thoughts growing in our industrial life equally unreasonable and dangerous, that the employer has a property right in the labor of his workmen and that the employee has some kind of property right in his job. If there should be any such right as last mentioned it would naturally follow that the job has some right in the employee, and the workman who sets up such claim is selling his birthright for a mess of pottage.

"In their essence these claims are socialistic. It is these claims accepted that from the basis of the theories of State socialism. And yet when we ask that the Congress shall pass a bill which will protect the employer and employee alike, the employers pronounce it socialistic and dub us Socialists.

"Nor is there the slightest possibility of any such claims being considered for a moment. Is there a 'right to work'? If so, it must be based upon the 'right to life' and run against the State, which in protecting and making such right effective is bound under the same declaration to do so without in any way destroying the 'right to liberty,' which is on an exact equality with the 'right to life' in that instrument. Such right is an individual right. Labor is an attribute of life, inseparable therefrom, hence is life.

"Property is something which we may acquire, possess, and part with. It may be contracted away; it may be alienated; it may be destroyed without destroying the possessor. Labor is therefore not property in which some other person may acquire a property right which will give him a standing in an equity court. That no such property right exists was decided by the Supreme Court of Massachusetts in December, 1892.

"In Worthington v. Waring (157 Mass., 421, December, 1892), laborers who had been employed in a mill in Fall River and had left because they could not obtain higher wages, brought a bill against the treasurer and superintendent of the corporation, the employment of which they had left, and officers of other mills, charging that these officers had conspired together and put the names of the plaintiffs upon a 'blacklist,' stating that the petitioners had been engaged in a strike, and had induced all employers of their kind of labor in Fall River to refuse to employ them—

"with intent to compel them either to go without work in Fall River or to go back to work for the corporation, the employment of which they had left, at such wages as that corporation should see fit to pay them—

"And asked that the defendants be restrained—

"from annoying the petitioners and interfering with their rights to earn their livelihood at their trade in Fall River, and to withdraw and destroy all blacklists or other devices used by the defendants or under their orders for that purpose.

"To this the court said that if the petition charged a conspiracy, which was a misdemeanor at common law, the remedy was by indictment; and if the injury caused to the petitioners by the conduct of the defendants constituted a cause of action, the remedy was 'by an action of tort to be brought by each petitioner separately.' The court then said that while—

"courts of equity often protect property from threatened injury when the rights of property are equitable, or when, although the rights are legal, the civil and criminal remedies at common law are not adequate, but the rights which the petitioners allege the defendants were violating at the time the petition was filed are personal rights, as distinguished from the rights of property—

"and, therefore, the court declined to entertain the petition.

"Being personal rights, as distinct from property rights, when not contracted away, and as such incapable of being protected by a court of equity, the laborer can not assign a right which he does not possess, hence a contract to labor will give no right in the laborer which can be enforced in equity.

"We thus come back to the one fundamental question: 'Is there going along with the ownership of the mine, factory, or means of transportation a vested right in so much labor as is needed to make it profitable?"

"If such right exists, whence is it obtained? It surely is contrary to the thirteenth amendment of the Constitution. If any such right runs against us as a class, upon what members of the class can it be enforced?"

"The employers and business men, who come here in good faith and make this claim of vested right in our labor and our patronage, are perhaps not much to be blamed. They find this idea expressing itself in the capitalization of the earning power of great enterprises; they have possibly paid good money for stocks and bonds, which are nothing but a mortgage upon the labor of the future. We learn from our industrial superiors; they from their financial principals. But that some of their attorneys should take the same position is a matter of some surprise and apprehension, to me at least.

"Can it be possible that these attorneys hold such contention to be sound? Through all the testimony and arguments there seems to run this idea of vested right in so much labor power as will run the plant, except in the argument of Mr. Bond, who recognized that such right does not exist and who mourns that fact.

"They urge with apparent sincerity the bill be not passed, because it will put a blot upon the judiciary, while they in the same breath claim that the whole machinery for the administration of justice and keeping the peace has broken down.

"They say that the police will not arrest, and when they do the police judge will not convict, or if he will convict, the accused will ask for a jury, and on it will be one or two members of the unions, conviction failing, and you have your labor for your pains.

"According to this the citizen is, by his occupation as a wage earner, so warped in judgment and tainted morally that he can not be trusted as a juror if one of his own class is to be tried. As this unfitness is based on moral turpitude, it follows that his testimony as a witness is of no value and must therefore be rejected. This is entirely consistent with the claim that he is property. The slave never could testify against his owner nor against the owner's equals. His evidence could be and was taken by the master against a fellow serf or slave, and so it is now with the wage earner. The employing corporation goes into court, and, to quote from the petition of the coal corporation already mentioned, says:

"That the remainder of the miners and employees engaged as such * * * are willing to work and continue their employment; * * * that they are idle now for the reason that they are intimidated and in fear; that all of the miners at its said mines are very desirous of being permitted to continue their said work at the present rate of wages, and will do, as your orator is advised, and so alleges, if not interfered with and disturbed as hereinafter alleged."

"The petitioner then alleges that a confederation, combination, and association of men have gone among the miners and other laborers for the purpose of inducing or persuading them to quit work, and by threats, menaces, inflammatory speeches, and demonstrations, and that if this continues those now at work will quit, and thus cause the 'said coal plant to lie idle and deteriorate in value.'

"It is submitted that if the men at work and the men idle were free men entitled to the protection of the Bill of Rights there was nothing in these facts or allegations which could in any way justify the use of the writ of injunction. It is alleged that they used threats. What kind of threats? That is a question of fact, and under the 'Bill of Rights' they were entitled to a jury if they were threats within the meaning of the criminal law.

"We are told that the jurisdiction conferred on our court of equity was such as existed in England at the time of the founding of our Republic, and that it went to the protection of vested rights. If this be true, then either there is a vested right in the laborer going with the ownership of the mine or the use of the writ was a gross usurpation. If it is the first, we ask of you to abolish it as inconsistent with the thirteenth amendment; if the second, then we pray that you stop the usurpation by the passage of this bill. In either case it is a symptom of that growing 'industrial absolutism' which is gradually depriving us of our freedom as men and which is digging from under our form of government its very foundation.

"That we can be freemen in fact is so incomprehensible to Mr. Beck that he assumes that our voluntary associations are a kind of padrone system, by which Mr. Gompers farms out our labor in some way for his own profit.

"Gentlemen, it is time that this growing, grinding power of industrial absolutism be checked. If permitted to grow, it will not only grind every vestige of personal freedom out of the wage earners, but it will destroy this Republic, subvert Christian civilization, and build upon the ruins an industrial feudalism more destructive of human liberty and progress than was the old feudalism in the time of its lowest depths and decadence.

"Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the committee, we bring our grievances, as we feel them, to you, with our respectful petition that they be remedied. We can not believe that you will fail us. We can not explain our pain in that logical way which would address itself to your intellects. We trust that your human sympathies will do what our speech—the mere wailing of pain and groping for the cause—shall not accomplish.

"In conclusion, you will not misunderstand me when I say that should your sympathy fail to persuade your intellect that here is a real grievance and that this bill is a remedy, then, of course, your conclusion will be an indorsement, at least to some extent, of the employers' position—that combination amongst the laborers is a crime against the property rights of the employers, and that the criminal law failing to protect such rights, the writ of injunction is and has been properly used.

"Then to us can remain but the old remedy—to disobey the king, peacefully, of course, and take as penalties for such peaceful disobedience whatever may befall. Should this be, and God forbid that it should, then there will be more of these injunctions than ever; imprisonments in consequence, as yet comparatively rare, will multiply, and hosts of men and women will find out for the first time how a prison looks on the inside.

"If this has to be, it must be, but—

"And tho' ye gave her felon fare,
"Bld felon garb her liv'ry be;
"And tho' ye set the oakum task—
"I tell you all, she still is free!"

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

The SPEAKER announced his signature to enrolled bills of the following titles:

S. 3211. An act authorizing that commission of ensign be given midshipmen upon graduation from the Naval Academy; and

ADJOURNMENT.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. PALMER] moves that the House do now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; accordingly (at 5 o'clock and 30 minutes p. m.) the House adjourned until to-morrow, Thursday, March 7, 1912, at 12 o'clock noon.

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATIONS.

Under clause 2 of Rule XXIV, executive communications were taken from the Speaker's table and referred as follows:

A letter from the Secretary of the Treasury, submitting a revised estimate of appropriation for placing electrical protection to vaults in post-office buildings in Cleveland and Dayton, Ohio (H. Doc. No. 598); to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed.

PUBLIC BILLS, RESOLUTIONS, AND MEMORIALS INTRODUCED.

Under clause 3 of Rule XXII, bills, resolutions, and memorials were introduced and severally referred as follows:

By Mr. O'SHAUNESSY: A bill (H. R. 21420) providing for the establishment of a naval base on Narragansett Bay, in the State of Rhode Island; to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

By Mr. BRADLEY: A bill (H. R. 21421) to provide for the acquisition of a site and the erection of a public building thereon at Liberty, N. Y.; to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds.

SENATE.

THURSDAY, March 7, 1912.

(Continuation of legislative day of Tuesday, March 5, 1912.)

The Senate met as in open executive session after the expiration of the recess, at 12 o'clock meridian, Thursday, March 7, 1912.

GENERAL ARBITRATION TREATIES.

The Senate resumed the consideration of the treaties of arbitration between Great Britain and France and the United States.

Mr. ROOT. Mr. President—

Mr. LODGE. If the Senator from New York will yield to me for a moment, I made a little correction the other day on something I stated in my speech of Thursday last in regard to the postal conventions.

My attention had been called to the treaty with Great Britain, the Palmerston-Bancroft treaty, and I thought it constituted an exception. I had not examined the treaty as I should have done. I have since examined it, and I find it stands on precisely the same ground as the treaty with New Granada of 1844 and the treaty with Mexico of 1861, the Corwin treaty, which provides a transit through foreign territory of closed mails, which, of course, makes the action of the treaty making power absolutely essential.

Mr. President, I make the point of no quorum.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Massachusetts suggests the absence of a quorum. The Secretary will call the roll.

The Secretary called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Bacon	Cullom	Lodge	Pomerene
Borah	Cummins	Lorimer	Richardson
Bourne	Curtis	McCumber	Root
Bradley	Dillingham	McLean	Shively
Briggs	du Pont	Martin, Va.	Smith, Ga.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Sixty-four Senators have answered to the roll call. A quorum of the Senate is present.

Mr. BACON. Before the Senator from New York proceeds, I ask leave to submit two amendments in order that they may be printed immediately, so that we may have them before us when the time for voting arrives.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Georgia presents certain amendments which will be printed and lie on the table.

Mr. SWANSON. Mr. President—

Mr. ROOT. I yield to the Senator from Virginia.

Mr. SWANSON. I wish to introduce a bill by unanimous consent.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Bills can not be received under the unanimous-consent agreement. The Senator from New York will proceed.

Mr. ROOT. Mr. President, when the Senate took a recess on the last calendar day I was about to spread upon the records of the Senate certain statements made by the Secretary of State, Mr. Knox, in respect of these pending treaties and contained in Senate Document No. 298, Sixty-second Congress, second session, that document being a reprint of an address upon "The pending arbitration treaties," made by Secretary Knox before the American Society of Judicial Settlement of International Disputes at Cincinnati, Ohio, on the 8th of November, 1911.

I wish to leave no question whatever as to the fact that these statements by the Secretary of State constitute a part of the matter under consideration by the Senate when it consents to the ratification of these treaties, as I hope it will. The speech of Secretary Knox was an open, public, formal, and solemn declaration contemporaneous with the discussion of the treaties by the negotiator of them in behalf of the United States. The speech has been sent, I understand, to all the Members of the Senate. It was published widely in the public press. It has been presented formally to the Senate by the Senator from Texas [Mr. BAILEY] and has been printed as a public document. It has, of course, we are at liberty to assume, come to the knowledge of the representatives of Great Britain and France, the other parties to the treaties, and we are entitled to consider it as a part of the subject matter upon which we are to make up our minds whether these treaties ought or ought not to be ratified.

I will ask, Mr. President, that the Secretary read the portion of the speech beginning on page 9 and marked in the margin of the document which I send to the desk.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, the Secretary will read as requested.

The Secretary read as follows:

The report of the Senate Committee on Foreign Relations cites as illustrative of questions which could not be arbitrated the Monroe doctrine, the exclusion of immigrants, and our territorial integrity. All these are questions of internal or external policy, and are merely typical of many questions which, as the report says, "no nation on earth would think of raising with the United States." And this suggests that no discussion of the treaties must overlook the fact that they have been negotiated and will be binding between self-respecting nations who obviously will act in good faith and in accordance with their own self-interests, which may be almost as quickly compromised by invoking an erroneous or dangerous principle against a foreign power as by having the principle invoked against them.

Now, whatever the doctrine of theorists may be, the practice and custom of nations through centuries of development have been that a nation adopts and, if able so to do, carries out those measures of self-preservation which it regards as essential to its existence. So far as any law exists on this point, it is to the effect that nations must be permitted to exercise such right uncontrolled save by physical force of a stronger power. As one writer has put it:

"No nation has a right to prescribe to another what these means (of self-preservation) shall be or require any account of her conduct in this respect—

Or, as the majority report puts it—

"There are certain questions which no nation, if it expects to retain its existence as a nation, will ever submit to the decision of anyone else * * * (and) which it is admitted no nation could submit to an outside judgment without abandoning its sovereignty and independence."

The illustrations presented by the majority report are preeminently questions falling within these rules. The maintenance of the Monroe doctrine is considered by us essential to our peace, prosperity, and national safety. Other nations know we so regard it. The doctrine does not need to be founded upon a technical legal right of international law, for it is a matter of grave, far-reaching, and, to us, vitally important policy. A nation putting itself in the attitude toward the United States of deliberately violating the Monroe doctrine could not expect to find in the treaty terms protection against the consequences of such an act. The doctrine has been respected, and is now respected, and it will continue to be respected, so long as we seem reasonably able to uphold it. It does not depend upon technical legal right, but upon policy and power. Therefore, it is not, and no reasonable man or set of men would claim it to be, a justiciable question any more than they would hold that the question of the European balance of power is justiciable. It is not to be thought that any power would suggest either question as a proper subject for arbitration in the future, as no power has sought to do so in the past.

Of a strictly like character is the right to exclude immigrants, save that every recognized tenet of international law would be against any proposal by any nation which should question the legitimate exercise of this right. In no more direct way can a nation's existence be threatened than by introducing among its citizens or subjects non-assimilable peoples. This is true not only of those classes dangerous to the political life of a nation, but of those classes inimical to its social and economic welfare and development. You touch here the very vitals of organized society and government, which it is recognized a nation may protect at all hazards and at all costs, as the exclusion of peoples is a purely defensive measure.

And so of the question of territorial integrity, for a living nation must have a place to live in. You can not take a nation's home without destroying the nation; hence the all-commanding principle of self-preservation requires the defense of the home, a principle recognized by all law. Save as to boundary disputes, which ever since the Nation was born we have submitted to arbitration, it is not to be presumed that either of the other contracting powers would any more ask us to arbitrate, as between ourselves and them, our title to lands occupied by us than we would ask them to arbitrate their title, as between ourselves and them, to their respective possessions.

It is inconceivable that under treaties which obligate us to arbitrate justiciable differences involving the rights of other nations against us in respect to international matters of common concern any such questions should be seriously projected for arbitration, as have been suggested, and it is scarcely worth while to speculate upon the reception such a proposition would encounter.

Mr. ROOT. Mr. President, I ask that the Secretary read the paragraphs upon page 8 of the document which are marked in pencil upon the margin.

The Secretary read as follows:

The Constitution of the United States makes the Senate a part of the treaty-making power, and no treaty between the United States and a foreign country is valid without its approval. In Great Britain the treaty-making power rests in the Crown, but, as a matter of domestic policy, Great Britain does not make important treaties affecting the interests of her self-governing colonies without their approval. In France certain classes of treaties are subject to legislative approval.

Therefore, although in the pending treaties the executive branches of the Governments concerned agree to be bound by the decision of the commission as to the arbitrability of a question upon which the executive branches do not agree, this decision is subject to the approval of the self-governing colonies of Great Britain, if the question affects them, and to the approval of the Senate of the United States, and, in certain cases, the Senate and Chamber of Deputies of France, to whom the right of approval is expressly reserved in each case.

Every agreement to arbitrate must go to the Senate for its approval. There can be no arbitration without its approval. An agreement to arbitrate goes to the Senate for its approval either because the executive branches of the two countries concerned in the difference agree that the difference is one for arbitration or because, failing so to agree, the commission of inquiry report that it is such a difference.

How can the Senate's power over the agreement be less if it goes to the Senate after the commission's report that it presents an arbitrable question than if it had gone there because of the opinion of the executive branches of both Governments to the same effect?

If the two Governments agree that the difference is arbitrable they make an agreement to arbitrate it, and it is sent to the Senate for its approval. If the two Governments can not agree that the difference is arbitrable that ends the matter until the commission reports, and if its report is that the difference is arbitrable an agreement is made to arbitrate it, and the agreement is sent to the Senate for approval just as if no such question had been raised, and the Senate deals with it with unimpaired powers.

Mr. ROOT. Mr. President, these statements by the Secretary of State are competent for our consideration now and will at all times be competent for the construction of the treaties that are before us, in case of their ratification. I mean they will be competent in determining the true construction of those treaties, whatever question may arise under them and whenever it may arise; for the rules which obtain in international intercourse, both in diplomatic discussion and in the trial and decision of questions submitted to arbitration, are much more liberal than are the rules which we apply in court to aid in the construction of statutes and contracts. Where we, under our municipal law, might confine a court to considerations to be found within the four quarters of an instrument, it is and always has been universally accepted in the discussion of international questions that for the construction of a treaty every declaration that has been made before or is made at the time of the making of the treaty, all the correspondence, all the negotiations, and all the expressions of opinion on the part of the representatives of both countries are to be considered. When these treaties have been ratified there can never come a time, there can never arise a situation, calling for the construction of these treaties when these declarations by the American Secretary of State will not be laid by the side of the text to determine what is the scope and effect of the stipulations contained in the instrument.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President—

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from New York yield to the Senator from Idaho?

Mr. ROOT. Certainly.

Mr. BORAH. As I understand, the Senator from New York has had these statements put in the record to assist those who may be called upon to construe the treaty in the future, and that their strength arises out of the fact that they are the declarations of one who assisted in negotiating the treaty. If that is a correct rule—and I think unquestionably it is—the record ought to be made complete by having the expression of the views of the Executive himself in the record upon this particular section of the treaty; and, if it will not interrupt the Senator, I—

Mr. ROOT. I will state to the Senator that it will interrupt me for him to read anything else into my speech.

Mr. BORAH. Very well; I will defer it to some other time. I was of the opinion that perhaps it would assist in the matter of construction if the views of the Chief Executive at the time of negotiating the treaty were known.

Mr. ROOT. It would throw no light upon it whatever. The Secretary of State has made this authoritative statement; and upon that statement I propose to stand, and upon that statement the Senate is entitled to stand.

Mr. BACON. Mr. President, will the Senator permit me to interrupt him?

Mr. ROOT. I will.

Mr. BACON. In order that we may know the exact attitude of the Senator from New York, I should like to ask him the question, If it be true that the President of the United States in a public address has taken distinctly the opposite position in regard to this matter, whether that fact would not also be accepted hereafter as a guide for construction?

Mr. ROOT. That unquestionably would be competent evidence as to the construction of the treaties.

Mr. BACON. If the Senator will permit it, the expression of the President to that effect will be produced and entered in the record right in connection with the expression of the Secretary of State.

Mr. ROOT. But, Mr. President, I propose, and my object in putting his expressions into the record is, to have the Senate plant itself upon the view expressed by the Secretary of State, and give its advice in accordance with that view, and when that has been done, the view enters into the making of the treaty itself.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President—

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from New York yield further to the Senator from Idaho?

Mr. ROOT. Certainly.

Mr. BORAH. Does the Senator contend that the view of the Secretary of State would be more potent and more influential and more controlling in the construction of this treaty than the view of the President of the United States?

Mr. ROOT. I contend nothing about anything which I have never seen. I simply decline to permit the Senator from Idaho to interject a speech along his line of thought into the speech which I am endeavoring to make along my line of thought, and to introduce evidence—I know not what—into the evidence that I am producing to the Senate. When I have concluded of course the Senator from Idaho will have free scope for the introduction of anything that he wishes.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President—

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from New York yield further?

Mr. ROOT. I do.

Mr. BORAH. I would not have interrupted the Senator from New York if it had not been stated by the Senator that he was putting into the record a rule of construction by which those would be guided who would be called upon to deal with this treaty hereafter. The Senator from New York is as familiar as I am with the fact that the rule would be worthless if all the facts concerning that subject matter were not before the parties who are dealing with the treaty, and before they would ask what were the views of the Secretary of State they would inquire what were the views of the head of the executive department. At least his views under the rule the Senator invokes are of considerable importance.

Mr. ROOT. I can not agree with the statement made by the Senator from Idaho, but I shall not enter into a discussion of the matter. The obligation to exhaust all expressions of opinion in a discussion in the Senate is one that I can not for a moment recognize. What I know is this, that we have here printed by the Senate a public document containing the authoritative statement of the Secretary of State, who negotiated and who signed these treaties, as to what his meaning was, and I am endeavoring to leave no doubt about the Senate having under consideration that authentic statement by the signer of this instrument. If anybody else has any other matter to produce, he may do so when I get through.

Now, sir, let me address myself for a few moments to the relevancy of the first extract from the speech of the Secretary of State. The treaty with which we are dealing provides:

All differences hereafter arising between the high contracting parties, which it has not been possible to adjust by diplomacy, relating to international matters in which the high contracting parties are concerned by virtue of a claim of right made by one against the other under treaty or otherwise, and which are justiciable in their nature by reason of being susceptible of decision by the application of the principles of law or equity, shall be submitted to the permanent court of arbitration established at The Hague—

And so forth.

That is the statement of what it is that we agree to submit to arbitration. The essential feature, the pivotal feature, of the definition of what we agree to submit to arbitration is to be found in the word "justiciable." We are to submit "justiciable controversies." They are to be "claims of right," which, I take it, should be discriminated from claims for consideration, for courtesy, for compassion, for grace, for favor, for good-fellowship, for comity. They are to be claims of something that a man says he has a right to. They are to be justiciable claims.

Mr. President, that definition of what we are willing to arbitrate takes the place of the provision in the existing treaty to the effect that we will arbitrate, with certain exceptions—

Differences which may arise of a legal nature or relating to the interpretation of treaties existing between the two contracting parties and which it may not have been possible to settle by diplomacy.

I am inclined to think that the selection of the word "justiciable" to describe the kind of controversies that we are willing to say beforehand we will submit to arbitration is a happy choice of words. It is not new. In this country we have become quite familiar with it. It has a meaning, and it has about the right meaning for the definition of controversies that we will submit to arbitration.

Only last month the Supreme Court of the United States had occasion to announce its decision upon a very great and important cause by using this very expression. In the case of the Pacific States Telephone & Telegraph Co. against the State of Oregon, decided on the 19th of February of the present year, the question was raised as to whether the State of Oregon, in including in its system of government provisions for the initiative and referendum, was still maintaining that republican form of government which the Constitution requires the United States to guarantee to the citizens of the States. The question was argued at length, but the Supreme Court held that they could not decide that question because it was not a "justiciable" question. The Chief Justice, writing the opinion, said it is a "political" and not a "justiciable" question.

It is indeed—

He says—

a singular misconception of the nature and character of our constitutional system of government to suggest that the settled distinction which the doctrine just stated points out between judicial authority over justiciable controversies and legislative power as to purely political questions tends to destroy the duty of the judiciary in proper cases to enforce the Constitution.

Then he describes certain justiciable questions. He says:

It (the plaintiff) does not assert that it was denied an opportunity to be heard as to the amount for which it was taxed, or that there was anything inhering in the tax or involved intrinsically in the law which violated any of its constitutional rights. If such questions had been raised they would have been justiciable, and therefore would have required the calling into operation of judicial power. Instead, however, of doing any of these things the attack on the statute here made is of a wholly different character. Its essentially political nature is at once made manifest, etc.

Now, Mr. President, this treaty in the form in which it has been cast appeals to the long practice and the settled habits of our people in the discrimination between what is properly subject to the determination of a court of justice and what is not properly subject to it. The distinction rests in the nature of things. Many very good people do great harm to the progress of peace, to the progress of the tendency of mankind to get away from stupid, foolish, brutal ways of settling their differences, and to adopt sensible ways of settling them, by refusing to recognize the realities of life and by refusing to realize the distinction that exists in the nature of things between those questions that can be submitted to the determination of another and those questions that every man and every nation must decide for themselves.

If a man undertakes to leave to somebody else the question what church he shall attend, what books he shall read, what amusements he shall seek, what occupation he shall embrace, whom he shall marry, how he shall rear his children, whom he shall associate with, he loses his personal liberty; he is at the beck and call and domination of another, and is no longer a free man; and no man who is a free man can submit questions as to personal conduct to the determination of others. They are not justiciable. So it is with a nation. Questions of national policy, questions that involve the preservation of national independence, questions that involve the nation's having a place in which to live, can not be submitted to the decision of anybody else, or the nation has lost its independence.

This line of justiciability, taken by analogy from the long practice of our race, which submits to the courts of justice the determination of those questions that depend upon the ascertainment of facts and the application of the rules of law and yet to preserve the freedom of the citizen—I say the selection of this word taken by analogy from our long and established practice in submitting justiciable questions to courts of justice and preserving personal questions for personal decision, seems to me to be a very happy expedient for a forward step along the pathway that we all desire, which shall in international affairs lead to the same happy self-respect, self-restraint, and submission to just judgment in controversy that we now have in our municipal relations.

There is one other expression which is added to the word "justiciable" for the purpose of making it more definite.

Mr. CULBERSON. Mr. President—

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from New York yield to the Senator from Texas?

Mr. ROOT. Certainly.

Mr. CULBERSON. The Senator from New York has very clearly pointed out the difference between the subjects which are submitted for arbitration under the existing treaty and under the proposed treaty. He has also referred to certain exceptions which are in article 1 of the existing treaty of 1908, but he did not state what those exceptions were. If he will permit me, in asking the question, I will read them:

Provided, nevertheless, That they do not affect the vital interest, the independence, or the honor of the two contracting States, and do not concern the interests of third parties.

My inquiry of the Senator from New York is whether or not either of those four exceptions, in his opinion, is justiciable under the terms of article 1 of the proposed treaty?

Mr. ROOT. I think they may be; some of them.

Mr. CULBERSON. Well, another inquiry.

Mr. ROOT. Let me finish my answer. I do not see how a question which involves the independence of a nation can be justiciable, because that means granting a right of capital punishment. Whether "vital interest" can be justiciable or not depends a good deal upon the scope you give to the definition of "vital interest." Some people might say that a question was vital and others that it was not. If the vital interest goes to the life of the Nation, I should not say the question involved in it was justiciable. "The honor of the two contracting States"—there again I well conceive that questions that are supposed to involve honor may be justiciable. I should think most of them would be. The interests of third parties can not be justiciable unless the third parties are also parties to the proceedings. If they are parties to the proceedings, then they would be justiciable.

I think, Mr. President, that there is this difference between the two statements: The statement of a general principle, such as fixing justiciability as the test, tends toward rather a broad treatment by exclusion and inclusion, just as the great statement of right in our Constitution, which forbids property, and so forth, to be taken without due process of law, has done. No one has ever undertaken to put a definition upon what constitutes "due process of law," and yet for many generations that provision has been the great bulwark of individual freedom and security for the fruits of individual enterprise and thrift and, by a long process of inclusion and exclusion, we have been placing one case on one side and one on the other of the line drawn by that general proposition.

When you undertake to minutely specify in a statute the tendency is toward technicalities. Minute provisions invite technical treatment, and people are apt to stick in the bark and to get into the same kind of difficulty that we have with our absurd codes of practice.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Mr. President—

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from New York yield to the Senator from Michigan?

Mr. ROOT. Certainly.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. I am very much interested in what the Senator says of the "happy choice" of the word "justiciable." It is the qualifying word in this treaty. I should like to ask the Senator whether it has the same meaning and effect in France that it has in England or the United States? We are now considering the French treaty as well as the English treaty.

Mr. ROOT. I think it has. I think it marks a distinction which exists in the nature of things, which depends upon no system of law, upon no language, upon no mode of thought; the distinction between that kind of a question which is appropriate for the decision of a court of justice and that kind of a question embracing liberty and independence which each individual must decide for himself.

Mr. CULBERSON. If it does not interrupt the Senator, I should like to ask him a further question along the line of the question which I put a while ago.

Mr. ROOT. It does not interrupt me at all.

Mr. CULBERSON. The Senator, as I understand him, admitted that some of the exceptions would be justiciable under the proposed treaty. I ask him this question: If we do not not only enlarge by general words the scope of arbitration, but by a failure to put these exceptions in the new treaty we emphasize the fact that they are justiciable under the proposed agreement.

Mr. ROOT. I do not think so. My natural disposition would have been to favor a treaty which kept the original form of the treaties of 1908, merely striking out the exceptions, but I soon perceived if that were done the action would be open to the construction which the Senator from Texas has suggested. This entirely different form of statement is, I think, entirely free from any difficulty arising upon that suggestion.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President—

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from New York yield to the Senator from Massachusetts?

Mr. ROOT. Certainly.

Mr. LODGE. I desire to ask the Senator a question, if he will permit me. In the case in the Supreme Court which the Senator has just cited the justiciability of the question was submitted to them. In reply to the Senator from Texas the Senator from New York, in touching on "vital interests," said there were some that would be justiciable and some that probably would not be. Who is to pass upon the question of justiciability?

Mr. ROOT. That is to be passed upon just as every other question under a treaty is to be passed upon.

Mr. LODGE. No; I do not think the Senator understood me. I did not mean who are to pass upon it after a special agreement is made, but who are to pass upon the main question whether the difference is a justiciable or arbitrable difference.

Mr. ROOT. Will the Senator from Massachusetts permit me to postpone my answer to that until I come to dealing with the other part of the treaty?

Mr. LODGE. Certainly. I asked the question because it seemed to me the vital question.

Mr. ROOT. I shall come to it presently if too many hurdles are not put in the way.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. They do not seem to bother the Senator any.

Mr. ROOT. Mr. President, I am very much concerned in getting the true and just construction of the first and fundamental provision of this treaty which defines the obligation that we assume, and I am now addressing myself to that, because no matter where the power is to construe this clause, no matter where the power is to determine whether a particular case comes within or does not come within the clause, above all things I want to avoid, so far as I have anything to do with the action of our Government, assuming an obligation in one sense and carrying it out in another.

I am not so much troubled about questions between legal obligations and moral obligations as I am about the question between moral obligations and immoral obligations. Heaven forbid that the Government of the United States should make a treaty believing that the other party takes it in a sense in which we do not intend to execute it. The result of two parties signing and delivering a contract, each thinking that it has got the start of the other, believing that it can secure a construction different from that which the other expects to get, can be nothing but further controversy.

Now, when we ratify these treaties, let us ratify them in the sense in which we mean to execute them. Whatever may be the power, wherever the power rests, I am trying to get at what I believe to be the just sense of the obligation which we assume.

Mr. President, I was just saying that there is another expression in this paragraph of the treaty to which some reference should be made, and that is the addition to the word "justiciable," as follows:

Which are justiciable in their nature by reason of being susceptible of decision by the application of the principles of law or equity.

That enforces and gives additional weight to the view which I have just been expressing—that we are adopting here by analogy to our municipal procedure, to the proceedings of all courts of justice in all countries, the distinction which we are ready to carry into our controversies in international questions. The words used here are again not new.

At the last Hague Congress among the treaties entered into was one providing for an international prize court. That was signed by the representatives of substantially all the civilized countries of the world and, among others, by the representatives of the United States, than whom no better lawyers live in this country or, I believe, in any other. The treaty has been ratified by the United States, with the advice and consent of the Senate. That treaty provides for a permanent court to pass upon questions of prize, and those questions cover a very wide range and a great variety of most difficult and perplexing controversies.

It provides that—

If a question of law to be decided is covered by a treaty in force between the belligerent captor and a power which is itself or whose subject or citizen is a party to the proceedings, the court is governed by the provisions of the said treaty.

In the absence of such provisions the court shall apply the rules of international law. If no generally recognized rule exists, the court shall give judgment in accordance with the general principles of justice and equity.

That, Mr. President, is a statement of the rule to be applied to the determination of controversies in which we are to be a party, agreed upon by all the nations of the earth, agreed upon by us as an adequate and sufficient statement of the manner in which the controversy shall be decided, and that substantially has been used as the model for aiding the construction of the word "justiciable" in the main and operative clause of this treaty.

Indeed, sir, the words to which I now refer, which add to the understanding of the meaning of the word "justiciable" by a reference to the rules of law and equity, are themselves descriptive of the basis of all international law. The most famous definition of international law by the most famous of judges is that often quoted from Lord Mansfield. He said the law of nations is "founded upon justice, equity, convenience, the reason of the thing, and confirmed by long usage." So if we ratify this treaty we are appealing first to the law of nations founded upon justice and equity and appealing, second, where there has been no recognized rule established, to the foundation of every rule embodied in the law of nations—the rule of justice and equity.

Mr. President, I think we are all agreed that among the questions which are not justiciable are the questions that have been raised here relating to the Monroe doctrine, relating to the admission of immigrants to our territory, relating to a great number of other questions; it is possible to think of scores and scores of them. Questions about our relations to Cuba, questions about the relations of Cuba to the Bahama Islands, questions about our relations to the Philippines, are all questions of national policy and have no place whatever in a court, any more than the framing of statutes which we pass here can be submitted to the discretion of a court on any other claim than that they are inconsistent with the predominant rule of the Constitution.

I have put upon the record this statement of the Secretary of State in order that there may never be any question as between the United States and England or France under this treaty about our understanding that questions of this kind are not justiciable; in order that the most open and public and unequivocal declaration may be made known to England and to France before they ratify the treaties themselves that we do not intend to submit to arbitration under these treaties questions of this description. Now is the time for us to say it, if we are ever going to say it. That we would say it if a question arose and arbitration were sought regarding any of these matters there can be no doubt. Do not let us wait until the treaty has been ratified and we are called upon to arbitrate some question that we do not believe comes within the treaty to say it is not within the treaty. Now is the time to say it. Then, when the treaties have been ratified, we shall stand in a position of honor and good faith, whatever questions may arise.

I say, sir, that in voting for the resolution of the Senator from Massachusetts I shall vote because I stand upon the declaration of the Secretary of State, because I believe it to be right. I give notice now, so far as one voice can give it, that it is not the intention of one ninety-second part of the Senate of the United States, in advising the ratification of these treaties, to assume any equivocal position, to create any false impression, to leave any doubt as to the true construction, but to declare solemnly that the treaties do not mean that we are to submit to arbitration the questions enumerated by the Secretary of State or any question coming within the class which the Secretary of State described in the first extract which I have had read from the desk.

Now, Mr. President, let us pass to the second serious question which has arisen under this treaty, and that is the question which arises upon the last clause of the third article, in these words:

It is further agreed, however, that in cases in which the parties disagree as to whether or not a difference is subject to arbitration under article 1 of this treaty, that question shall be submitted to the joint high commission of inquiry; and if all or all but one of the members of the commission agree and report that such difference is within the scope of article 1, it shall be referred to arbitration in accordance with the provisions of this treaty.

That provision naturally arises to the mind as relevant to the question which must inevitably be asked following upon a determination as to what we consider the true construction of the treaty; what, however, if somebody else gives another construction to the treaty, gives what we consider a wrong construction to the treaty; in other words, whatever we may think the treaty to mean, are we putting it in the power of a commission appointed by the President to compel the arbitration of the questions that we do not understand to be justiciable? That would mean, of course, the power to compel the arbitration of all this great range of questions that have been discussed here, however improbable that may be.

Now, Mr. President, I should have construed this clause as having an effect much wider than that ascribed to it by the Secretary of State. When I first read it it seemed to me that the intent of the clause was that the decision of the joint tribunal would bind the whole Government of the United States, as well the Senate as the President. I did not agree with the Senator from Massachusetts in his view regarding the constitutional question. I did agree with the Senator from Massachusetts in his view about the meaning of that clause. But, sir, I found that the Senator from Ohio [Mr. BURTON], the Senator from North Dakota [Mr. McCUMBER], that great American authority upon international law, Prof. John Bassett Moore, both a great publicist and an experienced diplomatist, that great lawyer and former Senator, Mr. Edmunds, and the Secretary of State himself, differed from the construction which the Senator from Massachusetts and myself gave to that clause.

Now, in view of the character and ability and experience and authority of the gentlemen whom I have named, and many others who took the same view, I can not say that the construction I put upon this clause is the only possible construction. It would be insufferable egotism for anyone to say that it is not possible to construe a clause of a treaty in the way that these gentlemen say it must be construed. We must realize, then, that there is a question of construction, and it becomes then, if we are to ratify these treaties, our duty to settle that question one way or the other, and to vote upon the treaties in accordance with our judgment of their wisdom as construed.

Now, sir, the Secretary of State who negotiated the treaties and who signed them has given us his construction, and he has, I understand, assented to the proposition that that construction shall be put into our resolution. That being so, whatever a court might have found, whatever any diplomatist might have been inclined or might be inclined to say was the meaning of the last clause of article 3 standing by itself, the construction which the Secretary of State puts upon it and which we embody in our resolution becomes the meaning of that clause.

Let me state the full force of that. There are a number of successive steps in the making of a treaty. The first is the signature of a treaty by the plenipotentiaries of the two parties. When Mr. Knox signs a treaty he does not do it as Secretary of State; he does it as a plenipotentiary specifically authorized by the President of the United States to negotiate a treaty on that subject. He has special powers. He does not do it under his commission; he does it under the power given to him specifically by the President to negotiate and sign that treaty. So with the ambassador who signs it on the other side; he has specific powers. The signatures of the plenipotentiaries to the treaty are always practically ad referendum. All treaties after being signed by the plenipotentiaries have to be ratified. They do not take effect until after they are ratified, and different countries have different methods of determining upon ratification. A treaty signed by Mr. Bryce goes back to England and it is to be ratified by the King in council. A treaty signed by Mr. Jusserand goes back to France, and according to its character it is to be ratified by the President, with the advice of the ministry or the French Parliament. A treaty signed by our plenipotentiary comes here for our consent to its ratification.

Now, when the proper authorities have consented, then there is a new proceeding, and that is an exchange of ratifications. New instruments are prepared and sealed and delivered, and it is the delivery of those instruments which constitute the last step and constitute the making of the treaty. The treaty is not made until the instrument that is called an instrument of ratification is signed and sealed by our Secretary of State and by the foreign ambassador and delivered. Whatever is in that instrument is in the treaty.

When we put this construction upon the last clause of the third article stated by the Secretary of State, who negotiated the treaty and put it into our resolution, that resolution is, as its terms require, made a part of the instrument of ratification, and just as much it becomes a part of the treaty upon the delivery of that instrument as if it had been written into the treaty in the first instance.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President—

The VICE PRESIDENT. Will the Senator from New York yield to the Senator from Massachusetts?

Mr. ROOT. Certainly.

Mr. LODGE. The Senator, of course, knows even better than I do that that point has been made the subject of a decision by the Supreme Court.

Mr. ROOT. It has.

Mr. LODGE. In Doe against Braden. There is no question about it; it becomes a part of the treaty.

Mr. ROOT. It has been made the subject of a decision by the Supreme Court, which, of course, would be final only as to us, and in respect to the treaty as a part of the law of the land; but it has also been a matter of common practice as between nations, and we have done it over and over again.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Mr. President—

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from New York yield to the Senator from Michigan?

Mr. ROOT. Certainly.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. In the construction of the meaning of the resolution of ratification is the judgment of the Secretary of State final?

Mr. ROOT. In the construction of the meaning of the resolution?

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. In the construction of the resolution of ratification, if it qualifies in any way the treaty itself, who construes the resolution for our Government?

Mr. ROOT. I can not tell the Senator that. It depends upon when and how it comes up for construction.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Would the resolution of the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE] be construed by the executive officers of this Government in connection with the treaty?

Mr. ROOT. It must be treated as being effective. They can not do otherwise, because it will be a part of the treaty; but we have got to look at ourselves to see that the language used means what we intend to have it mean.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Exactly.

Mr. ROOT. I have put into the record, as a part of the subject matter on which we proceed, the statements of the Secretary of State in the second extract which I had read in order to make doubly certain the meaning of this resolution.

Now let me read the words of the resolution and then read the statements of the Secretary of State, to see if there can be any question about what we mean. I pass over the matter about the confirmation of the commissioners; I do not care anything at all about that, Mr. President; I am perfectly indifferent. It is well enough to understand that we do not want to pack any court here.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. But is it not a somewhat radical departure not to submit these names to the Senate?

Mr. ROOT. No; it has not been customary to submit them.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Are not commissioners of that character permanent?

Mr. ROOT. Oh, no; they are not permanent.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. In a sense they are. They are permanent until this controversy which brings them into being is disposed of.

Mr. ROOT. They are appointed for a particular controversy, and it has never been customary to have them appointed by and with the advice and consent of the Senate. The nearest analogy to it that we have is the Alaskan boundary tribunal, and in that case the Senate did not pass on the commissioners.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Where they are merely the agents of the executive department, I understand, of course, that we have not been in the habit of confirming them, but where they are to perform an executive function with discretionary power it seems to me that we ought to insist upon our right to confirm them.

Mr. ROOT. I am not objecting to it, Mr. President. I say I do not care anything about it, because I have no doubt the President of the United States would select good men. I do not want him to pack the court and I do not want to help him pack the court. I want to dismiss the idea that there is any particular advantage in that power of confirmation and to dismiss the idea that there is any particular protection in that power, because—

Mr. WILLIAMS. It would be really better if the court were disinterested, would it not?

Mr. ROOT. We want a commission which will be disinterested, which will answer to the description that was put into the Alaskan boundary treaty calling for a commission composed of impartial jurists of repute. The language of the resolution is—and with the further understanding that the reservation in article 1 of the treaty that the special agreement in each case shall be made by the President, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, means the concurrence of the Senate in the full and unrestricted exercise of its constitutional powers in respect to every special agreement whether submitted to the Senate as the result of the report of a joint high commission of inquiry under article 3 or otherwise.

"Full and unrestricted exercise of its constitutional powers," whether submitted as the result of the report or otherwise. That is a terse expression of what the Secretary of State, who signed this treaty on behalf of the Americans, says he meant. Here is what he says in the extract which I have had read:

How can the Senate's power over the agreement be less if it goes to the Senate after the commission's report than it presents an arbitrable question than if it had gone there because of the opinion of the executive branches of both Governments to the same effect?

If the two Governments agree that the difference is arbitrable, they make an agreement to arbitrate it and it is sent to the Senate for its approval. If the two Governments can not agree that the difference is arbitrable, that ends the matter until the commission reports; and if its report is that the difference is arbitrable an agreement is made to arbitrate it and the agreement is sent to the Senate for approval just as if no such question had been raised, and the Senate deals with it with unimpaired powers.

That is what the negotiator of the treaty meant; that is what he publicly declares that he meant; that is what he is willing that we shall say in our resolution he meant; that is what he is willing that we shall put into the treaty through our resolution that he meant; and, accordingly, I am considering this treaty and I am going to vote upon this treaty upon that construction of the meaning of article 3.

It follows, Mr. President, that all this cloud of distress, lest we come to ruin because of being called upon to arbitrate our lives and liberties and sacred honor, disappears absolutely. By these treaties we adopt a statement of a general principle to determine what we shall arbitrate, stating the principle in terms that have been known to English-speaking people for centuries. In case there shall ever be an attempt to force us into an arbitration in violation of that treaty, the constitutional power of the Senate to resist that attempt remains unimpaired.

Mr. President, I am not one of those who think that the making of a treaty is the be-all and end-all of international intercourse and of international strife. It is far more important that nations shall observe treaties than that they shall make them. Italy and Turkey were both parties to The Hague convention; Russia and Persia were both parties to The Hague convention. When Austria absorbed Bosnia and Herzegovina she did it in apparent contravention of the terms of the treaty of Berlin. The real difficulties with which we have to deal in seeking to decrease the frequency of war are not so much the difficulties that arise upon questions which can be decided by courts, but the difficulties that arise from the weaknesses and errors of humanity.

Insult, hatred, resentment, desire for revenge, the lust of conquest, the eagerness to grasp territory, the desire of men whose passions are excited to fight—those are the things which stand in the way of the reign of peace. The making of treaties is but an incident, a step, an agency in the great process of changing the standards of mankind, of promoting a sense of the obligation of self-control as between the people of different nations, just as in the long course of centuries the obligation of self-control as between individuals has been inculcated. It is a long and often a discouraging process. No one can read history, sir, and see what a vast change has taken place in the sense of justice, in the sense of compassion, in the condemnation of brutality, and in the self-control of the people of the earth and not be encouraged to believe that it is a process which is ever and ever going on.

The great question, sir, is not whether we are ending war in making these treaties; it is whether we are doing our part in our day and generation to carry on that great process that is taking mankind out of the reign of brutality into the reign of justice and virtue and compassion and kindness.

Mr. President, the voice of a great Nation is potent in the world. It is not so much that I think these treaties will lead to the arbitration of questions between this country and Great Britain and France, which would not otherwise be arbitrated, that I want them ratified; it is because the moral effect upon mankind of the Government of the United States taking what is believed to be a step forward as compared with the moral effect of the Government of the United States refusing what is believed to be a step forward will make for the education of mankind along the lines of civilization or the retardation of their progress along those lines.

Let our country, which has done so much to exhibit to the world a standard of individual liberty and justice, do its part, not technical, cheese-paring, and meticulous in its dealing with words, but, having due regard to its great office in the world, let it do its part as a moral agent to lead mankind, but a step it may be, but still a step in the right direction, along the path of rational and Christian progress by the ratification of these treaties.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, before the Senator yields the floor, I desire to ask him a question.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. SMITH of Michigan in the chair). Does the Senator from New York yield to the Senator from Massachusetts?

Mr. ROOT. I do.

Mr. LODGE. I asked the Senator a question about who should pass upon the justiciability of the question where there was doubt, and he said he would answer it at a later point in his speech.

Mr. ROOT. I thought I did.

Mr. LODGE. I only wanted to be sure that I understood his answer correctly. I understood the Senator to say that under the treaty that question would be decided by the high commission of inquiry, as I interpret clause 3 of article 3.

Mr. ROOT. As you did interpret it?

Mr. LODGE. As I did interpret it.

Mr. ROOT. Before you offered your resolution?

Mr. LODGE. Before I offered the resolution; but as the resolution interprets it the decision remains in the hands of the treaty-making power of the United States.

Mr. ROOT. Precisely.

Mr. LODGE. That is my understanding. To take a specific instance: Southern bonds I conceive to be a justiciable question, for if a pecuniary claim is not justiciable, I do not know what is; but I do not think it is an arbitrable question or one to be arbitrated, and I think the final decision of that question under my resolution remains in the hands of the treaty-making power of the United States.

Mr. ROOT. Mr. President, I thought the terms that I used were not capable of any doubt.

Mr. LODGE. I did not misconstrue them.

Mr. ROOT. About southern bonds; my understanding is that the negotiators of these treaties on both sides have a complete understanding that that question can not be arbitrated, because it can not be a question hereafter arising, so that, although forty or fifty or sixty or a hundred or a thousand years ago, when the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. WILLIAMS] and I were young [laughter], those bonds might have been treated as the basis of justiciable claims, but they can be no longer under treaties which set their faces to the future and deal only with questions hereafter arising.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. Mr. President, I do not lay claim to any great knowledge of diplomatic relations and the treaty-making features of our Government. But I do lay claim to some understanding of the English language.

The Senator from Mississippi [Mr. WILLIAMS] the other day in his speech took as the text or the basis for that speech that we delegated no power under this treaty to outsiders which we had not delegated under any other treaty, and that in the last analysis any question arising affecting the United States in its foreign relations the Senate would have the same power under this treaty to act upon them as it has now. I should like to call the attention of Senators to the language contained in each article of this proposed treaty and to certain matters that go before this language in order to see if I understand the purport of the whole matter.

Mr. O'GORMAN. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from New York suggests the absence of a quorum. The Secretary will call the roll.

The Secretary called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Bacon	Crawford	McLean	Smith, Ga.
Bailey	Culberson	Martin, Va.	Smith, Md.
Bourne	Curtis	Martine, N. J.	Smith, Mich.
Brandegee	Dillingham	Myers	Smith, S. C.
Briggs	du Pont	Newlands	Smoot
Bristow	Foster	Nixon	Stephenson
Brown	Gallinger	O'Gorman	Swanson
Bryan	Gardner	Overman	Thornton
Burnham	Guggenheim	Page	Tillman
Burton	Hitchcock	Paynter	Townsend
Chamberlain	Johnson, Me.	Penrose	Warren
Chilton	Johnston, Ala.	Perkins	Watson
Clapp	Lea	Richardson	Williams
Clark, Wyo.	Lodge	Root
Clarke, Ark.	Lorimer	Shively
Crane	McCumber	Simmons

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Sixty-one Senators have answered to their names. A quorum of the Senate is present. The Senator from South Carolina.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. I wish to call attention first to article 1. It has been contended by some on this side that the treaty would be acceptable or its defects remedied by knocking out clause 3 of section 3. I take it that if the treaty is taken in toto it will be found that clause 3 of section 3 is simply the logical sequence of what is both expressed and implied in all the other clauses, namely, that the power to arbitrate the questions that may arise under this treaty shall be as far as possible eliminated from any interference on the part of the Senate or of the officers of this Government. Or, to put it in the words of the Senator from Mississippi, when he said "I hope the time may come when disinterested and impartial judges shall pass upon the questions at issue between the States." These may not be his exact words, but they substantially convey his meaning. Therefore, to prove that this is the idea, I call attention to section 1 of article 1 in the proposed treaty, which I read:

All differences hereafter arising between the high contracting parties, which it has not been possible to adjust by diplomacy, relating to international matters in which the high contracting parties are concerned by virtue of a claim of right made by one against the other under treaty or otherwise—

Note the word "all," in line 1, and the words "under treaty or otherwise" in the last line of the portion quoted.

I emphasize the word "otherwise" for the reason that I shall attempt to prove that, if I read it correctly, that clause 3 of article 3 is simply the logical expression of what is implied and expressed in all the other articles.

I read further from article 1—and which are justiciable in their nature by reason of being susceptible of decision by the application of the principles of law or equity, shall be submitted to the permanent court of arbitration established at The Hague by the convention of October 18, 1907, or to some other arbitral tribunal, as shall [may] be decided in each case by special agreement, which special agreement shall provide for the organization of such tribunal if necessary, to define the scope of the powers of the arbitrators, the question or questions at issue, and settle the terms of reference and the procedure thereunder.

"SHALL be submitted to the permanent court"—"The Hague." This is mandatory.

Now, the alternative, quoting from the same article and clause—or to some other arbitral tribunal, as shall [may] be decided in each case by special agreement, which special agreement shall provide for the organization of such tribunal if necessary, to define the scope of the powers of the arbitrators, the question or questions at issue, and settle the terms of reference and the procedure thereunder.

Now, mark you, this special tribunal, when organized in place of or in lieu of The Hague, shall have the power to define the scope of the powers of the arbitrators, the question or questions at issue, and settle the terms of reference and the procedure thereunder. I shall compare this with the corresponding section in the existing treaty.

I quote the corresponding article in the existing treaty:

Differences which may arise of a legal nature or relating to the interpretation of treaties existing between the two contracting parties, and which it may not have been possible to settle by diplomacy, shall be referred to the Permanent Court of Arbitration established at The Hague by the convention of the 29th of July, 1899, provided, nevertheless, that they do not affect the vital interests, the independence, or the honor of the two contracting States, and do not concern the interests of third parties.

In article 1 of the proposed treaty "all" matters are to be referred. In the present treaty very vital and necessary exceptions are made. There is provision made in the proposed treaty for a special agreement. To quote again—

Which special agreement shall provide for the organization of such tribunal, if necessary, to define the scope of the powers of the arbitrators, the question or questions at issue, and settle the terms of reference and the procedure thereunder.

In other words, by special agreement we simply provide for the nomination or the naming of a special tribunal, which special tribunal shall then have plenary power to pass upon the merits of the case.

Now, the words of this section mean, if they mean anything, first, it is mandatory that all differences shall be referred to The Hague. If these differences are not so referred we appoint another tribunal and give that tribunal power to define—in the actual words of the text—

To define the scope of the powers of the arbitrators, the question or questions at issue, and settle the terms of reference and procedure thereunder.

Now, let us compare this section with the corresponding section in the existing treaty, to show that there is an intent in the very outset to eliminate as far as possible the Senate from any participation in determining the differences that may arise between this Government and a foreign country.

There is an exception made in the existing treaty, which those who are opposing the present form of the treaty insist shall be in some way incorporated in the proposed treaty to guard against that which all are agreed needs to be guarded against and which astute lawyers on the other side have been at pains to argue has not been eliminated nor the power of the Senate in any way abridged; and yet in the present treaty the points for which we are contending are explicitly stated, while in the other they must depend upon the interpretation of the Secretary of State or a resolution stating that they do not mean what the English language in the proposed treaty says it does mean.

Now, let us go one step further. I think I have shown clearly to those who have followed me that the special agreement can only go so far as to appoint a special tribunal to serve in lieu of The Hague, if it is not referred to The Hague, and then defines the office and powers of the special tribunal by saying it shall have practically full and complete power. I will read it:

To define the scope of the powers of the arbitrators, the question or questions at issue, and settle the terms of reference and the procedure thereunder.

This special tribunal, which is to be appointed by special agreement, is to be given practically unlimited power. By the very wording of the section this special tribunal, by special agreement, is to serve in lieu of The Hague. The powers of this special tribunal are defined. Therefore it is a natural inference that under the present treaty The Hague is intended to have like power.

In the remarks of the Senator from Mississippi and from others on this point, they claim that by this special agreement the rights and prerogatives of the Senators, under the Constitution, were left unimpaired. Where the language occurs to justify this statement by them I fail to see. They base this argument on the first lines of the fourth clause of article 1, which reads as follows:

The special agreement in each case shall be made on the part of the United States by the President of the United States, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate thereof.

What special agreement? The special agreement to appoint a tribunal. Then to give that tribunal plenary power to act as it pleases in the premises.

So that the functions that we retain to ourselves under the present treaty go only so far under the special agreement as to appoint a tribunal other than that which is established permanently at The Hague and then to give this special tribunal still greater power.

Now, in proof of the fact that those who drew this instrument and wrote it had this idea in view that we of the Senate or those charged under the Constitution with the right to make these treaties and to guard them should be limited by this act, if possible, let me read section 2 of the existing treaty and compare it with what we propose to substitute for it. Article 2 of the existing treaty says:

In each individual case the high contracting parties, before appealing to the permanent court of arbitration, shall conclude a special agreement.

Here is the special agreement that is defined in the existing treaty and a special agreement, as is defined in the proposed treaty, and here is the matter of difference between the two. In the existing treaty it is provided that—

In each individual case the high contracting parties, before appealing to the permanent court of arbitration, shall conclude a special agreement defining clearly the matter in dispute.

Not appoint a court, but that the high contracting parties shall decide—

Defining clearly the matter in dispute, the scope of the powers of the arbitrators, and the periods to be fixed for the formation of the arbitral tribunal and the several stages of the procedure.

The high contracting parties in the present treaty shall be parties to this, namely, the Government of the United States—the Senate of the United States, charged with the treaty-making power. Under the proposed treaty it is submitted to a special tribunal, who shall have the power to do that with which we are now charged. I take it that the elimination of section 3 alone would not cure the evil tendencies of this measure, but to do this there must be a modification of every article. I suspect that our great desire for peace has led us to view carelessly this proposed treaty, which in its present form may have the opposite effect to that intended.

A proof of the fact that those who wrote this instrument were attempting to eliminate as far as possible the Senate from any participation in this very vital matter, I quote from the message of the President in submitting the proposed treaty to the Senate:

With a view to receiving the advice and consent of the Senate to the ratification of the treaty, I transmit herewith an authenticated copy of a treaty signed by the plenipotentiaries of the United States and Great Britain on August 3, 1911, extending the scope and obligation of the policy of arbitration adopted in the present arbitration treaty of April 4, 1908, between the two countries, so as to exclude certain exceptions contained in that treaty—

I have quoted these exceptions earlier in my remarks. They, in the language of the President, are to be excluded. To exclude the right to defend as Senators our national honor on the floor of the Senate, the right to say what shall and what shall not enter into a treaty, or what shall be the nature of questions arbitrated. The President explicitly says—so as to exclude certain exceptions contained in that treaty and to provide means for the peaceful solution of all questions of difference which it shall be found impossible in future to settle by diplomacy.

That is the President's statement in transmitting to the Senate the proposed treaty. Whatever reservations we might have under the present treaty in order to maintain the right of the Senate, the right of the treaty-making power, to so modify them as to meet what we consider to be the righteous relations between others and ourselves, we propose in this treaty to exclude them from being left out and to include them in the questions to be arbitrated.

In further proof that they have this object in view, clause 2 of the preamble says:

The high contracting parties have, therefore, determined, in furtherance of these ends, to conclude a treaty extending the scope and obligations of the policy of arbitration adopted in their present arbitration treaty of April 4, 1908, so as to exclude certain exceptions contained in that treaty and to provide means for the peaceful solution of all questions of difference which it shall be found impossible in future to settle by diplomacy, and for that purpose they have appointed as their respective plenipotentiaries.

We have heard argument here for three or four days, both on this side and the other, for this is a nonpartisan question, to prove that in this treaty, if ratified without amendment, we are not curtailing the power of the Senate, that we do not propose to put it beyond what has been the accepted custom for all these years, when in the message of the President and in the preamble and in the text of the treaty itself in article 1, article 2, and article 3 there is conclusive proof to the contrary.

I for one propose that I shall exercise my right as a representative of the State of South Carolina in part and of the Nation in part, not because I would not shift a great responsibility, if I might do it honorably, but because under the Constitution and my oath I can not do it honorably, and therefore I shall not vote to do it dishonorably. I shall stand here and do my duty as far as I see it. If we differ on the interpretation of this instrument here in this body and have hurled back and forth radical differences of opinion, it will not be long before the fires of passion will be aroused, even in this body, and I suspect the humorist who said "The best nesting place for the dove of peace is in the cannon's mouth," was not very far from the truth.

But to come back to the argument I am making, I shall not read the treaty further, for I would not presume upon the intelligence of my colleagues to imply that so far as our international relations are concerned they have not given it their careful and earnest study; but I should like for some one who understands the English language to take this instrument from article 1 to the last clause of article 3 and show me wherein it does not comport with the preamble and with the message of the President, to the effect that it proposes to take every question that might arise under any circumstances and in any exigency and submit it to whom? To submit it, in the first place, to the established court of arbitration at The Hague, or else, through a shrewdly worded phrase, that we should by a special agreement appoint another tribunal, and then say that this other tribunal shall be clothed with the like or with greater power than The Hague now has.

What constitutes an international question? The claim of any government against another. The notice taken by any government of any matter that it may see fit to recognize as international.

The question of the finances or the indebtedness of a State or of a nation to another nation does not come within the scope of arbitration technically, but it is justiciable. In other words, if the question was raised as to any indebtedness between the two parties what the high court of inquiry decided on would be final. That means that any question relating to the indebtedness of the States to any citizen of a foreign nation, under the unlimited terms of this treaty, may become a question to be decided by the high court of inquiry.

The Senator from Massachusetts says the interpretation of the meaning of the treaty, as set forth in a document by the Secretary of State, and which under the law must accompany the treaty itself, will be taken as explaining the meaning of the treaty. I think it is our duty to make our treaties—as our laws also should be made—so explicit as to be easily understood and interpreted by all intelligent persons. We have not spent thus much time arguing as to whether or not we desire a treaty looking toward the promotion of peace. All of us are agreed on that; but we have spent much time arguing in the Senate of the United States what the treaty means. Here is an instrument drawn up, I suppose—

Mr. REED. Mr. President—

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from South Carolina yield to the Senator from Missouri?

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. I do.

Mr. REED. If it would not interrupt the Senator, I would like to ask him a question. He is a lawyer and has drawn many documents where there was a lawyer for the other side.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. Mr. President, I would just like to correct the Senator.

Mr. REED. You are not a lawyer?

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. I must plead not guilty.

Mr. REED. You are a business man and have had them draw instruments?

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. To my sorrow, I have.

Mr. REED. Did you ever consent to sign an instrument where the construction of it was in dispute between the two lawyers representing the two parties before the instrument was signed?

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. No, indeed. That is a very pertinent question to ask. Much time has been spent in attempting—shall I say it?—to play upon the credulity of the Senate, not giving it credit for having sense enough to know what the English language means. If we are in doubt as to what the treaty means, we must take from amongst our number certain interpreters of the instrument upon which the relation of this country to all the leading nations of the world depends. In place of having it explicit, and saying openly and above board that we propose to eliminate the Senate from any participation hereafter in international questions which may arise, or if we propose that they shall participate, stating in plain English how they shall participate, we have involved sentences in this treaty, cleverly drawn obscurities, so that clause 3 of article 3, as I said in the beginning of my speech, is no more obnoxious to me than the language in article 1 and the corollary that follows from it in article 2. For article 1 says, as I said a moment ago, the special agreement shall consist in appointing a tribunal, which tribunal shall be given the right—I am not quoting the language exactly. I am now—to define the scope of the powers of the arbitrators, the question or questions at issue, and settle the terms of reference and the procedure thereunder.

Then down below, in clause 3 of article 1, it looks almost like an attempt cleverly to conceal the natural sequence of that which went before:

The special agreement in each case shall be made on the part of the United States by the President of the United States, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate thereof.

In other words, our participation, to repeat, is simply to go to the extent of appointing a special tribunal, which special tribunal then will take the matter in their own hands and, without any further reference to us whatever, dispose of the matter.

Now, further still, the last clause of article 1 says:

Such agreements shall be binding only when confirmed by the two Governments by an exchange of notes.

We have heard about the moral effect and about the legal effect. The effect will be to bind us to submit to The Hague, without recourse or redress, all questions if we follow the text of this instrument as honorable men, having agreed to it, or follow the finding of the special tribunal, because there is no court of final appeal other than this. Therefore the findings of one of these courts will bind us, and there is no provision where it shall be referred back or first referred to us for us to determine what matters are in dispute and to what extent we will allow them to go to arbitration.

Now, with that interpretation upon it, I come to article 2. If Senators followed me closely, if they did me that honor, they will find that in article 1 they have taken this power out of our hands. Article 2 provides practically the same thing:

The high contracting parties further agree to institute, as occasion arises and as hereinafter provided, a joint high commission of inquiry, to which, upon the request of either party, shall be referred for impartial and conscientious investigation any controversy between the parties within the scope of article 1—

Anyone who will read and study article 1 will see that its scope is as wide as the possibility of a difference between any two nations. Article 2 provides that any question arising, upon the request of either party shall be referred to this joint high commission of inquiry, whether or not it falls within the scope of article 1. I quote the balance of paragraph—before such controversy has been submitted to arbitration, and also any other controversy hereafter arising between them, even if they are not agreed that it falls within the scope of article 1.

If article 1 is not wide enough under its present verbiage, then they make ample provision in article 2, that it shall go beyond the possibility of misinterpretation and take all questions in and make them subject to the provisions of treaty.

There is some little hope of peace held out in article 2, to wit, the parts italicized:

And also any other controversy hereafter arising between them even if they are not agreed that it falls within the scope of article 1: Provided, however, That such reference may be postponed until the expiration of one year after the date of the formal request therefor, in order to afford an opportunity for diplomatic discussion and adjustment of the questions in controversy, if either party desires such postponement.

In other words, having taken it out of the hands of the Senate and made ample provision that it shall be removed from the scope and power of the Senate, you will give them, as has been stated on this floor, ample time to cool down—one year to become rational, and by virtue of the cooling process possibly give us what we are entitled to.

Now, let us take article 3. It is not necessary for me to read any further from article 2, but I have shown that one is just an amplification of the other:

The joint high commission of inquiry, instituted in each case as provided for in article 2, is authorized to examine into and report upon the particular questions or matters referred to it, for the purpose of facilitating the solution of disputes by elucidating the facts, and to define the issues presented by such questions, and also to include in its report such recommendations and conclusions as may be appropriate.

The reports of the commission shall not be regarded as decisions of the questions or matters so submitted either on the facts or on the law and shall in no way have the character of an arbitral award.

Now, here is the clause of article 3 that has been under dispute and the basis of argument in this Chamber:

It is further agreed, however, that in cases in which the parties disagree as to whether or not a difference is subject to arbitration under article 1 of this treaty, that question shall be submitted to the joint high commission of inquiry; and if all or all but one of the members of the commission agree and report that such difference is within the scope of article 1, it shall be referred to arbitration in accordance with the provisions of this treaty.

Which in all conscience is wide enough, broad enough, in this treaty to satisfy any European nation having designs on us.

Every provision of this treaty eliminates the Senate and gives these outside parties full and complete power to pass upon any question that may arise. I said in the outset that I would show that every article in this treaty was but a step leading up to and finding its recapitulation in clause 3 of article 3. Article 1 and its amplification leads up to and is a part of article 2, with its amplification, and article 3 complete is but the final step resulting from articles 1 and 2.

The message of the President which accompanies this treaty plainly states its purpose. The preamble reiterates it, and the language of the text of the article proves it.

Now, in conclusion, I shall state another reason for voting against this treaty in its present form. It is a reason that has reference to my own State. It has been said in this debate or elsewhere that the Secretary of State has said that the securities held by foreigners against the several Southern States, which securities were issued during the period of reconstruction and carpetbag rule and repudiated by the Southern States, would be subject to the findings of the courts provided for in this measure. It would be interesting if the world could understand how these debts were contracted and by whom.

Prof. Scott, of the University of Wisconsin, says the debt of South Carolina before the war was $3,814,862.91.

In 1874, under the carpetbag rule, according to the same author, the State debt amounted to $28,997,608.20. An investigating committee that had been appointed at this time reported that the State was bankrupt. In 1878 we scaled our debt and repudiated some of the spurious bonds. Why? In reply to this question, in justification of my State, I shall read from the International Review, of New York, for the months of July and December, 1880, what it has to say in reference to this debt, who contracted it, and who purchased the bonds.

Before quoting him literally it might be well to state that these bonds were issued by the carpetbaggers for paying the interest on the public debt, bonds indorsed for railroads, so-called refunding bonds, and so forth, all of which were to meet the extravagant expenses incurred by the carpetbag rule. Now I quote the International Review, published in New York. It says:

There can be no doubt but this debt was incurred by a set of rascals, and it is more than probable that men equally bad took possession of the bonds. The State was not benefited by them, and the frauds and extravagances which prevailed in the Legislature of South Carolina during the period in which this debt was created will ever be a disgrace, not only to that State—

Now, just one quotation from the proceedings of the taxpayers' convention in my State, February 20, 1874. This remarkable condition was found by an examination of the books: Taxable property in 1860, $490,000,000; taxable property now, 1874, $170,000,000, practically one-third less. Taxes levied in 1860, $500,000; taxes levied this year, 1874, on practically one-third of the property, $2,700,000. Another item is public printing. September, 1868, to October 31, 1870—before they had learned to steal shrewdly or had become reckless—$43,440. October, 1872, to October, 1873, $331,945.66 was the amount of the printing bill.

It is needless for me to go further, but before I conclude I want to call attention to an act in my own State, passed March 7, 1871, creating what is known as the sterling funded debt. It provided for the issue of 6 per cent coupon bonds, aggregating in amount £1,200,000. Those issuing these bonds used the terminology of English money. A large part of the issue was never used in the legitimate way in which it was intended, in conversion bonds for the refunding of the State debt, but was scattered broadcast, and is broadcast to-day. There are lots of these bonds with the seal of the State of South Carolina on them, and in all honor we did not propose that the men, women, and children who had made the State glorious should be beggared by the thieving of an unholy lot who prostituted every office in our State, and prostituted the great seal of the State by placing it upon these spurious bonds.

I shall not stand upon this floor to-day and vote for any measure that might humiliate my State two generations after by having these matters called into question—her honor questioned—because there will not be the patience and time taken to study that horrible period. Neither will men set it down to the honor of South Carolina—that she has outstanding obligations that she repudiated in any form. But they would gloriously exonerate her if they understood the condition that brought about the so-called debt and the glorious men who in honor and integrity and righteousness repudiated it.

Now, I am just as much as any man on this floor for peace. I think that war is a relic of the age of barbarism. Our schools and churches and homes are training the boys and girls to suppress passion, to promote and develop intellect, and to understand that to every effect there is an adequate cause; to every unrighteous effect that there must of necessity be an unrighteous cause; and in order to eliminate the unrighteous effect we must eliminate the unrighteous cause. And if passion is allowed to run riot, if it brings death and murder and confusion and strife, we must control the passions and eliminate the result. Just so this principle is applicable to nations as well. But in order to set the example of peace, am I to make myself an example of a pusillanimous coward who in order to maintain the virtue of my home will not strike a blow at an attempted outrage thereon. Will I delegate to any man or set of men the right to determine what is an insult to the inmates of my household? I take the honor and integrity of my Nation to be as dear to me in a public sense as I take the honor and the purity and sanctity of my home in a private sense. With power under this democratic Government distributed and delegated as it is, let each and everyone stand as a man shouldering his full responsibility, repudiating any attempt to take from him the right to keep the old home of the American Government pure from defilement or outrage from outside.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Mr. President, several weeks ago, speaking on the subject of the pending arbitration treaty with Great Britain, I undertook to show that in Great Britain the pending treaty was regarded as the first step toward an alliance between the United States and Great Britain. I quoted from the speech of Sir Edward Grey in the House of Commons, in which he said that if the treaty should be ratified it would, in his opinion, probably be followed by other agreements between the United States and Great Britain, the effect of which would be that if Great Britain became embroiled in hostilities with another country having no such arbitration agreement the United States would go to the aid of Great Britain. The speech of Sir Edward Grey had a peculiar significance at the time, because it was delivered when relations between Great Britain and Germany were strained to the breaking, and it had a peculiar significance also because Sir Edward Grey stood then and now stands at the head of the great department of foreign affairs of Great Britain. Not only that, but he had been one of those who had initiated the negotiations for the treaty.

Mr. President, my purpose to-day is to demonstrate that there exists in the United States a similar purpose to that which Sir Edward Grey describes. If the Senator from New York [Mr. Root] is right in saying that the speech of Mr. Secretary Knox, delivered before a public meeting in an American city, shall be taken as a means of interpreting this treaty, how much more, from the British standpoint at least, shall we say that the speech of Sir Edward Grey, delivered in his official capacity in the House of Commons, has the same effect as placing the British interpretation upon that treaty?

But my purpose to-day is to demonstrate to the Senate that the same purpose which Sir Edward Grey expressed as prevailing in Great Britain, that this treaty shall be only the first step toward an alliance between the two countries, exists in this country, existed in the initiation of the treaty. Moreover, I shall prove that it now dominates those who are attempting to influence the Senate of the United States by arousing the public opinion of the country in favor of the ratification of the treaty without the dotting of an "i" or the crossing of a "t."

Mr. President, what is the importance of this treaty? Does it lie in the fact that the treaty does away with certain exceptions in the old treaty? The treaty which we have now provides that we shall arbitrate all questions with Great Britain that do not involve national honor, vital interests, or third parties. One might think that doing away with these exceptions would give us a new treaty to be hailed with delight by those who stand for universal arbitration; but we heard upon the floor of the Senate yesterday a statement made by the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. Lodge] that, in his opinion, the treaty would fail and be rejected by Great Britain if the Senate of the United States should strike out a part of article 3 which gives to the commission the power to interpret the treaty; that is, that Great Britain would not want the treaty with all its broad provisions; would not want the treaty with its enlarged powers for the arbitrators; would not want the treaty with its broader scope of arbitration, unless the Senate consented to have the joint high commission remain as the feature of the treaty—the commission, which able lawyers have asserted and which they to-day believe, will supersede the Senate of the United States in interpreting the treaty.

So, Mr. President, I feel warranted in saying that the broadening language of this treaty is not what is sought by those who are pushing it. What they seek is the creation of the commission by which the Senate, representing the American people, shall lose in part, at least, its power to control the interpretation of the treaty.

I might quote from some Americans who have openly declared themselves as in favor of an alliance with Great Britain; I might quote from our ambassador to Great Britain, who recently, in a banquet speech, has proclaimed his hope that there might be a unity of the English-speaking races, but I go by them. I say here, now, that the power behind the throne, the power which is forcing these treaties upon the Senate in their present form, which is arousing, or attempting to arouse, public sentiment for them, is the power of Andrew Carnegie's money.

Not only has he created a board of trustees, consisting of some 27 members, and turned over to it $10,000,000, but he has directly, through that organization, and also personally for himself, contributed to the support of all the leading organizations in the country which are at the present time, and have been for months, engaged in stirring up the people of the United States to petition the Senate to ratify these treaties without the dotting of an "i" or the crossing of a "t."

We have, first, the American Peace Society, with its branches in all parts of the United States, a powerful body, and if it would devote its energies to the securing of international peace and the increase of the practice of arbitration, I would acclaim it a patriotic organization.

There is, second, the Federal Council of the Churches of Christ in America, which is busily at work among the religious organizations, using Andrew Carnegie's money, arousing the people of the churches to take action, without even knowing whether there is an existing arbitration treaty or not or what the terms are of the proposed new arbitration treaty.

There is, third, the American Association for International Conciliation, a great organization, which boasts that it sent out at one time 250,000 copies of a document.

Fourth, there is the American Peace Arbitration League of New York.

Fifth, there is the National Committee to Celebrate the Peace Anniversary between the United States and Great Britain.

Referring to the last of these, I want to read some of the objects that are to be attained by this peace celebration committee of which Andrew Carnegie is the chairman. One of them is:

That an unlimited arbitration treaty between Great Britain and the United States shall be negotiated and signed, a project which bids fair to be accomplished before the anniversary.

Another object is:

That a special textbook devoted to the relations of the United States with Great Britain, and especially with Canada, for the last century, shall be prepared under the direction of competent historians in both countries, and used in all schools where the English language is spoken during the period preceding the centennial anniversary of the signing of the Treaty of Ghent, and that the schools shall then join in its general celebration.

A textbook to rewrite the history of relations between the United States and Great Britain as though history was not already correct, as though it must be censored and amended!

Another of the objects of this association is:

That Sulgrave Manor, in Northamptonshire, England, the home of George Washington's ancestors, shall be purchased by popular subscription in both countries as a visible monument to the cordial relations existing between the two great branches of the English-speaking peoples.

I shall not stop to read all of the other purposes, many of which are foreign to the legitimate purpose of a celebration, but which have been brought in there as expressing the personal desires of Andrew Carnegie.

But, now, Mr. President, I am going to read from an article written by Andrew Carnegie 20 years ago, when he was in his prime, which expresses, as is evident, the passionate desire of his heart that the United States shall again become an integral part of the British Empire. I read from the North American Review of 1893 the following most astonishing language. I had a faint recollection of it, but I was amazed recently on sending for the volume to read the exact language. I only quote certain paragraphs in the article.

Mr. Carnegie says in opening his article:

Until a little more than a hundred years ago the English-speaking race dwelt together in unity, the American being as much a citizen of Britain as the Scotchman, Welshman, or Irishman. A difference, unhappily, arose under the British constitution, their common heritage, as to the right of the citizens of the older part of the state to tax their fellows in the newer part across the sea without their consent; but separation was not contemplated by Washington, Franklin, Adams, Jefferson, Jay, and other leaders. On the contrary, these great men never ceased to proclaim their loyalty to, and their desire to remain part of, Britain; and they disclaimed any idea of separation, which was indeed accepted at last, but only when forced upon them as a sad necessity from which there was no honorable escape if they were to maintain the rights they had acquired, not as American, but as British citizens.

Think of it! The author of the Declaration of Independence is pictured as never having ceased to proclaim his loyalty to, and desire to remain a part of, Britain! The great patriot at the head of our armies is described as always proclaiming his loyalty to Great Britain.

I turn to page 690 of the same volume and find this:

Both Briton and American being now fully agreed that those who made the attempt to tax without giving the right of representation were wrong, and that in resisting this the colonists vindicated their rights as British citizens and, therefore, only did their duty, the question arises, Is a separation thus forced upon one of the parties, and now thus deeply regretted by the other, to be permanent?

I can not think so, and I crave permission to adduce some considerations in support of my belief that the future is certainly to see a reunion of the separated parts and once again a common citizenship.

I turn now to page 702 of the same volume. He had prior to this been discussing the various objections which he proceeds to remove by a very careful argument of minute detail and particularity. He then gives this little review of a reunited empire:

Numerous as would be the States comprising the reunited nation, each possessing equal rights, still Britain, as the home of the race, would ever retain precedence—first among equals. However great the number of the children who might sit around her in council, there could never be but one mother, and that mother Britain.

I turn now to page 708 of the same volume:

Let no man imagine that I write as a partisan in dealing with these questions. I know no party in this great argument, either in America or in Britain. Whatever obstructs reunion I oppose; whatever promotes reunion I favor. I judge all political questions from this standpoint. All party divisions sink into nothingness in my thoughts compared with the reunion of our race.

And then I turn, in conclusion, to the last paragraph of the article:

Let men say what they will, therefore; I say that as surely as the sun in the heavens once shone upon Britain and America united, so surely is it one morning to rise, shine upon, and greet again "the reunited States"—"the British-American union."

Mr. President, I have read parts of that article by Andrew Carnegie in order to show his life's purpose. In a great Republic like the United States the opinion of an individual, however great, might not amount to much; the influence which he may exercise may not be great, but consider that this man, animated by this purpose, is the possessor of three or four hundred million dollars, wrung from the industry of the American people by the favor of law; that he is in a position to devote $10,000,000 here and $20,000,000 there to educational purposes; that this money can be used to influence churches, to hire orators, to organize press bureaus. To thus mold public opinion his wealth is sufficient to bring considerable influence to bear upon the Senate. I say that it is brought to bear for this treaty, not because the treaty proposes arbitration, not because it broadens the scope of arbitration, because the Senator from Massachusetts said yesterday that, with all those desirable provisions, still the treaty would probably be rejected if the Senate were to cut out of it that provision which creates the joint high commission and permits it to supersede the Senate in the interpretation of the terms of the treaty itself. It is the joint high commission which is desired. It is the Carnegie idea to bring together the two Governments of the United States and Great Britain into one official body.

It is well, Mr. President, when we are on the eve of voting upon this treaty to take an account and to realize that all the so-called public opinion which has been brought to bear upon the Senate in favor of this treaty containing, as it does, that commission provision is not chiefly in the interest of arbitration. That is not the motive behind the mighty power which has aroused this public sentiment, so called. The motive behind that purpose is to bring about an alliance, at least, as Sir Edward Grey himself said, between the United States and Great Britain, and force the United States to abandon its position of isolation, friendly with all nations, but having no entangling alliances with any.

It is influences of this sort, influences due to the money of Mr. Andrew Carnegie, which inflict upon Senators such postal-card communications as I have here—something like a hundred received this week, within a few days, with my name printed upon the front of the postal card and a request upon the back of the postal card that I vote for the treaties.

I have a great respect, Mr. President, for the opinions of my constituents. I am perhaps more ready than the average Senator to recognize the power of public opinion when it is a real public opinion and the right of my constituents to command my vote to meet their views, and I pay as much attention, when I receive a communication in the cramped, trembling hand of a farmer as I would to a communication dictated in the office of a banker or a business man; but I do not bow to a public opinion aroused in this artificial way, simply by the use of money, to carry out a purpose to make a false union, a real alliance between the United States and Great Britain.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia obtained the floor.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President—

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Georgia yield to the Senator from Massachusetts?

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Yes, sir.

Mr. LODGE. I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Massachusetts suggests the absence of a quorum. The Secretary will call the roll.

The Secretary called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Bacon	Cummins	McCumber	Richardson
Bailey	Curtis	McLean	Root
Bourne	du Pont	Martin, Va.	Shively
Brandegee	Foster	Martine, N. J.	Simmons
Briggs	Gallinger	Myers	Smith, Ga.
Bristow	Gardner	Nelson	Smith, Md.
Brown	Gore	Newlands	Smith, S. C.
Burnham	Guggenheim	O'Gorman	Smoot
Burton	Hitchcock	Overman	Stephenson
Chilton	Johnson, Me.	Page	Sutherland
Clapp	Johnston, Ala.	Paynter	Thornton
Clark, Wyo.	Kenyon	Percy	Tillman
Clarke, Ark.	Lea	Perkins	Warren
Crawford	Lippitt	Pomerene	Watson
Culberson	Lodge	Rayner	Wetmore
Cullom	Lorimer	Reed	Williams

The VICE PRESIDENT. Sixty-four Senators have answered to the roll call. A quorum of the Senate is present.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Mr. President, last summer we began to hear a great deal about the new treaties that were to bring universal peace. I now desire to ask the attention of the Senate to the proposed treaties in detail, and to insist that we should not approve them as drawn, because of the uncertainty as to their meaning.

A lawyer would not advise a client to sign a paper providing for the future conduct of his business when that lawyer was unable to tell what the paper meant. If he had half a dozen lawyers associated with him and they conferred about it and were not able to agree as to what the paper meant, he certainly would not advise his client to execute the paper.

We have had the spectacle of Senators—able Senators—discussing these treaties, and I scarcely think any two agree as to the meaning of any particular paragraph. We have an interpretation of them furnished through the Senator from New York [Mr. Root] by the Secretary of State. Before I take my seat I shall furnish an interpretation by the President of the United States, in which he construes them, and I shall show how the constructions of the President and the Secretary of State differ.

The effort to adopt a treaty with Great Britain by which future disagreements between the two nations may be arbitrated is not new. Such a treaty was submitted in January, 1897, prepared by Mr. Olney. I wish to call attention to the broad language there used looking toward the adjustment of future disputes.

The Olney treaty used the following language:

The high contracting parties agree to submit to arbitration in accordance with the provisions and subject to the limitations of this treaty all questions in difference between them which they may fail to adjust by diplomatic negotiations.

Mr. Cleveland supported that treaty with a short but strong message, and I desire the privilege, without stopping to read it, to embody in the Record a few passages from that message.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, such permission is granted.

The matter referred to is as follows:

Though the result reached may not meet the views of the advocates of immediate, unlimited, and irrevocable arbitration of all international controversies, it is, nevertheless, confidently believed that the treaty can not fail to be everywhere recognized as making a long step in the right direction, and as embodying a practical working plan by which disputes between the two countries will reach a peaceful adjustment. * * * It is eminently fitting as well as fortunate that the attempt to accomplish results so beneficent should be initiated by kindred peoples, speaking the same tongue, and joined together by all the ties of common traditions, common institutions, and common aspirations. * * * The experiment of substituting civilized methods for brute force as the means of settling international questions of right will thus be tried under the happiest auspices. Its success ought not to be doubtful, and the fact that its ultimate ensuing benefits are not likely to be limited to the two countries immediately concerned should cause it to be promoted all the more eagerly.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. We now have a treaty prepared by Secretary Root, which is in force, providing for the arbitration of future differences with Great Britain, and I desire, without stopping to read it, to embody that treaty in the Record.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, permission is granted.

The treaty referred to is as follows:

ARBITRATION CONVENTION BETWEEN THE UNITED STATES AND GREAT BRITAIN.

[Ratifications exchanged at Washington, June 4, 1908. Proclaimed June 5, 1908.]

BY THE PRESIDENT OF THE UNITED STATES OF AMERICA.

A proclamation.

Whereas an arbitration convention between the United States of America and the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Ireland was concluded and signed by their respective plenipotentiaries at Washington on the 4th day of April, 1908, the original of which convention is word for word as follows:

The President of the United States of America and His Majesty the King of the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Ireland and of the British Dominions beyond the Seas, Emperor of India, desiring in pursuance of the principles set forth in articles 15-19 of the convention for the pacific settlement of international disputes, signed at The Hague July 29, 1899, to enter into negotiations for the conclusion of an arbitration convention, have named as their plenipotentiaries, to wit:

The President of the United States of America, ELIHU ROOT, Secretary of State of the United States, and

His Majesty the King of the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Ireland and of the British Dominions beyond the Seas, Emperor of India, the Right Hon. James Bryce, O. M., who, after having communicated to one another their full powers, found in good and due form, have agreed upon the following articles:

ARTICLE I.

Differences which may arise of a legal nature or relating to the interpretation of treaties existing between the two contracting parties and which it may not have been possible to settle by diplomacy, shall be referred to the Permanent Court of Arbitration established at The Hague by the convention of the 29th of July, 1899, provided, nevertheless, that they do not affect the vital interests, the independence, or the honor of the two contracting States and do not concern the interests of third parties.

ARTICLE II.

In each individual case the high contracting parties, before appealing to the permanent court of arbitration, shall conclude a special agreement defining clearly the matter in dispute, the scope of the powers of the arbitrators, and the periods to be fixed for the formation of the arbitral tribunal and the several stages of the procedure. It is understood that such special agreements on the part of the United States will be made by the President of the United States, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate thereof; His Majesty's Government reserving the right before concluding a special agreement in any matter affecting the interests of a self-governing dominion of the British Empire to obtain the concurrence therein of the Government of that dominion.

Such agreements shall be binding only when confirmed by the two Governments by an exchange of notes.

ARTICLE III.

The present convention shall be ratified by the President of the United States of America, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate thereof, and by His Britannic Majesty. The ratifications shall be exchanged at Washington as soon as possible, and the convention shall take effect on the date of the exchange of its ratifications.

ARTICLE IV.

The present convention is concluded for a period of five years, dating from the day of the exchange of its ratifications.

Done in duplicate at the city of Washington, this 4th day of April, in the year 1908.

ELIHU ROOT. [SEAL.]
JAMES BRYCE. [SEAL.]

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I have embodied this treaty in my remarks especially because in many of the meetings that have been held throughout the United States patriotic men have called for the adoption of the present treaty upon the theory that it was a great advance in the adjustment of international troubles, apparently believing it was the first step that we had ever made for providing by an arbitration treaty for the settlement of future differences, and apparently not knowing that the treaty now in force provides for the arbitration of future differences.

I wish to embody it for another reason. I think it probably a better treaty than the one now submitted to us. Mr. President, I desire, without stopping to read it, to embody in the RECORD the proposed treaty.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, permission is granted.

The treaty referred to is as follows:

The United States of America and His Majesty the King of the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Ireland and of the British Dominions beyond the Seas, Emperor of India, being equally desirous of perpetuating the peace, which has happily existed between the two nations, as established in 1814 by the treaty of Ghent, and has never since been interrupted by an appeal to arms, and which has been confirmed and strengthened in recent years by a number of treaties whereby pending controversies have been adjusted by agreement or settled by arbitration or otherwise provided for, so that now for the first time there are no important questions of difference outstanding between them, and being resolved that no future differences shall be a cause of hostilities between them or interrupt their good relations and friendship;

The high contracting parties have therefore determined, in furtherance of these ends, to conclude a treaty extending the scope and obligations of the policy of arbitration adopted in their present arbitration treaty of April 4, 1908, so as to exclude certain exceptions contained in that treaty and to provide means for the peaceful solution of all questions of difference which it shall be found impossible in future to settle by diplomacy, and for that purpose they have appointed as their respective plenipotentiaries:

The President of the United States of America, the Hon. Philander C. Knox, Secretary of State of the United States; and

His Britannic Majesty, the Right Hon. James Bryce, O. M., his ambassador extraordinary and plenipotentiary at Washington;

Who, having communicated to one another their full powers, found in good and due form, have agreed upon the following articles:

ARTICLE I.

All differences hereafter arising between the high contracting parties, which it has not been possible to adjust by diplomacy, relating to international matters in which the high contracting parties are concerned by virtue of a claim of right made by one against the other under treaty or otherwise, and which are justiciable in their nature by reason of being susceptible of decision by the application of the principles of law or equity, shall be submitted to the Permanent Court of Arbitration established at The Hague by the convention of October 18, 1907, or to some other arbitral tribunal, as shall [may] be decided in each case by special agreement, which special agreement shall provide for the organization of such tribunal if necessary to define the scope of the powers of the arbitrators, the question or questions at issue, and settle the terms of reference and the procedure thereunder.

The provisions of articles 37 to 90, inclusive, of the convention for the pacific settlement of international disputes, concluded at the second peace conference at The Hague on the 18th of October, 1907, so far as applicable, and unless they are inconsistent with or modified by the provisions of the special agreement to be concluded in each case, and excepting articles 53 and 54 of such convention, shall govern the arbitration proceedings to be taken under this treaty.

The special agreement in each case shall be made on the part of the United States by the President of the United States, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate thereof, His Majesty's Government reserving the right before concluding a special agreement in any matter affecting the interests of a self-governing dominion of the British Empire to obtain the concurrence therein of the government of that dominion.

Such agreements shall be binding when confirmed by the two Governments by an exchange of notes.

ARTICLE II.

The high contracting parties further agree to institute, as occasion arises and as hereinafter provided, a joint high commission of inquiry, to which, upon the request of either party, shall be referred for impartial and conscientious investigation any controversy between the parties within the scope of Article I, before such controversy has been submitted to arbitration, and also any other controversy hereafter arising between them even if they are not agreed that it falls within the scope of Article I: Provided, however, That such reference may be postponed until the expiration of one year after the date of the formal request therefor, in order to afford an opportunity for diplomatic discussion and adjustment of the questions in controversy, if either party desires such postponement.

Whenever a question or matter of difference is referred to the Joint High Commission of Inquiry, as herein provided, each of the high contracting parties shall designate three of its nationals to act as members of the commission of inquiry for the purpose of such reference; or the commission may be otherwise constituted in any particular case by the terms of reference, the membership of the commission and terms of reference to be determined in each case by an exchange of notes.

The provisions of articles 9 to 36, inclusive, of the Convention for the Pacific Settlement of International Disputes concluded at The Hague on the 18th October, 1907, so far as applicable and unless they are inconsistent with the provisions of this treaty, or are modified by the terms of reference agreed upon in any particular case, shall govern the organization and procedure of the commission.

ARTICLE III.

The Joint High Commission of Inquiry, instituted in each case as provided for in Article II, is authorized to examine into and report upon the particular questions or matters referred to it, for the purpose of facilitating the solution of disputes by elucidating the facts, and to define the issues presented by such questions, and also to include in its report such recommendations and conclusions as may be appropriate.

The reports of the commission shall not be regarded as decisions of the questions or matters so submitted either on the facts or on the law and shall in no way have the character of an arbitral award.

[It is further agreed, however, that in cases in which the parties disagree as to whether or not a difference is subject to arbitration under Article I of this treaty, that question shall be submitted to the Joint High Commission of Inquiry; and if all or all but one of the members of the commission agree and report that such difference is within the scope of Article I, it shall be referred to arbitration in accordance with the provisions of this treaty.]

ARTICLE IV.

The commission shall have power to administer oaths to witnesses and take evidence on oath whenever deemed necessary in any proceeding, or inquiry, or matter within its jurisdiction under this treaty; and the high contracting parties agree to adopt such legislation as may be appropriate and necessary to give the commission the powers above mentioned, and to provide for the issue of subpoenas and for compelling the attendance of witnesses in the proceedings before the commission.

On the inquiry both sides must be heard, and each party is entitled to appoint an agent, whose duty it shall be to represent his Government before the commission and to present to the commission, either personally or through counsel retained for that purpose, such evidence and arguments as he may deem necessary and appropriate for the information of the commission.

ARTICLE V.

The commission shall meet whenever called upon to make an examination and report under the terms of this treaty, and the commission may fix such times and places for its meetings as may be necessary, subject at all times to special call or direction of the two Governments. Each commissioner, upon the first joint meeting of the commission after his appointment, shall, before proceeding with the work of the commission, make and subscribe a solemn declaration in writing that he will faithfully and impartially perform the duties imposed upon him under this treaty, and such declaration shall be entered on the records of the proceedings of the commission.

The United States and British sections of the commission may each appoint a secretary, and these shall act as joint secretaries of the commission at its joint sessions, and the commission may employ experts and clerical assistants from time to time as it may deem advisable. The salaries and personal expenses of the commission and of the agents and counsel and of the secretaries shall be paid by their respective Governments, and all reasonable and necessary joint expenses of the commission incurred by it shall be paid in equal moieties by the high contracting parties.

ARTICLE VI.

This treaty shall supersede the arbitration treaty concluded between the high contracting parties on April 4, 1908, but all agreements, awards, and proceedings under that treaty shall continue in force and effect and this treaty shall not affect in any way the provisions of the treaty of January 11, 1909, relating to questions arising between the United States and the Dominion of Canada.

ARTICLE VII.

The present treaty shall be ratified by the President of the United States of America, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate thereof, and by His Britannic Majesty. The ratifications shall be exchanged at Washington as soon as possible and the treaty shall take effect on the date of the exchange of its ratifications. It shall thereafter remain in force continuously unless and until terminated by 24 months' written notice given by either high contracting party to the other.

In faith whereof the respective plenipotentiaries have signed this treaty in duplicate and have hereunto affixed their seals.

Done at Washington the 3d day of August, A. D. 1911.

I certify that the foregoing is a true copy of the original treaty this day signed.

Secretary of State.

AUGUST 3, 1911.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Let us compare the terms of these two treaties and show how difficult it is to decide what the proposed treaty means.

The provision in the treaty of 1908, applicable to the differences to be in future settled by arbitration, is as follows:

Differences which may arise of a legal nature or relating to the interpretation of treaties existing between the two contracting parties and which it may not have been possible to settle by diplomacy, shall be referred to the Permanent Court of Arbitration established at The Hague by the convention of the 29th of July, 1899, provided, nevertheless, that they do not affect the vital interests, the independence, or the honor of the two contracting States, and do not concern the interests of third parties.

It will be observed that the existing treaty submits to arbitration all future differences of a legal nature or relating to the interpretation of treaties existing between the two contracting parties which it may not have been possible to settle by diplomacy. It provides, however, that differences which affect the vital interests, the independence or the honor of the two contracting parties, and which concern the interests of third parties are not to be submitted to arbitration.

These terms "the vital interests, the independence or the honor of the two contracting parties" and differences "which concern the interests of third parties," are the only exceptions to the general agreement contained in the present treaty to refer all differences to arbitration.

I ask you now to consider the language of the proposed treaty. We must judge what the language of article 1 means, in part, by the declaration of the purpose contained in the introduction. That introduction declares:

The high contracting parties have, therefore, determined in furtherance of these ends, to conclude a treaty extending the scope and obligations of the policy of arbitration adopted in their present arbitration treaty of April 4, 1908, so as to exclude certain exceptions contained in that treaty and to provide means for the peaceful solution of all questions of difference which it shall be found impossible in future to settle by diplomacy.

The extract from the proposed treaty which I have just quoted provides that the high contracting parties have determined "to exclude certain exceptions contained" in the treaty of 1908. Those exceptions are differences which affect "the vital interests, the independence, or the honor" of the two contracting States and matters which "concern the interests" of third parties.

The proposed treaty, by declaring that it is to exclude these exceptions, in effect declares that if the new treaty is made, in future the United States is to arbitrate differences which affect the vital interests, the independence, and the honor of the United States, and even differences which concern the interests of third parties.

The introduction to the proposed treaty furthermore declares that this treaty is to provide means—for the peaceful solution of all questions of difference which it shall be found impossible in future to settle by diplomacy.

Can there be any serious doubt as to the meaning of the language of the proposed treaty to which I have referred? It declares that all future differences, not settled by diplomacy, are to be settled by arbitration, and it specifically declares that the purpose of this new treaty is to get away from the words of limitation of the present treaty so that differences affecting the vital interests, the independence, and the honor of the United States shall be arbitrated, and also differences which concern the interests of third parties.

With this introduction just preceding article 1, let us consider the language there contained in the proposed treaty defining the differences that are to be made by it the subject of arbitration.

The language upon this subject in article 1 is:

All differences hereafter arising between the high contracting parties, which it has not been possible to adjust by diplomacy, relating to international matters in which the high contracting parties are concerned by virtue of a claim of right made by one against the other under treaty or otherwise, and which are justiciable in their nature by reason of being susceptible of decision by the application of the principles of law or equity.

I find no words of limitation in this definition of differences to be arbitrated which supersede the broad language used in the introduction.

The term "claim of right" is no limitation of the declaration that "all differences" are to be arbitrated. A claim of right is an assertion of a claim or an assertion of a right. It may be improperly asserted. Before a board of arbitration the right may not be sustained. The term "claim of right" has no technical meaning fixed by law. It covers any assertion of a right by one of the parties against the other under which one of the parties may claim that the other party should do or refrain from doing some particular thing.

The word "justiciable" does not limit the differences described in the introduction. It is not used here as it would be used in the United States as a part of our system of government. We have the executive, the legislative, and the judicial; we would use in our domestic affairs the term "justiciable" as one applicable to a subject which the judiciary would handle, and the term under our system of government would have a limitation placed upon it. Our judiciary can not handle matters that belong to the executive or the legislative departments. The decision of our Supreme Court, therefore, cited by the Senator from New York, has no application whatever to the meaning of the term "justiciable" as here used. We are providing by the proposed treaty for the creation of a board of arbitration to settle differences between the United States and certain foreign countries, either through The Hague or by the creation of a special arbitral tribunal, and the term "justiciable," as used in the proposed treaty, would cover any character of dispute that could be referred to a board of arbitration for decision—one involving an act of the executive or of the legislative branch of the Government, or one, according to the terms of the preamble, from which would not be excluded even matters of vital interest, the independence or the honor of our country or of the other contracting party.

The only additional words that can be construed as words limiting the character of the differences to be submitted to arbitration are these: "Susceptible of decision by the application of the principles of law and equity." What does this mean? We know what law and equity, as applied to the jurisprudence of England and the United States, mean. They are the words that include our system which has been built up for the settlement of personal rights and corporate rights and other questions which go before our courts. Every claim of right by one citizen against another, under our system, is justiciable. The claim may be unsound, yet it is justiciable. The claim may be brought into court by a declaration which goes out on demurrer, the claim being so absurd that it can not possibly be sustained; still it is capable of submission to a court and of decision by the court.

So if the purpose of this language is to use the term "law and equity" in a broad sense, it must mean that so far as practicable the principles of law and equity, as they have grown up in England and the United States for the adjudication of rights, shall be introduced into international law and be used to aid in building up an equally broad system of deciding differences between nations.

As the proposed treaty provides for the submission to a joint high commission of any difference that may arise between the two contracting parties, to determine whether a particular difference is subject to arbitration under this treaty, we should see just how far an honest mind might conclude that our agreement would go with reference to the settlement by arbitration of differences.

The introduction to the proposed treaty strikes the words of limitation in the existing treaty and declares that the purpose of this new treaty is to settle, through a system of arbitration, all differences that are not adjusted by diplomacy. The language in article 1, in view of the language just preceding it in the introduction of the treaty, could fairly be decided to mean that all disputes involving the assertion of a right by one of the countries against the other, whether claiming that the opposing party to the contract should do something or refrain from doing something, must be submitted to arbitration, and that the arbitrators could handle the dispute if it was one subject to decision, and apply to it as nearly as possible the principles of law and equity recognized for the decision of claims of rights between individuals.

Is there any subject of dispute between the two contracting parties that might not honestly be held, with such language used in the proposed treaty, to be covered by its terms?

It can not be claimed that the terms "law and equity" limit this agreement to the extent that "law and equity" known to our jurisprudence has already been introduced into international law; such a construction would narrow rather than broaden the extent of the differences which the present treaty of arbitration provides shall be submitted to arbitration.

Fairly construed, article 1 of the proposed treaty means that the two contracting parties, having in view a plan of arbitration by which every difference is to be arbitrated, will settle their differences in future by a board of arbitrators who are to act in a judicial manner, and the rules that have been applied in law and in equity, under our system, are to be introduced into international law, and, utilizing those principles, all differences between the two contracting parties are to be arbitrated.

At least it must be conceded that the words of limitation in article 1 amount to almost nothing, and that in connection with the introduction they leave practically every difference between the two countries to be arbitrated.

And just here I desire to send to the Secretary, to be read, the opinion of the President of the United States on this subject, and I wish to make the opinion of the President of the United States a part of the discussion of this question, so that it can be considered in connection with the action of the Senate upon this treaty and aid in future interpretation of the treaty.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, the Secretary will read as requested.

The Secretary read as follows:

President Taft, in his speech before the Mountain Lake Chautauqua, at Mountain Lake, Md., on August 7, 1911, said—

Mr. ROOT. May I ask from what this extract is being read? Is it an extract from a speech?

Mr. BACON. I will say I handed that extract to my colleague, and I will state the source of my information. I never had the slightest reason to doubt its authenticity. It is a part of a paper written by a gentleman in Baltimore which was handed to me by the Senator from Maryland [Mr. RAYNER]. The gentleman who wrote the paper is a gentleman of repute, vouched for by the Senator from Maryland; and in that article this is stated to be an extract from the speech delivered by the President of the United States. Of course, while the verification of the original can not now be made, if it is not a correct report of what the President then said, it will certainly be disclosed in the future.

I will say that I observe that the Senator from Maryland is now present. I did not see him at the time I rose to speak. He handed me the paper. I have forgotten the name of the gentleman who wrote the article upon the subject. The Senator from Maryland will remember that he handed me the paper. I have it not here, but I have it in my room, and I will send to have it brought down.

Mr. ROOT. With that explanation of the origin of the paper which is being read, I have no objection to its further reading.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will continue the reading.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I wish to state, before the reading is resumed, that I will furnish the Senator ample additional extracts from the President, equally as strong, in public statements by him. I really asked to have this article read because the senior Senator from Georgia, my colleague, handed it to me and desired to have it read.

Mr. BURTON. Mr. President—

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Georgia yield to the Senator from Ohio?

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Certainly.

Mr. BURTON. Reference was made this morning to an utterance of the President which is in published form, authentic, and vouched for. It is an article known as "The dawn of world peace." I should like to ask the Senator from Georgia whether he expects to quote from that.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. No. The only other quotation I expect to make from the President is from the address of the President of October 3, 1911, at the Chamber of Commerce, Denver, Colo. I have another also, but I find ample in this published paper to cover from him everything I claim he has said.

Mr. BURTON. I will state that in this article the views of the President are set forth at length, and he takes the same view with reference to the prerogatives of the Senate, after the decision of the joint high commission, as those expressed by the Secretary of State and read by the Senator from New York this morning; and I think it but fair that those views be read in the course of this discussion.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I do not know of his having done anything of the kind. I am sure he has declared himself most unqualifiedly in accord with views that are entirely in conflict with those read from the Secretary of State.

Mr. BURTON. Mr. President—

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Georgia yield further to the Senator from Ohio?

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I do.

Mr. BURTON. The article to which I have referred is that to which the Senator from Idaho made reference this morning. I think it contains the fullest statement made by the President on the subject.

Mr. BACON. If my colleague will permit me here, I wish simply to give to the Senator from New York the name of the gentleman in Baltimore—

Mr. ROOT. What I wanted to get at was—

Mr. BACON. Does the Senator from New York object to my giving him the name?

Mr. ROOT. If the Senator wishes to give me the name, I am indifferent.

Mr. BACON. The Senator called on my colleague for information as to the authenticity of this article. I am trying to give it to the Senator.

Mr. ROOT. Very well.

Mr. BACON. It is Mr. Henry Herzberg, a citizen of Baltimore, who is vouched for to me by the Senator from Maryland [Mr. RAYNER] as entirely trustworthy, and it is from a paper prepared by him that I have taken this extract of what purport to be the utterances of the President at the place indicated. The Senator from Maryland is present.

Mr. ROOT. It is perfectly—

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. BRANDEGEE in the chair). The Senator from Georgia has the floor, and he declines to yield further.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I will not decline to yield later on. I simply desire to waste no more time in discussing whether this paper shall be read. I will read it.

President Taft, in a speech before the Mountain Lake Chautauqua at Mountain Lake Park, Md., August 7, 1911, said:

By this treaty, if it is ratified, the Executive and Senate, representing the United States, agree to settle all their differences, as described in the treaty, by arbitration or through a commission.

Should the treaty be ratified, the Senate, exactly as the Executive, will be in honor bound by its obligations in good faith to perform the offices which the main treaty provides shall be performed on the side of the United States, and then to abide the result and to acquiesce or, in so far as may be, perform and execute the judgment of the tribunal.

What is there to prevent the Senate from uniting with the Executive in agreeing to settle future controversies of a given description in a treaty by the judgment of an impartial tribunal, and to submit to that tribunal not only the question how the issue ought to be decided, but also as a condition precedent whether the issue is within the terms of the treaty already made?

Mr. President, I now present the printed speech by the President, which goes elaborately into the discussion of the same question, and I desire to put it in the RECORD, and I wish the Secretary to read it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will read the part referred to.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I desire him to read only those parts which I have marked.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, they will be read.

The Secretary read as follows:

From an address by the President of the United States on the ratification of the pending treaties for unlimited arbitration with Great Britain and France, delivered October 3, 1911, before the Chamber of Commerce at Denver, Colo.

There is, however, another function, and it is that function that troubles the majority of the Foreign Relations Committee. If it shall happen that in the future a question shall arise between the two parties as to which one party does not wish to arbitrate and as to which the other does, and it becomes a question whether under the construction of the treaty it is really justiciable, so that both parties are bound to the treaty, then it is left to the joint high commission to decide whether the issue actually arising is within the treaty, so that both parties are bound, and is justiciable within the definition that I have given you.

But the argument of the Senate now is that their power does not go to the point of binding themselves in the future to arbitrate something which a tribunal shall determine is within a contract in which they agree to arbitrate a class of questions. They say they must hold and decide, when the question arises, whether it is within the contract which they have signed.

That position absolutely destroys any hope of progress with reference to making a real treaty that shall bind us to something with respect to arbitration. There should be no fooling about this business of arbitration—either we are going to arbitrate something, or we are not. If we are going to agree to arbitrate every issue except that which we do not care to arbitrate, then we ought not to sign arbitration treaties at all. If the Senate has not the power to agree to arbitrate a certain class of questions and submit the question whether the question which arises comes within this class, then its power is very limited in entering into general arbitration treaties that cover all subjects of the future.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Georgia ask permission to incorporate the entire pamphlet?

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. No; I wanted read only those portions which I had marked.

Now, Mr. President, not only does the first paragraph of this treaty declare that everything is to be arbitrated, not only does it strike out the words of limitation in the existing treaty, but the language or article 1, construed in the light of that introduction, means that practically everything is to be arbitrated, and the President so understands it.

We can not afford to adopt this article 1 without limitation unless we mean to say that every difference that arises between Great Britain and the United States shall be settled by arbitration. If we mean that, we should broadly say so, because that is practically the effect of article 1; and the Senator from New York and the Senator from Illinois and the Senator from Ohio thought so when they brought in their report from the Committee on Foreign Relations, for in bringing in their report they asked that the language of article 1 should be limited. They did not then favor the approval of the treaty without a qualification placed upon the language in article 1. In the resolution of ratification which they suggested the following language is used:

The Senate advises and consents to the ratification of the said treaty with the understanding, to be made a part of such ratification, that the treaty does not authorize the submission to arbitration of any question which depends upon or involves the maintenance of the traditional attitude of the United States concerning American questions, or other purely governmental policy.

Why did the Senator from New York and the Senator from Illinois and the Senator from Ohio deem it necessary to provide in the resolution of ratification a limitation to be put upon article 1? Because the language of article 1 is so broad that unless in the ratification resolution words of limitation are added it may justly be extended to every class of disputes between the two countries. I therefore cite the opinion of members of the committee—the opinion of the Senator from New York, of the Senator from Illinois, and the Senator from Ohio—to support the proposition that we can not afford to adopt article 1 without putting some language in the resolutions of ratification declaring that we do not mean by article 1 to arbitrate every possible difference that may arise between the two countries, unless we are really prepared to arbitrate every possible future difference.

Numerous instances have been given by the Senators of differences that we could not consent to arbitrate. The Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE] presented them, and presented them ably and conclusively. The Senator from Georgia [Mr. BACON] presented them, and presented them ably and conclusively.

No Senator claims that we could consent to arbitrate with a foreign country a difference involving the Monroe doctrine, our policy as to immigration, a question involving the validity of bonds issued by the Southern States in the reconstruction days, or any question which involves the traditional attitude of the United States concerning American questions or other purely governmental policy.

I may go further and say that if the Senate were willing to arbitrate questions of this kind and agreed to do so the people of the United States, when the issue came, would not submit them to arbitration and would override the President and the Senate.

Then, if we do not intend to arbitrate all differences, and really can not do so, ought we to make a treaty containing article 1 with its unlimited language, that fairly may be construed as covering every difference? Will it help the cause of peace to make a treaty in such uncertain terms that the opposing party to the treaty may understand it to mean something that you do not for one moment intend it to do? Are you ready to make a treaty which the other contracting party may fairly construe to be an agreement you intend to break?

The Senator from New York [Mr. ROOR] dwelt eloquently upon the desirability of peace. It is hardly necessary for us to answer him upon that line. He desires it no more than do the Senators who oppose this treaty in its present form. It is our desire for peace that has caused us to insist that the treaty drawn by the Senator from New York when Secretary of State is clearer, if not better, than the treaty now submitted to the Senate. It is less apt to cause friction and differences between the two nations than this treaty, the meaning of which is at least doubtful.

I can not myself vote for this treaty unless the resolutions of ratification limit the meaning of article 1. The resolutions of ratification presented by the minority of the committee, prepared by the Senator from New York himself, limit article 1 of the proposed treaty, and they thereby admit the necessity of such action.

Let us go on and see whether the balance of the treaty is satisfactory. The very next clause is one of doubt. If the object had been to put on paper language capable of two or more constructions, it was done with the touch of genius. After describing the differences to be arbitrated, article 1 proceeds:

Shall be submitted to the permanent court of arbitration established at The Hague by the convention of October 18, 1907, or to some other arbitral tribunal, as shall be decided in each case by special agreement—

And so forth.

The special agreement in each case shall be made on the part of the United States by the President of the United States—

And so forth.

This language could fairly be construed to mean that if the President reaches the conclusion that the difference involved between the United States and the other contracting party is justiciable he could submit it at once to The Hague, without any special agreement, thus obviating the reference of the question in any way to the Senate.

I can hardly think that such a purpose was contemplated, but the language is easily capable of the construction that the special agreement referred to is one to be made only where a special tribunal, other than The Hague, is to arbitrate the difference.

Now, let us come to the joint high commission. It is not only to handle questions that are subject to arbitration, but also any controversy hereafter arising between the parties, if they do not agree that it falls within the scope of article 1.

Now, who can compose the joint high commission? Three nationals on each side, if you please, or otherwise, as the President and the representative of the other country may see fit. The high commission is not limited to nationals. It is not limited in number. The high commission can consist of one foreigner, agreed upon by the President or the Secretary of State, and the representative of the other country.

Now, what power do you propose to give to the high commission? If language means anything, the joint high commission has the power to investigate a dispute between the two contracting parties and decide whether it is a subject that must be arbitrated. The joint high commission is vested with the authority to determine whether the difference is one which falls within article 1, and if the joint high commission decides that it does fall there, then we agree that the dispute shall be arbitrated.

I agree with the report made by the majority of the committee prepared, I understand, by the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE]. Like many others, I was captivated last summer by the newspaper articles telling of some marvelous new plan for universal peace, and, no doubt, had I been at a public meeting I would have risen with the balance of the crowd who knew nothing about it and voted to instruct the Senate to ratify the treaty that was to bring universal peace. When I first asked for the report of the Committee on Foreign Relations, it was with the expectation that I might take some part in forwarding this movement toward universal peace. But when I read the report of the majority of that committee, and read the treaty itself, I was thoroughly convinced that the Senator from Massachusetts was right in preparing that majority report, and in pointing out that this proposed treaty, instead of being an aid to universal peace, was calculated to create more differences between the United States and the country making the agreement with the United States than perhaps any other cause that could possibly arise.

In the last of his report the Senator from Massachusetts recommends, and the majority of the committee recommend, that the third clause of article 3 be stricken out. That is the clause which provides that the joint high commission can consider the differences existing between the two contracting parties, and make a report which will determine whether they are the subject of arbitration under this treaty, and it provides that if the joint high commission determines that the subject matter is one covered by article 1, then we are to arbitrate it. The Senator from Massachusetts in this report points out clearly that the effect of the third clause of article 3 in the proposed treaty gives the joint high commission authority to determine whether the difference is of an arbitral character.

Let us take an illustration. Suppose that this treaty was adopted in its present shape and a dispute should arise between the United States and Great Britain. The President thinks it the subject of arbitration. He refers it to the Senate. The Senate believes that it is not the subject of arbitration and rejects the proposition to arbitrate. Then it goes to the joint high commission. The Senate has already passed judgment that it is not the subject of arbitration. Yet the joint high commission takes it up, and the joint high commission after investigating it determines that it falls within article 1 and that we have agreed to arbitrate it. Then what does this third clause do?

Mr. BURTON. Will the Senator from Georgia yield for a question in that connection?

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Yes.

Mr. BURTON. Does the Senator maintain that this treaty provides for any such situation as that?

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I certainly do.

Mr. BURTON. Does not the third article pertain to a case in which the executive departments do not agree as to whether the question is justiciable? Does the Senator maintain that after the Senate has rejected a special agreement we provide for arbitration?

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Will the Senator point to me any language in this treaty that limits it to the President?

Mr. BURTON. It is perfectly plain from the whole provision that it is for a case in which the executive departments do not agree.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. It is perfectly plain to me that it means much more.

Mr. BURTON. Nothing could come to the Senate except in a case of disagreement.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. It certainly could. The President and the representative of Great Britain agree that it is the subject of arbitration, and the President undertakes to prepare a special agreement to arbitrate. He sends it to the Senate for their determination, and the Senate determines that it is not a subject for arbitration under article 1. Then the joint high commission comes in and takes up the subject under the terms of this treaty. There is not a line in the treaty that limits submission to the joint high commission when the President alone has decided the difference not one for arbitration. It says that if either of the parties holds the subject of dispute not to be covered by article 1 it can be referred to the joint high commission. What constitutes the parties? Not the President alone. The President and the Senate constitute the one party to act for the United States. It takes the joint view of both of them to act. How can the Senate, in view of the effect of this treaty, agree to it? The Senator himself signed the report disapproving article 1.

Mr. BURTON. Mr. President—

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Georgia yield further to the Senator from Ohio?

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Certainly.

Mr. BURTON. It is not, perhaps, specially important whether I disapprove of article 1 or not. The Senator from Georgia, however, is in error in saying that. My report is contained here on page 11, in which I state:

The treaty, as it now is, seems to me to sufficiently safeguard national interests and the rights and prerogatives of the Senate. Hence I submit the following additional minority report.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I should like to ask the Senator just one question. Did he not join with the Senator from New York in the proposed resolution?

Mr. BURTON. In a general way, but with this modification, stating that I did not altogether agree with my two colleagues, and then stating this specific, distinct exception, that I regarded the treaty as sufficiently safeguarding national interests and the rights of the Senate.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I would not misconstrue the attitude of the Senator from Ohio, and I am glad he corrected me. I was under the impression that the Senator from New York, the Senator from Illinois, and the Senator from Ohio, all three, agreed on the plan of the Senator from New York for ratification. If they did not, it is simply another illustration showing how impossible it is for us to agree about this treaty.

Mr. BURTON. The further fact should be stated, Mr. President, that the Senators who concurred unqualifiedly in the minority agreement did not regard it as necessary to put in any qualifying resolution, but said such a clause may well be in with a view of putting the question beyond peradventure, not because there was any necessity for it.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Of course, it would not do to adopt a treaty if the language was doubtful, and something was required to take that doubt out. Of course, if the Senators thought something was necessary to take out the doubt we would be in favor of doing what was necessary to take it out before we adopted the treaty.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Mr. President—

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Georgia yield to the Senator from Michigan?

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Certainly.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. It may not be inappropriate to remind the Senator from Georgia that the Committee on Foreign Relations as a committee had no doubt about it, and recommended that the third clause of article 3 be stricken out.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I have called attention to the report, and I have given credit to the Senator from Massachusetts as the member of the committee presenting the report for the view expressed in it, which, when I read, convinced me, and the conviction was so strong that it has been lasting, that the third clause of article 3 must come out of this treaty or it ought to be defeated. That is the report of the majority of the committee. That is the closing advice of the majority of the committee. I accepted that advice from the majority. I accepted it with my knowledge of the broad experience of the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE] and the Senator from Georgia [Mr. BACON]. I became convinced they were right, and nothing that has been said since by the Senator from Massachusetts or the Senator from New York has caused me to doubt the fact that the majority of the committee was right in their first report.

Now, Mr. President, I sent to the desk the speech of the President of the United States, giving his view of what was meant by the third clause of article 3. The Senator from New York presents the opinion of the Secretary of State. I present the opinion of the President of the United States. They cross each other. The Secretary of State tells us that even if we say we will refer this matter to the joint high commission, and even if we say we will abide by its decision and arbitrate the question, if the commission hold that under this treaty we agreed to arbitrate, the Secretary of State tells us that all the Senate has to do is to go back on that agreement and to decline to arbitrate if it desires to do so.

I admit the power; I deny the right. I deny that the Senate can approve a treaty which provides for a joint high commission to decide between Great Britain and the United States the question as to whether a certain difference falls within article 1 and agrees under the treaty that if that joint high commission determines that the difference falls within article 1 we will then arbitrate it. I deny that we can make an agreement of that sort and afterwards repudiate the finding of the joint high commission and preserve our sense of obligation. I grant we have the power; I grant that after any board of arbitration makes a finding against the United States, no matter how displeasing to us, we have the power to decline to comply with it. There is no judge to enter a decree and no sheriff to enforce it. Arbitration treaties and international agreements stand upon honor, or else they are enforced by battleships.

I am unwilling to see our country make an agreement that we will arbitrate the question as to whether a particular difference is covered by an agreement we have made to arbitrate it and then go back on the finding of the board. I do not believe Senators are willing to make an arbitration treaty and provide in it that if there is a disagreement between the two countries as to whether the subject matter of our difference is one which we have already agreed to arbitrate under the treaty, then we will arbitrate the question as to whether it is subject to arbitration and yet say if we lose before this joint high commission we will not stand up to it.

Mr. President, let us look at it a little further. Great Britain is in the same position we are. She agrees to it also. If she loses she is obliged to stand up and go on with the arbitration; but if we lose we are to bring it back to the United States Senate and go back on our agreement to arbitrate. That is the position the Senators are putting us in, are seeking to put the country in. We leave in the third clause to article 3, by which if we can not agree as to whether a particular dispute is subject to arbitration we will arbitrate that. Suppose we gain in a reference to the joint high commission, Great Britain having been on the other side, the difference being one we wished to arbitrate and Great Britain did not wish to arbitrate.

Great Britain must abide the decision of the joint high commission, but we, under the resolutions of ratification proposed now by the Senator from Massachusetts, arrange to refer it back to the Senate to have a chance to repudiate it.

The language of the resolutions of ratification of the treaty proposed now by the Senator can not commend them to Senators if read carefully. I wish the Secretary to read them for me. I ask Senators to carefully note the first resolution, which declares that we are fixing to arbitrate everything, and the second resolution, which says that we are seeking to reserve the constitutional power of the Senate in an agreement to arbitrate everything, so that we can avoid arbitration.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will read the resolutions as requested.

The SECRETARY. The resolutions submitted by Mr. LODGE, January 11, 1912, are as follows:

Resolved (two-thirds of the Senators present concurring therein), That the Senate advise and consent to the ratification of a treaty signed by the plenipotentiaries of the United States and Great Britain on August 3, 1911, extending the scope and obligation of the policy of arbitration adopted in the present arbitration treaty of April 4, 1908, between the two countries, so as to exclude certain exceptions contained in that treaty, and to provide means for the peaceful solution of all questions of difference which it shall be found impossible in future to settle by diplomacy.

Resolved further, That the Senate advise and consent to the ratification of the treaty with the understanding, to be made a part of such ratification, that any joint high commission of inquiry to which shall be referred the question as to whether or not a difference is subject to arbitration under Article I of the treaty, as provided by Article III thereof, the American members of such commission shall be appointed by the President, subject to the advice and consent of the Senate, and with the further understanding that the reservation in Article I of the treaty that the special agreement in each case shall be made by the President, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, means the concurrence of the Senate in the full exercise of its constitutional powers in respect to every special agreement whether submitted to the Senate as the result of the report of a joint high commission of inquiry under Article III or otherwise.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Now, Senators, the first resolution reiterates the proposition that we are striking out the exceptions to the present treaty. It reiterates the proposition that we are providing to settle every dispute. The second resolution does not vary from the first, except that it says we are not to waive any constitutional authority of the United States Senate. Under a resolution of that kind, adopting a treaty which expressly declared that the joint high commission could pass upon a dispute between us and determine whether it was the subject of arbitration, and that we would be bound by it, do you suppose that any foreign country would suspect us in that little expression about constitutional authority of the Senate of having reserved the right to repudiate the decision of the joint high commission after it was made?

The Senator from Massachusetts objects to striking out the third clause of article 3 for fear it may prevent us from carrying through the treaty. Senators, could any foreign country prefer for us to leave it in when we were not going to stand up to it—when we had fixed a little way in the second resolution to get out from under it?

The Senate declines to concede to the view of the President that a particular dispute is the subject of arbitration under article 1. The joint high commission hears it and determines that it is the subject of arbitration. If we do not follow the action of that joint high commission, we simply repudiate the third clause of article 3.

I am in favor of either standing up to it or taking it out. If we are ready to arbitrate every difference, let us say so, and put no reservations in our resolutions of ratification. If we are not willing to arbitrate every difference, let us say so. Let us not seek to kill the third clause of article 3 by that second resolution, when one-half the people we deal with would not understand that we are killing it, when we do not know ourselves whether we kill it.

The resolution provides that we shall preserve the constitutional authority of the Senate. The able Senator from New York in his report declared that we had a right to create this joint high commission, and that we had a right to refer to it the question of determining what was and what was not the subject of arbitration; that it was constitutional to make such an agreement. If that is so, the last resolution does not preserve anything to the Senate.

Differences may arise which, I think, we nearly all feel can not be arbitrated. Now, if we are not to arbitrate them, let us say so. If we are to arbitrate every difference, let us say so. I do not believe one-half the Senate is willing for the joint high commission to determine what shall be arbitrated and what shall not.

How I wish the Senator from Massachusetts would stand by his original report and come to our help and strike out the third clause in article 3. Strike it out, and the embarrassment is largely gone. Qualify article 1 with the two provisions inserted by the Senator from New York in his first resolution of ratification and I think the entire Senate, practically, will come to the support of the treaty.

The real trouble is that the President has planted himself on the third paragraph of article 3 and has insisted upon it in all of its power and force. Then let us give it to him or not give it to him. Let us not profess to give it to him and put a doubtful clause in the last resolution of ratification that is to kill it. Let us say what we mean and stand by what we say.

Mr. President, no man upon the floor of the Senate desires universal peace more than I do, but I do not believe that the ratification of a treaty, the language in which is so doubtful, will help the cause of peace.

I know that the adoption of a treaty containing language which is to give us the opportunity to, perhaps, mislead the country with whom we contract, and to disregard an obligation which that country supposed we had made, will subject our country to just criticism.

There is a way for a great and immediate contribution toward universal peace.

The United States is the richest nation in the world. It has a larger number of white inhabitants than any other nation. It is separated by oceans from any possible enemies. Its relations with the great nations of the world are cordial.

Let us invite Great Britain and France to join us in a real effort for universal peace. Let us invite Germany also. I understand that Germany was ready to make a general arbitration treaty with us. Let us invite Russia, also. I regret that we so hastily recalled our treaty with Russia last December. Let us ask these great countries to join with us in that step which would actually lead toward universal peace; let us ask them to join with us in reducing the size of standing armies and in stopping the construction of battleships. This will be the great step in behalf of universal peace, and I believe ours is the country to ask for it. If that is done and the great nations will join with us in the movement, the time will be not far off when at least the danger of war with any of the great nations of the world will have passed.

I do not mean that such an agreement should contemplate an interference with domestic troubles like those existing in Mexico, but I do know that such an agreement would bring into cooperation practically all of the nations of the world and could be carried to such an extent as to prevent international war.

Then would we put an end to the danger of the loss of life by battle! Then would we lessen the burdens put on the masses of the people by excessive taxation! And then would the increase of money in the treasuries of the world make it possible to better train the individual citizen and prepare him to meet the responsibilities of life, to carry its burdens, and to enjoy its pleasures!

Mr. THORNTON. "Mr. President, I do not propose to make an argument on the subject of the pending arbitration treaties, but to very briefly define my position upon them. Before the recess for the Christmas holidays had been taken I had formed an opinion on the matter of these treaties and had expressed it to one of their leading advocates in this body who was anxious to have the treaties ratified without amendment. That opinion was that I would give my consent to vote for the ratification of the treaties provided the right of the Senate to say what questions should be submitted to arbitration should be absolutely safeguarded by suitable amendments or resolutions. The views I then had on the subject have not been changed by the subsequent discussion of the measures on the floor of the Senate.

I deem it proper to say that I am a right peaceable man, unless possibly under stress of undue provocation [laughter], and while I believe generally in peace between nations as well as between individuals, I am not a peace-at-any-price man. Like the Senator from Georgia [Mr. Bacon], who has addressed us on this question, I am one of the few members of this body who have been personal participants in actual warfare, and therefore have a realizing sense of its horrors; yet I can conceive of circumstances under which my national pride and national loyalty would make me think that war, with all of its horrors, would be preferable to peace with all of its blessings. I do not think that any question involving the national honor of my country should ever be submitted to arbitration, and I could never give my consent to such a submission.

For the reason that the amendment of the Senator from Georgia and the resolution of the Senator from Massachusetts make the Senate the final arbiter of all questions which are to be submitted for arbitration, I will, if either of them is adopted, vote for the ratification of these treaties; but otherwise I will never do so.

Mr. BURTON. Mr. President, I shall only have time in a very fragmentary way to meet certain objections which have been made to the pending treaties.

In the first place, I think it is only fair that the fog relating to an alleged difference of opinion between the President and the Secretary of State which has been created should be dispelled. Both alike concur in the opinion that after a decision by the joint tribunal of inquiry that a question is justiciable it must go to the Senate for ratification of the special agreement. In an utterance by the President and in a publication known as the Dawn of World Peace, reprinted by permission from the Woman's Home Companion of November, 1911, after referring to the contention that the decision of the joint high commissioners is final, the President says this:

This interpretation is not justified, and the very language of the treaty, which I have quoted, proves it. This language does not impair and can not fairly be construed as changing in any way, in cases arising under article 3, the procedure with reference to special agreements consented to by the Senate under article 1. In one case under article 1 the executive branches of the Governments concerned decide at the outset that the question is justiciable and should be submitted to arbitration. In the latter case the commission so decides, but in both cases the subsequent procedure is the same.

Mr. President, I do not think it makes very much difference what view we take of this question. The resolution offered by the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. Lodge] is pending here, asserting the rights of the Senate. I do not believe the adoption of that resolution is necessary in order to bring a decision of the joint high commission before this body, but there are two opinions here. One opinion is to the effect that it is not necessary, that the prerogatives of the Senate are secure; the other, that it is necessary to have that kind of a resolution to make them secure. The resolution of ratification of the Senator from Massachusetts removes all doubt, and I do not see why there should be any hesitation in passing it.

In some remarks made on a prior occasion I sought to show that the treaties in the form in which they were drawn provided that in any event, whether under article 1 or under article 3, it was necessary that the agreements should come here. It seems to me that the plain English makes this conclusive. It is stated at the end of the so-called objectionable clause of article 3:

And if all, or all but one, of the members of the commission agree and report that such difference is within the scope of article 1, it shall be referred to arbitration in accordance with the provisions of this treaty.

In article 1 there is set forth with some degree of elaboration the method of submitting any question to arbitration. It is, among other things, provided by this article that the executive heads of the two countries shall enter into a special agreement, the terms and the scope of which shall define the controversy and the procedure, and shall specify whether the question shall go to The Hague or to a special tribunal, and that this special agreement can only be made by and with the advice and consent of the Senate. Article 3 would be absolutely ineffective unless we reinforce it with the procedure provided in article 1; in other words, an agreement under article 3 by this joint high commission brings it to the same position which it would have under article 1, and you then begin with these words:

Shall be submitted to the permanent court of arbitration established at The Hague by the convention of October 18, 1907.

An argument was brought forward here a moment ago—I do not think very seriously—that this special agreement could go to the arbitrators without any reference to the Senate. Mr. President, anyone who will carefully read this first article will see that there is no basis whatever for that position, because it is stated in the clearest language, "as may be decided in each case by special agreement"; that is, whether it goes to The Hague or to a special tribunal, and this special agreement can only be made "by and with the advice and consent of the Senate."

In that connection it has also been alleged with somewhat more seriousness that a controversy might be presented by the President to the Senate, the Senate might reject it, and then it would go, without further executive action, to this joint high commission.

The language of the treaty is conclusive that such is not the case, for it provides that the submission to this commission must be made by the heads of the respective governments—the high contracting parties, as they are termed. In the very preamble to the treaty there is this expression:

The high contracting parties have—

Then omitting some portions which are immaterial—for that purpose appointed as their respective plenipotentiaries—

Then it goes on to enumerate—

The President of the United States of America, the Hon. Philander C. Knox, Secretary of State of the United States; and His Britannic Majesty, the Hon. James Bryce, O. M., ambassador extraordinary and plenipotentiary at Washington.

This affords a clear definition of what is meant by the "high contracting parties."

Thus, Mr. President, it is perfectly clear to my mind that under article 3 a decision of this joint high commission of inquiry brings a controversy to the same position in which it would have been had there been an agreement between the King of Great Britain or his ministers on the one side and the President of the United States and his Secretary of State on the other. In the latter case it is agreed at the outset that it is justiciable, while in the former case the decision that it is justiciable is reached by the interposition of the commission of inquiry. In both cases this question must go to the Senate. I dismiss that, however, as unworthy of further attention, and because further argument is unnecessary, since the resolution of ratification provides for the situation created by a report of the commission of inquiry under article 3.

But it is alleged, Mr. President, that this is but an entering wedge for an alliance with Great Britain. With all due respect to those who make this allegation, it is a chimera, a baseless vision of the imagination. This country of ours is not going to enter into entangling alliances; we are not going to depart from the policy of a hundred years, laid down by the fathers of the Republic and dictated and determined by every consideration of public policy.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Mr. President—

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Ohio yield to the Senator from Nebraska?

Mr. BURTON. Certainly.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I think the Senator from Ohio has forgotten that he himself has been widely quoted in the public press as being of the opinion that this treaty would probably lead to other agreements between the United States and Great Britain in the nature of an alliance.

Mr. BURTON. Mr. President, I indulge in what perhaps is the indiscretion of patronizing a clipping bureau, and I did see a paragraph to that effect in a newspaper, which shall be nameless, in New York City. It is unnecessary for me to state to the Senator from Nebraska that it was utterly without any foundation, and I did not, of course, dignify it with any denial. It is possible that lucubration was copied into some other newspaper, but I trust it did not get into the paper of which the Senator from Nebraska is the proprietor.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. The paper to which I refer, in which the interview originated, was a paper published in the city of Cleveland, known to be very friendly to the Senator from Ohio, and often the medium in which he publishes views on public questions.

Mr. BURTON. I should like to know to what paper you refer.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I refer to the Cleveland Leader. In the Cleveland Leader of March 11, 1911, Senator BURTON is quoted at considerable length, and, among other things, he said:

Of course, that is a separate treaty between two nations, and its effect would not be changed directly. However, the making of an arbitration treaty with Great Britain probably would lead to a definite expression of England's position and, little by little, to other relations between the three countries—

Mr. BURTON. What is that last sentence?

Mr. HITCHCOCK (reading):

The three countries—

That is, Great Britain, Japan, and the United States—possibly to an alliance between them. That would do away with any fear of hostilities between Japan and the United States.

Mr. BURTON. The language as used there does not involve any alliance in the sense in which the term is usually employed.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. It reads "possibly to an alliance between them."

Mr. BURTON. I beg the Senator to take my assurance that I never used any language of that kind.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. President—

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Ohio yield to the Senator from Mississippi?

Mr. WILLIAMS. Will the Senator from Ohio yield just for a suggestion there to this effect, that if this treaty with Great Britain be an alliance with Great Britain, then the identical treaty with France will be an alliance with France; the identical treaty with Germany will be an alliance with Germany; and the identical treaty with Italy will be an alliance with Italy; and when we get through the United States will be in alliance with everybody?

Mr. BURTON. It would be very well, I will say here, whether so stated in a newspaper or not, to have an alliance, not for war, not for offense or aggression, but for peace. Some language used by Sir Edward Grey in the English House of Commons has been quoted very extensively to show that he expected an alliance with the United States. His language has been very much misunderstood. He had in view only such arrangements among the nations as would keep the peace.

Mr. REED. Mr. President—

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Ohio yield to the Senator from Missouri?

Mr. BURTON. Yes.

Mr. REED. Would the Senator from Ohio, upon the strength of these treaties, be willing to cut down the military appropriations and quit building battleships?

Mr. BURTON. If these treaties are followed by other treaties; yes. In a measure they furnish grounds for abating our military and naval program if they are carried into effect by the countries interested. We can not accomplish everything in a day. The Senator from Missouri knows that no one has been more strenuous than I have been in opposing the ambitious battleship program of recent years; and I am promoting the same views in advocating the adoption of these treaties.

Mr. REED. Does the Senator from Ohio think there is any confidence manifested in them when we are asked not only to continue our military appropriations, but when England, Germany, and France are enormously increasing their armaments?

Mr. BURTON. Of course no one can speak for those who are making these recommendations. I, at least, do not pretend to do so. On the other hand, we can not accomplish in a day the great results which would follow from the general adoption of a policy of arbitration. There is no one who imagines for a minute that these treaties are going to create any millennium or even bring us to the gates of a millennium of peace. The most that we can say is that they are the best arbitration treaties that have been framed and they mark an advance in the great movement for peace and for the decrease of war.

It has been said here, Mr. President, that these treaties arbitrate everything. Look at their wording. The first article provides:

All differences hereafter arising between the high contracting parties, which it has not been possible to adjust by diplomacy, relating to international matters in which the high contracting parties are concerned by virtue of a claim of right made by one against the other under treaty or otherwise, and which are justiciable in their nature by reason of being susceptible of decision by the application of the principles of law or equity, shall be submitted to the Permanent Court of Arbitration established at The Hague.

Under the second article a somewhat wider range of controversies may be submitted, but the finding of the commission is not conclusive or binding, and I think it comes with very poor grace for us, who have been among the most prominent in The Hague convention, who have recommended commissions of inquiry, who have recommended, indeed, by our diplomatic representatives compulsory agreements in submitting certain controversies to such commissions, to come in here and say that we shall be incurring danger by leaving any controversy to a commission of inquiry when the provision is protected by a condition that the finding shall not be conclusive or binding.

Mr. President, I sincerely hope that the third clause of article 3 will not be voted out, because it is the very best feature of this whole treaty. First, when there is general agreement between the executive heads of the respective countries that a controversy shall be arbitrated, it goes to arbitration, subject, of course, to the ratification of the Senate. Second, there is this provision, that any dispute may be referred to a commission of inquiry, but that the decision shall not be binding; and to that is joined a most helpful condition, that on the request of either of the parties there may be a delay of one year to give time for that deliberation which, if it would not have prevented all wars, would have prevented many of the bloodiest and most disastrous contests in the history of the world. Third, when there is a disagreement between the executive heads of the two countries, then the question may be left to a commission of inquiry to determine whether it is justiciable. That commission of inquiry can make no decision that has any greater binding force or sanction than would be true in case there is no dispute about their arbitrable quality. The provision for a commission, too, gives the opportunity for a comparison of views, for argument, and for delay, if necessary, for the interposition of diplomacy to see if the question can be settled, and then the question is left again to the Senate.

Mr. REED. Mr. President—

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Ohio yield further to the Senator from Missouri?

Mr. BURTON. I very much regret that I have only a few moments more, but if the question is very brief—

Mr. REED. It is just a brief question.

Mr. BURTON. Very well.

Mr. REED. Suppose that during that year of delay, when our hands are absolutely tied, some foreign country was fortifying a position it had obtained in South America, would the Senator be willing that we should have our hands tied for that year of time?

Mr. BURTON. Our hands would not be tied in the slightest degree.

Mr. REED. How would we avoid it?

Mr. BURTON. One of the things most carefully provided for in The Hague convention is that the delay necessary for a decision shall not prevent the mobilization of troops and shall not prevent preparation for war. Nothing in these treaties forbids preparation for war. The Senator from Missouri, I think, if he reads them, will agree with me in the conclusion that it does not mean anything of the kind.

Then there has been a certain amount of discussion here in good faith as to the rights of the Senate. In either case, whether the question comes to us from the Executive department or from this commission of inquiry, there is a moral obligation not to refuse arbitration in a proper case. We can not carelessly or under the dictates of selfishness or a disposition for national aggrandizement refuse to arbitrate. We must exercise good faith and honor. The legal right does exist to refuse to ratify an agreement, whether it comes to us as the result of a finding that is justiciable under article 3 or under article 1. Under either article there is a recognition of the fact that the Senate of the United States is a part of the treaty-making power. But the treaty recognizes the further fact that these are arbitration treaties whose provisions are not to be disregarded. We have already entered into engagements of the same character.

It has been said here that England would be at a great disadvantage, as England does not have a chance to refer the question to a senate. I have no fear but the English Government will take care of itself; but there is a very substantial concession made here to the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Ireland in that self-governing colonies may consider propositions pertaining to them. Their consent is required as well as the ratification of the Senate.

Mr. President, what is the gain of ratifying these treaties? The greatest credit is due to the late administration of President Roosevelt and to the then Secretary of State, Mr. Root, for negotiating and securing the ratification of the treaties of 1908 with a number of nations. They went to the high-water mark that was possible at that time; they made a great advance; but all those treaties contained certain exceptions—honor, vital interests, independence, and questions in which the interests of third parties are concerned. Two of those expressions—"honor and vital interests"—are so vague, so non-susceptible of definition that so long as they appear in a treaty we can have no certainty of beneficial or salutary results. This treaty establishes a standard which is the only correct one, a standard under which arbitration may assume increasing importance as peace and good will increase and international jurisprudence includes a larger number of questions, the standard of justiciability, of right between nation and nation the same as between man and man. Constant friction and irritation would arise if the treaty made exceptions of questions of honor, vital interests, and questions involving third parties. Either nation might hide behind the vagueness and indefiniteness of those words. The words of the pending treaties have not received absolute definition—the Senate would have a right to decide whether a question was justiciable—but they are based on the right principle for the growth of peace among nations. For that reason, Mr. President, I urge their ratification. Furthermore, to reject these treaties to-day and place ourselves in the position of rejecting the advances of other nations would be to put ourselves out of line with that great march of progress toward a better day of amity and good will, in which in the past we have borne so prominent a part.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The hour of 4.30 o'clock having arrived, the question first is upon the first amendment to the treaty recommended by the committee, which the Secretary will report. The treaty has not been read in full. Is there objection to dispensing with the first formal reading of the treaty? [A pause.] The Chair hears none.

The SECRETARY. In the print of August 5, 1911, on page 3, line 4, it is proposed after the word "tribunal" to insert a comma, and in the same line to strike out "may" and in lieu thereof to insert the word "shall," so that if amended it will read:

Or to some other arbitral tribunal, as shall be decided in each case by special agreement.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection the amendment is agreed to. The Secretary will state the next amendment.

The SECRETARY. On page 4, article 3, beginning with line 28, it is proposed to strike out the third paragraph of that article, which reads as follows:

It is further agreed, however, that in cases in which the parties disagree as to whether or not a difference is subject to arbitration under article 1 of this treaty, that question shall be submitted to the joint high commission of inquiry; and if all or all but one of the members of the commission agree and report that such difference is within the scope of article 1, it shall be referred to arbitration in accordance with the provisions of this treaty.

Mr. ROOT. I rise for the purpose of a parliamentary inquiry.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator will state it.

Mr. ROOT. It is, What is the position of the amendment in view of the action of the Senator from Massachusetts, who was in charge of the treaty, under the authority of the Committee on Foreign Relations, and who has offered a resolution for the ratification of the treaty without amendment? Does the resolution offered by the Senator from Massachusetts, in effect, withdraw the amendment?

Mr. CLARKE of Arkansas and several other Senators. No.

Mr. LODGE rose.

Mr. ROOT. The Senator from Massachusetts can state his intention, I suppose.

Mr. LODGE. The amendment now pending was the report of the Committee on Foreign Relations, and is still that report. Personally, I shall vote against it. It is the report of the majority of the committee.

The VICE PRESIDENT. It is to strike out the matter which the Secretary has just read. The question is on agreeing to strike it out.

Mr. CLARKE of Arkansas. On that I demand the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered, and the Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the senior Senator from Missouri [Mr. STONE]. On this particular amendment I transfer the pair to the junior Senator from North Dakota [Mr. GRONNA], and will vote. I vote "nay."

Mr. SHIVELY (when the name of Mr. DAVIS was called). The junior Senator from Arkansas is paired with the senior Senator from South Dakota [Mr. GAMBLE]. Were the junior Senator from Arkansas present he would vote "yea."

Mr. SHIVELY (when Mr. STONE's name was called). The senior Senator from Missouri [Mr. STONE] was paired with the Senator from Wyoming [Mr. CLARK], and the pair has been transferred. Were the senior Senator from Missouri present he would vote "yea."

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. JONES. My colleague [Mr. POINDEXTER] has been called out of the city on account of the serious illness of his mother. He has advised me how he would vote on some amendments, but not on this one. So I can not say how he would vote on the pending amendment.

Mr. LEA. I desire to state that the senior Senator from Tennessee [Mr. TAYLOR] is necessarily absent from the city. I do not know how he would vote on this amendment.

Mr. BORAH. I wish to announce that my colleague [Mr. HEYBURN] is necessarily absent. If he were present, he would vote "yea."

The result was announced—yeas 42, nays 40, as follows:

YEAS—42.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Are there other amendments to be offered to the treaty?

Mr. CULBERSON. I offer the amendment I send to the desk.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Texas offers an amendment, which will be stated.

The SECRETARY. In the first paragraph of article 1, after the word "equity," at the top of page 3, line 1, insert the following words:

But which shall not embrace any question which affects the vital interests, the independence, or the honor of either of the two contracting parties, nor any question which concerns the interests of third parties.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment proposed by the Senator from Texas. [Putting the question.] The "noes" appear to have it.

Mr. CULBERSON. I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The Secretary proceeded to call the roll, and Mr. BACON and Mr. BAILEY answered to their names.

Mr. BORAH. A number of us here did not hear the amendment. We would like to have it stated again.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, the amendment will be restated.

The Secretary restated the amendment.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will resume the call of the roll.

The Secretary resumed the calling of the roll.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the Senator from Missouri [Mr. STONE]. Not knowing how he would vote on this question, I withhold my vote.

Mr. SHIVELY (when the name of Mr. DAVIS was called). I again announce the pair of the junior Senator from Arkansas [Mr. DAVIS] with the senior Senator from South Dakota [Mr. GAMBLE].

Mr. LEA (when Mr. TAYLOR's name was called). I again announce the absence of the senior Senator from Tennessee [Mr. TAYLOR]. I do not know how he would vote on this amendment.

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. Upon further information I will transfer the pair I have with the Senator from Missouri [Mr. STONE] to the Senator from North Dakota [Mr. GRONNA], and will vote. I vote "nay."

Mr. SHIVELY. To whom does the Senator from Wyoming transfer his pair?

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. To the junior Senator from North Dakota [Mr. GRONNA].

Mr. SHIVELY. I neglected to state when the name was called that the Senator from Missouri [Mr. STONE] was paired on this vote with the Senator from Wyoming [Mr. CLARK]. The Senator from Wyoming now announces a transfer of his pair.

Mr. JONES. As I have heretofore stated, my colleague [Mr. POINDEXTER] has been called out of the city by the serious illness of his mother. I do not know how he would vote on this question if he were present.

The result was announced—yeas 37, nays 45, as follows:

Mr. LODGE. Is it an amendment to the treaty?

Mr. BAILEY (after having voted in the affirmative, when Mr. DIXON's name was called). I only a moment ago paired with the Senator from Montana [Mr. DIXON], and under that impression he has left the Chamber. I withdraw my vote.

So Mr. CHAMBERLAIN's amendment was agreed to.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Are there other amendments to the treaty? If not, the treaty will be reported to the Senate.

The SECRETARY. A treaty signed by the plenipotentiaries of the United States and Great Britain on August 3, 1911, extending the scope and obligation of the policy of arbitration adopted in the present arbitration treaty of April 4, 1908, between the two countries so as to exclude certain exceptions contained in that treaty and to provide means for the peaceful solution of all questions of difference which it shall be found impossible in future to settle by diplomacy.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection the amendments recommended by the Committee of the Whole are concurred in.

Mr. BACON. I understood that the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE] would offer a resolution.

Mr. LODGE. I am going to offer it now.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection the amendments recommended by the Committee of the Whole are concurred in. Are there amendments to be offered to the treaty in the Senate?

Mr. LODGE. If the Chair will allow me, I think we are as in open executive session and not as in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. BACON. I was about to make the same point.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The rules provide for the same procedure in executive session as in open session. But the matter is disposed of to a point where a resolution of ratification is in order.

Mr. LODGE. I offer this resolution of ratification in lieu of the one which I presented, because the one that I presented is no longer necessary, the amendments having been made.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Massachusetts offers a resolution of ratification, which will be read.

The Secretary read as follows:

Resolved (two-thirds of the Senators present concurring therein), That the Senate advise and consent to the ratification of the treaty between the United States and Great Britain respecting arbitration, signed at Washington on the 3d day of August, 1911, with the following amendments:

On page 3, line 4, after the word "tribunal," insert a comma.

In the same line strike out the word "may" and insert in lieu thereof the word "shall."

On page 4, strike out the paragraph commencing line 28 and ending line 35.

And at the end of the first clause of article 1 add the following proviso:

Provided, That this agreement of arbitration does not authorize the submission to arbitration of any question which affects the admission of aliens into the United States, or the admission of aliens to the educational institutions of the several States.

Mr. BACON. I offer as a substitute for the proviso the one I now send to the desk.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Georgia offers an amendment in the form of a substitute for the proviso, which will be read.

The SECRETARY. In lieu of the proviso insert:

Provided, That the Senate advises and consents to the ratification of the said treaty with the understanding, to be made a part of such ratification, that the treaty does not authorize the submission to arbitration of any question which affects the admission of aliens into the United States, or the admission of aliens to the educational institutions of the several States, or the territorial integrity of the several States or of the United States, or concerning the question of the alleged indebtedness or money obligation of any State of the United States, or any question which depends upon or involves the maintenance of the traditional attitude of the United States concerning American questions, commonly described as the Monroe doctrine, or other purely governmental policy.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment proposed by the Senator from Georgia to the resolution of ratification.

Mr. BACON. On that I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered and taken.

Mr. JONES. I desire to state that my colleague [Mr. POINDEXTER] advised me that he is in favor of what is known as the Bacon amendment. I do not know whether this is the amendment which was originally proposed by the Senator from Georgia or not.

Mr. BACON. It is an amendment which I originally proposed. The amendment which was first offered I only proposed to-day, but the amendment upon which we are now voting I gave notice of at the time the Senator from New York first offered his amendment.

Mr. JONES. I understand, then, my colleague would vote yea on this amendment.

The result was announced—yeas 46, nays 36, as follows:

The yeas and nays were ordered, and the Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. SHIVELY (when Mr. DAVIS's name was called). The VICE PRESIDENT. Two-thirds having voted in favor thereof, the resolution as amended is adopted.

Mr. LODGE. I now ask unanimous consent that the resolution of ratification of the French treaty may be laid before the Senate, identical amendments having been proposed in that treaty; that is, that the treaty may be considered as amended identically with the English treaty, and that a precisely similar resolution of ratification may be laid before the Senate and adopted.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Massachusetts asks unanimous consent that precisely the same proceedings in reference to the French treaty be taken from first to last that were taken in reference to the English treaty. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and two-thirds having voted for the treaty, it is ratified.

LEGISLATIVE SESSION.

Mr. LODGE. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of legislative business.

Father in heaven, let Thy smiles be upon us to cheer our hearts when we are seeking earnestly, honestly, and faithfully to do Thy will, as it is given us to see Thy will, but frown upon us and make our hearts heavy when we run counter to Thy will through our own selfish desires. "Be not deceived; God is not mocked; for whatsoever a man soweth, that shall he also reap. For he that soweth to the flesh shall of the flesh reap corruption, but he that soweth to the spirit shall of the spirit reap life everlasting." "And let us not be weary in well doing, for in due season we shall reap if we faint not." So let Thy kingdom come and Thy will be done on earth as it is in heaven. In the spirit of the Lord Jesus Christ. Amen.

RIVER AND HARBOR APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. SPARKMAN, chairman of the Committee on Rivers and Harbors, by direction of that committee, reported the bill (H. R. 21477) making appropriations for the construction, repair, and preservation of certain public works on rivers and harbors, and for other purposes, which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, and, with the accompanying report (No. 395), ordered to be printed.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I reserve all points of order on the bill.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] reserves all points of order on the bill.

Mr. SPARKMAN. I wish to give notice, Mr. Speaker, that I wish to take it up at the first opportunity.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Florida [Mr. SPARKMAN] gives notice that he will call up the bill at the first opportunity.

AGRICULTURE APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. LAMB. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of House bill 18960, the agricultural appropriation bill.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the House resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the bill (H. R. 18960) making appropriations for the Department of Agriculture for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1913, with Mr. BORLAND in the chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The House is in the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the bill H. R. 18960, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 18960) making appropriations for the Department of Agriculture for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1913.

Mr. LAMB. Mr. Chairman, I yield to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. RAINEY].

Mr. RAINEY. Mr. Chairman, to-day is the anniversary of the birth of the Speaker of the House of Representatives [applause], and, as his nearest congressional neighbor, I ask unanimous consent to address the committee for 10 minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. RAINEY] asks unanimous consent to address the committee for 10 minutes. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. RAINEY. Mr. Chairman, 10 years before the War between the States, in a rural community in the great border State of Kentucky [applause], a man child was born. He came from the great common people. His advent into the world was unheralded and unnoticed except in the community where he spent his boyhood days. To-day in the Capital of the Nation and in mountain hamlets in the great cities of the East and on the shores of the western sea, in the cities and villages of the pleasant Southland, and throughout the colder North great newspapers are proclaiming the fact that in the journey of life the Speaker of the House of Representatives has reached his sixty-second milestone. [Loud applause.] As his personal friend and as his nearest congressional neighbor I feel that I have the right to-day to refer in this place to his life and to his public service.

The immortal Lincoln was born on a farm in the State of Kentucky. The call of the West came to him early in life—

To the West, to the West, to the land of the free,
Where the great Mississippi rolls down to the sea,
Where a man is a man if he's willing to toil,
And the humblest may share in the fruits of the soil.

[Applause.]

He obeyed the call, and in the great middle section of this country, where the waves of prejudice from the North meet and overcome the waves of passion from the South, he developed those qualities of mind and heart which finally brought to him the highest honors in the gift of the people of his country. He was trained in the hard school of practical everyday life. A farm hand, a clerk in a country store in the village of New Salem, a surveyor, a country lawyer—during these, the formative years of his life, he developed that knowledge of human nature, that broad sympathy and those qualities of intellect which made of him a great leader among men and on account of which men of the North and men of the South revere his memory [applause]—the memory of this Kentucky boy who, as a farm hand, a country surveyor, a clerk in a country store, a practicing country lawyer, a member of the legislature, a Member of Congress, progressed until he finally attained the highest place in the Nation. [Applause.]

CHAMP CLARK was born on a farm in Kentucky. [Applause.] There early came to him the call of the West, and he heeded it. Fifty miles from New Salem, on the banks of the Mississippi River, in that great middle portion of this country where men grow to full stature, he spent the formative years of his life. [Applause.] Trained also as a farm hand, as a clerk in a country store, as a country lawyer, as a country school-teacher, he developed in the hard school of practical experience those qualities which have at last placed him in the second highest place in this, the greatest of all the nations. [Applause.]

His life furnishes an inspiration to the youth of the land. Born on a farm, educated in the country schools and in our smaller colleges, early accustomed to a life of toil and hardship, a farm hand, a clerk in a country store, an editor of a country newspaper, a country school-teacher, president of a little college, a country lawyer, city attorney in a Missouri city, deputy prosecuting attorney, a member of the legislature, a Member of Congress, a presidential elector, permanent chairman of a Democratic national convention, nine times elected to Congress, and finally elected by the House of Representatives to the high position he now fills. [Applause.] No man is better qualified by education, by environment, by experience, to fill the one higher position in the Government for which his friends are now presenting his name. [Applause.]

My district in Illinois for over a hundred miles adjoins his district in Missouri, separated only by the Mississippi River. I speak of him to-day as his neighbor and his friend. No Member of the House of Representatives has ever been held in higher esteem by the people of his district than is CHAMP CLARK by his constituents in the ninth district of Missouri. [Applause.] They know him and he knows them, and he is able to call them all by name. The man who rises to high position from a rural community owes his advancement in life not to favorable newspaper comment, not to eulogies in magazines, but to the fact that back in his section 200,000 men, women, and children know him intimately and well—are acquainted with his qualifications, and do not hesitate to make known any circumstances or events which would disqualify him for high position in the Nation. [Applause.]

Through the long, dark days of humiliation and defeat he remained loyal always to the party to which he acknowledged allegiance [applause], ready at all times, on all occasions, in all States, and in all localities to battle for the principles the Democratic Party is proclaiming to-day with a louder voice than ever. [Applause.] He has been tried in the fire, and the increasing majorities given to him always in his district by the men who know him best commend him now to the people of the Nation as no other indorsement could. [Applause.]

He became the leader of his party in the National House of Representatives when his party was rent with discord and internal strife, when its enemies were predicting it had no constructive power and that it could not present a united front in the lower House. [Applause.] Out of turmoil and strife he has been able to so reorganize his party that an overwhelming Republican majority in the National House has been turned into an overwhelming Democratic majority, and under his leadership and as a result of it we are able now to present a united front to a common enemy and to discharge, so far as we of the lower House can do it, our pledges to the people of the country. [Applause.] Is it any wonder that throughout the land to-day hundreds of thousands of his fellow citizens are looking toward this country boy progressing as Lincoln did, schooled as Lincoln was, in the same environment in the great middle portion of the country? Is it any wonder that they are singing his praises and are uniting for the purpose of conferring upon him, if they can, the nomination for the highest place in the gift of the people of his country? [Applause.] He is here to-day in the very prime of life, in the full development of his splendid manhood. He has just attained the age which best qualifies a man to be President of the United States. [Applause.] May we not on this occasion express the hope that he has ahead of him many years of life and health, of success, happiness, and usefulness? [Long continued applause.]

Mr. AUSTIN. Mr. Chairman, I ask for two minutes in which to address the Committee of the Whole.

SEVERAL MEMBERS. Make it five.

Mr. AUSTIN. Five minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Tennessee asks unanimous consent to proceed for five minutes. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. AUSTIN. Mr. Chairman, the honorable Presiding Officer of this House is not only your Speaker, but he is our Speaker. [Applause.] No man who could have been selected on that side of the House for that high and exalted office could have met with a warmer approval or indorsement on this side of the House than the Hon. CHAMP CLARK. [Applause.] In the administration of that office he has been kind, considerate, and absolutely just and impartial. [Applause.]

I wish not only to congratulate him upon his birthday, but I congratulate his party on the wisdom of his selection as their leader in this House. [Applause.] I desire also, Mr. Chairman, on behalf of myself and colleagues on this side, to congratulate the Republican Party in having such a man to preside over this Democratic House. [Applause.] I congratulate the American people because we have a typical American in that high place. [Applause.] And, gentlemen, I congratulate you upon your opportunity to make him the standard bearer of the "unterrified" Democracy. [Applause.] He would make, if he had the opportunity, a wise Executive of the American people, one who would have their welfare and interest always uppermost in his mind in the administration of that great office. [Applause.] If we were to have a Democrat, we would all prefer him, but we are going to have a Republican President for the next four years. [Laughter and applause.]

Mr. CANNON rose. [Applause.]

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Chairman, I just came into the House and inquired why the present Chairman was presiding and was informed, having overlooked the fact, that this was the anniversary of the sixty-second birthday of the distinguished Speaker of the House of Representatives. I am glad on this occasion to say a word touching the Speaker of the House. The majority elected him, but, after all, when the Speaker is elected he is Speaker of the House, not only of the majority of the House, but of the whole House. [Applause.] While we have had sharp contests in the past and in the present, and no doubt will have in the future, I am glad to say, after many years of service, that while the present Speaker has always been a virile partisan, recognizing that it is a government of the people speaking by majorities, and while as a former Speaker of the House and on the floor I have had sharp contests with him and at times felt his opposition keenly, yet I must say, and take pleasure in saying at this time, that he has made manly contests, striking above the belt. [Applause.] As long as contests of that kind remain between the majority and the minority I would not have them cease in vigor, because it is the duty of the majority clothed with the power to move forward, standing by their policies, and it is the duty of the minority, where policies and principles are concerned, to criticize the policies of the majority.

The present Speaker is a prospective candidate for that great office of President. [Applause.] You will not consult me in the Baltimore convention, but I am quite sure that it would be agreeable to this side of the House if you should nominate your colleague and our colleague, the present Speaker, as your standard bearer. [Applause.] For your policies I can think of no one that would be more forceful, and in nominating and electing to that great office the present Speaker I think there is no man within the sound of my voice but that would feel that he would be persona grata if he desired a hearing touching the public business so far as it was within his power. [Applause.]

We congratulate our friends from time to time on the anniversary of their birth, but I sometimes wonder whether it is a subject for congratulation that another annual milestone is behind us. Yet it is always agreeable to congratulate and be congratulated; and as we can not turn back the hands upon the dial, I will express the wish and the hope that the Speaker's birthday anniversary may reach the hundredth anniversary and that I may be there to see it. [Laughter and applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. When the committee arose the pending amendment was the amendment offered by the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. PAGE].

Mr. GUERNSEY. Mr. Chairman, I have an amendment which I wish to offer to the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment of the gentleman from North Carolina and also the amendment to the amendment by the gentleman from Maine.

The Clerk read as follows:

Strike out the paragraph beginning on line 16, on page 23, and ending with line 10, on page 26, and insert in lieu thereof the following: "Purchase and distribution of rare and valuable seeds and plants: For purchase, propagation, testing, and distribution of rare and valuable seeds, bulbs, trees, shrubs, vines, cuttings, and plants from foreign countries or from our possessions for experimenting with reference to their introduction into and cultivation in this country, and same shall be used for experimental tests, to be carried on with the cooperation of the agricultural experiment station, $58,740."

The amendment of Mr. GUERNSEY is as follows:

Amend by adding after the word "bulbs" in the third line, "seed potatoes."

Mr. CANDLER. Mr. Chairman, I reserve the point of order to the amendment of the gentleman from Maine.

Mr. LAMB. Mr. Chairman, I reserve the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. Upon the amendment or upon the amendment to the amendment?

Mr. LAMB. Upon both.

Mr. GUERNSEY. Mr. Chairman, the House now has under consideration the Agricultural bill, one of the great supply bills of this Government. Its provisions are intended to promote our agricultural interests; therefore in connection with its consideration it is proper to propose legislation that may be beneficial and call attention to other legislation that the Democratic majority has already passed or proposes to pass and which, it is believed, will be serious in its effect on the agricultural interests of the United States.

The subject now under consideration offers an opportunity for the members of the Democratic majority to show in a substantial way that they are still as interested in the farmers of the country as they have declared that they were for 16 years while in the minority and not as responsible for legislation in this House as now.

It is proposed to do away with the distribution of Government seeds in the manner that has heretofore prevailed, but continue an appropriation of many thousands of dollars which will enable the Department of Agriculture to supply valuable seeds to those who especially desire them and may directly apply for them. If the Democratic majority proposes to adopt this plan, I ask that a portion of the appropriation be made available for an investigation into the cultivation and promotion of the best varieties of a great food product. If the Department of Agriculture, with all its great facilities for investigation, experiment, and study, would give more attention to potato cultivation I believe it might render important service which would be appreciated by those engaged in this important branch of farming, resulting in a better general understanding as to methods of cultivation, quality of production, and increase of acreage.

HIGH COST OF LIVING.

Along with wheat, potatoes are one of the chief foods in our everyday living. The high cost of living is one of the great questions of the time. The State of Massachusetts not long ago investigated into it; the Federal Government has made exhaustive investigations into its causes, and world-wide study of the question is now contemplated.

The farmers of the House and the farmers of the United States Senate have expressed their opinions as to its causes. Investigations and investigations may continue to be made, reports and reports may continue to be written, and the farmers of the House and the farmers of the Senate may continue to express their opinions, but the high cost of living will only be solved in one way, that is by increasing production and the quality of the production. Let us add to the inducements of the farmer and not legislate them away. Let the Department of Agriculture give its assistance to the potato growers, give it authority to experiment and study the cultivation and the varieties of potatoes, and supply seed, so far as practicable, to farmers desiring to make tests of the varieties, who may make application direct to the department, and this Democratic House will show that it has a real interest in reducing the cost of living and promoting agriculture. [Applause.]

DEMOCRATIC LEGISLATION UNFAVORABLE TO THE INTERESTS OF THE FARMER.

The trend of Democratic legislation so far seems to be against the agricultural interests, and legislation now before the House as a result of the recent Democratic sugar caucus will strike another blow at agriculture. Not alone will the sugar producers be affected, but the market in Cuba for potatoes grown in the United States, and other products of the soil of this country will suffer.

The sugar bill should be called a bill of surrender. It surrenders our advantages in the $62,000,000 Cuban market to Canada and it surrenders to the refining interests, the Sugar Trust, fifty-two millions of Government income.

The existing treaty between the United States and Cuba provides for the admission into her market of our products at a preferential custom rate over other nations of 20 per cent in turn for admission into this country of her chief product, which is sugar, at a preferential rate of 20 per cent as against the rest of the world.

If the Democratic free-sugar bill is enacted into law and the sugar of the world is admitted here free of duty, the treaty with Cuba will be ended, as there will no longer be a reason for its continuance by that country. The preferential rate on sugar is Cuba's end of that treaty and her reason for con-finishing her signature to it; in fact, it is what ties Cuba to this country commercially.

Even with this advantage of 20 per cent preferential rate for our potatoes which enter Cuba, Canada now sells considerable quantities to that country. Take away the 20 per cent preferential rate which we now enjoy by passing the Democratic sugar bill, which will end the treaty, and Canada will sell to Cuba all the potatoes that her market will absorb, as eastern Canada has direct and cheap water transportation to the Cuban market.

CUBAN POTATO MARKET.

From the Bureau of Trade Relations we learn that the United States statistics for the year 1911 show that we exported to that country in that year 1,594,000 bushels of potatoes, and the bureau expressed the opinion that by far the greater number of Maine potatoes exported eventually landed in Cuba.

In addition to the 1,594,000 bushels of potatoes that we exported into Cuba in 1911, it is a matter of common knowledge that during that year shipload after shipload of Maine potatoes went to Cuba through the port of St. John, New Brunswick, of which no account is taken by the Government in its statistical report.

We may well take notice of the importance of that market, not alone to the potato growers of Maine, but to the northern potato growers, from Maine to Michigan and the Dakotas, and it is that market for this important farm product that our Democratic friends will wipe out with the legislation that they propose which will result in the termination of the Cuban commercial treaty.

The Democratic sugar measure will not only strike a blow at the potato fields of the East, but also the wheat fields of the West, whose production goes to Cuba in the shape of a million barrels of flour annually.

RESULTS OF SPANISH-AMERICAN WAR.

The vast importance of these trade relations with Cuba, which represent practically the only commercial and financial returns for the war that this Government waged for Cuban freedom costing us thousands of lives and millions of treasure, was realized by the Republican Party when it enacted the last tariff law, and in the bill there was inserted a clause to protect Cuban reciprocity against any possible interference.

The Payne tariff law said in section 3:

That nothing in this act contained shall be so construed as to abrogate or in any manner impair or affect the provisions of the treaty of commercial reciprocity concluded between the United States and the Republic of Cuba on the 11th day of December, 1902, or the provisions of the act of Congress heretofore passed for the execution of the same.

Should this treaty now be canceled as a result of Democratic legislation it might force Cuba to enter into a reciprocity agreement with Canada, which country, I understand, is now seeking to effect a reciprocal arrangement with the British West Indies. Canada, on the termination of the United States treaty, would without doubt seek a reciprocal treaty with Cuba, and I have no doubt would obtain it, and vastly to our disadvantage, as Canada already has great influence in the island. She practically monopolizes the banking interests and her capitalists have enormous investments in railroads and other enterprises in Cuba.

While the Democratic majority in this House is proposing legislation, the enactment of which will destroy our privileges in the Cuban market for a great farm product of the United States and in effect turn the Cuban market over to Canada, the New York Produce Exchange is raising its voice loudly in the interests of the flour trade of this country, which is very large with the British West Indies, which may be taken away from us through a reciprocal treaty with Canada which Canada is seeking to make for the purpose of securing that market; and I wish to call attention to the press dispatch relating to this matter which I insert in my remarks:

TO STOP CANADA-WEST INDIES RECIPROCITY PACT—OUR FLOUR TRADE TOO VALUABLE TO BE PUT IN JEOPARDY—UNITED STATES THEIR NATURAL MARKET.

NEW YORK, March 6, 1912.

The New York Produce Exchange has launched a campaign through which it hopes to stir the State Department into immediate activity to prevent the enactment of the proposed reciprocal trade agreement between Canada and the British West Indies. Flour is the chief commodity in which the produce exchange is interested, and the proposed agreement, it is said, provides for allowing Canadian flour into the West Indies at a preference of 24 cents a barrel. Such a step, it is declared, would raise a barrier which the American miller could not surmount. The loss of business would be several million dollars a year.

A statement issued by the produce exchange's special committee states:

"The flour trade to the West Indies is very important to this market, and it would be foolish to stand by idly and see it taken away if we have at hand some way to prevent it. The United States offers an immense market for West Indian products, a market more important to them than that of Canada, and it ought to be possible to make an effective protest."

I do not believe for a moment that when the American public understands all the results that will follow the passage of the free-sugar bill, and that among them will be the loss of the great Cuban market for our products, that they can be rallied to support such a program of the Democratic Party.

While the flour trade of this country is calling on the Government to aid it in continuing its flour trade in the British West Indies, the lower branch of Congress is discussing a proposition which virtually means throwing away a vastly more important market—the Cuban market.

WHAT WE SELL TO CUBA.

The importance of the Cuban market is realized when attention is called to it. Our trade there has doubled since our treaty with that island went into effect in 1903. I wish to call attention to some of the produce and merchandise that we sold there in the fiscal year 1910. Agricultural implements to the amount of $170,509; horses, $181,195; mules, $118,448; corn to the amount of 2,376,974 bushels, valued at $1,661,149. We sent there 791,850 barrels of flour, valued at more than $4,632,000. Cuba bought from us carriages, cars, and vehicles of all kinds to the amount in round numbers of more than a million dollars, and cement to the amount of $458,063, while chemicals, dyes, and medicines and articles of that character were sold in that market by producers of the United States to the extent of $1,447,000. Large quantities of coal, both anthracite and bituminous, are shipped from the United States to Cuba each year, and in 1910 that trade amounted to $2,166,502.

In 1910 we sold to her merchants 20,635,625 pounds of raw coffee valued at $2,455,687, while our cotton manufacturers disposed of products of their cotton mills to the people of that island to the amount of $1,644,498. In 1910 Cuba took the product of our henneries to the extent of 3,220,037 dozens of eggs valued at over $750,000 and fertilizer amounting to more than $559,000; and our steel products were shipped to and sold in that island to the amount of $1,467,256, and wire amounting to 20,341,902 pounds, valued at $534,092.

In addition, we sold to Cuban builders hardware, tools, locks, hinges, saws, and so forth, to the amount of nearly $2,000,000—to be exact, $1,944,393. And that is not all the merchandise that she took from us in the shape of metal products. She bought such as electrical machinery, printing presses, pumps, pumping machinery, sawing machines, locomotives, stationary engines, boilers, and parts of engines to the amount of $3,062,957, nails and spikes to the amount of over $243,000, and pipes and fittings to the amount of $795,149.

Our manufacturers and exporters of jewelry and other articles manufactured from gold and silver sold to the merchants of that island, in 1910, $1,701,286 worth of goods; and this trade is evidently rapidly increasing in the island and has steadily grown since 1906, increasing since that date more than a half million of dollars. Our trade in boots and shoes with the islands is also a rapidly growing trade, having increased each year and nearly doubled since 1906. In 1910 the exports of boots and shoes from this country to Cuba amounted to $2,958,103. During the year 1910, in the shape of meat and meat products we sold to the islands an amount exceeding $6,385,000, and, in addition, dairy products amounting to $633,858; and our paper manufacturers sold books, maps, engravings, print paper, writing paper, envelopes, and so forth, in that market to the amount of $910,607.

The products of our forests have always been in large demand in Cuba, as there is not produced on the islands timber suitable for building purposes. During 1910 she bought the products of our forests in the shape of boards, plank, joists, shooks, staves, headings, and so forth, to the amount of $2,704,684.

And this was not all. She took in the shape of furniture to the amount of $591,782, and hogsheads, barrels, and other merchandise of like character to the amount of $1,432,580.

In the calendar year 1910 the island imported from the United States potatoes to the amount of 1,041,152 bushels, while during the calendar year 1911, as I have heretofore stated, the importation from the United States amounted to 1,594,395 bushels. I have called attention in detail to some of the products and merchandise that we sell to the people of Cuba, that the importance of this market may be fully realized, as our trade with Cuba, which has been continually growing under the favorable provisions of our present treaty, is in great danger of being destroyed by the legislation now proposed.

Our exports to Cuba in the calendar year 1909 were $48,217,689; in 1910, $57,783,617; and in 1911, $62,280,509. These totals emphasize the steady growth of our trade in that important market.

CANADIAN COMPETITION IN POTATOES.

The potato planters of the North may well take notice now that this blow at a portion of their market, which will result in turning over to Canada advantages that belong to us, is sure to be followed by other legislation which will bring them face to face with Canadian competition in potato raising.

Eastern Canada not only has direct communication by water to the Cuban market, but also to the principal markets of the United States on the eastern coast, thus giving her a decided advantage over the American producers of potatoes who have to transport to a greater or lesser distance by rail. Not only is her land equally as well adapted to the raising of the product, but much of it does not require the use of commercial fertilizer which is absolutely essential in eastern United States. Another advantage of the Canadian which is of the utmost importance in potato culture is that he can generally secure plenty of help and at much less wages than is paid for farm labor in the United States.

In my remarks in opposition to Canadian reciprocity in February, 1911, I called attention to the wage scale along the Canadian border from Eastport, Me., to western New York, on both sides of the international line. This scale of wages showed clearly that wages were very much lower on the Canadian side. The report on wages was secured by the Department of Commerce and Labor at my request. It shows the unequal conditions that laborers and producers on this side of the line have to contend with so clearly that I feel it is not out of place to again call attention to this report, and to that end insert it in my remarks. This report was compiled the 1st of February, 1911, and was as follows:

MAINE POTATOES.

Aroostook County and other counties in northern Maine, owing to soil and climate, raise the finest quality of potatoes grown in the United States, and raise them in abundant crops amounting to millions of bushels annually. Aroostook County leads the State; Penobscot, Washington, and Piscataquis Counties follow; and while Aroostook farmers realize millions of dollars from the sale of their potato crops, the farmers of Penobscot, Washington, and Piscataquis Counties receive hundreds of thousands of dollars annually from their production of this great agricultural product.

This wonderful potato country has great possibilities in the future. It has been stated that Aroostook County alone is capable of producing 50,000,000 bushels annually; last year it is estimated there were 90,000 acres of land under cultivation within the county for the production of potatoes, and that the yield was about 18,000,000 bushels.

The State of Maine, already the third State in the Union in potato culture, is capable of multiplying many times its production of potatoes, which was estimated last year at 28,000,000 bushels. In the United States, under normal conditions, about 370,000,000 bushels are annually produced. It is one of the great farm products of our country, and owing to its importance its market should not be trifled with in legislation. Last year there was something of a shortage in the crop, the Government reports indicating that the total production was around 291,000,000 bushels.

THE POTATO STATES.

More than half the entire production of the United States is in the States of Maine, New Hampshire, Vermont, New York, Ohio, Michigan, Wisconsin, Minnesota, and North Dakota, which lie along the Canadian border. Across the imaginary line in Canada lies land equally as well adapted and less expensive to buy and much less valuable, as the American farmer has a market for his product, which the Republican Party believes in maintaining not only in the United States but also in Cuba.

FREE TRADE IN SUGAR MAY MEAN FREE TRADE IN POTATOES.

I am ready to hazard the prediction that the Democratic caucus, which is ready to sacrifice its Southern and Middle West Democrats who represent sugar-producing States, regardless of how much they may protest against free sugar, will as readily sacrifice the protective-tariff rate on potatoes, largely in the interest of northern farmers, to the Democratic tariff-for-revenue and free-trade policy once our Democratic friends get in control of both branches of Congress and the Presidency, and the protests and pleadings of Northern Democrats in Congress will not avail to save them or their constituents from such a policy.

A Democratic friend from the Middle West recently stated to me that Democratic voters elected him to come to Washington to help save a little protection to the beet-sugar industry of his section, as they feared free sugar from the Philippines, which Republicans might favor, but on his arrival here the Democratic caucus nearly choked him to death with free sugar from all the world.

FREE POTATOES ALREADY DEMANDED.

Democrats in Congress have already introduced two bills to remove the protective tariff from potatoes and place them on the free list, and in addition a House resolution to suspend the duty. These measures are now pending before the Democratic Ways and Means Committee, as appears by House bill 18225, introduced by Mr. SABATH, of Illinois, and House bill 18500, introduced by Mr. REDFIELD, of New York, and House joint resolution, introduced by Mr. AYRES, of New York.

The Democratic Party shuts its eyes to the fact that the legislation pending, if enacted into law, will take from us the important advantages we now enjoy in the Cuban market that have been secured to our people and built up under the policies of the Republican Party, at the same time depriving this Government of fifty-two millions of revenue now collected at the customhouses from the refiners of sugar and seek to justify the legislation by asserting that it will reduce the cost of sugar to the consumer by the exact amount that the duty is removed.

The history of tariff legislation shows that placing on the free list articles largely controlled by business combines do not in every case reduce the cost of the article or its product to the consumer. Not long ago Congress was plead with to place hides on the free list, and hides were placed on the free list, and hides went up and shoes cost the public as much as they did before. Hides are largely controlled by the beef and packing interests. It is unlikely that the placing of sugar on the free list would result in materially lowering its price, as it is also controlled by a combine—the refining interests.

The free listing of agricultural products, as potatoes, for instance, would be different. They would have to drop to the price level of their chief foreign competitor, as there is no combination among the farmers to regulate and support prices.

The chairman of the Ways and Means Committee, Mr. UNDERWOOD, in his report accompanying the sugar bill, stated that cane sugar, which constitutes about four-fifths of the sugar we consume, must be refined. Consequently the refining interest is the most important factor connected with the sugar manufacturing in the United States.

The Democratic majority in this House last summer created a special committee to investigate the American Sugar Refining Co. and others, and recently that committee filed its report to Congress, and in that report states that there is a great combine among the refiners of imported raw sugar; that this combine controls directly or indirectly about 63 per cent of the sugar manufactured and refined in the United States. This combine is what is commonly known as the Sugar Trust, and being by far the largest importer of raw sugar annually pays to the Government a large part of the $52,000,000 in customs duties now collected on sugar. In view of all the facts, I am opposed to relieving this combine from the obligation to contribute the money it now contributes toward the support of the Government, as proposed by the Democratic Party, as the combine, or Sugar Trust, will be the principal ones to benefit by this surrender and they will allow but small benefit by way of reduction in the cost of sugar to reach the consumer, if any.

It can but arouse suspicion in the minds of men who know something of tariff legislation that every refiner of sugar who appeared before the Hardwick sugar committee advocated either a heavy reduction in the duty on sugar or absolute free trade. Were these men favoring the lowering of duties as against their interests? It is inconceivable that they were. These gentlemen were: Mr. Spreckels, president of the Federal Sugar Refining Co.; Mr. Charles H. Heike, former secretary of the American Sugar Refining Co.; Mr. William G. Gilmore, partner of the Arbuckle Bros.; James H. Post, president of the National Sugar Refining Co.; William A. Jamison, partner of the Arbuckle Bros.; Mr. Edwin F. Atkins, vice president of the American Sugar Refining Co.

The special committee states that the effect of the combination among refiners and manufacturers of raw sugar and the presence or absence of healthy competition is reflected in the variation of the margin between the price of raw and refined sugar; that the price of refined sugar had been kept up in order to pay dividends on bounteously watered stocks.

Only last summer the combine showed its strength by raising the price of sugar as it saw an opportunity to do so, extorting an additional profit of 2 cents per pound from the consumer in the United States. Can anyone believe in view of these facts that the sugar combine would give to the consumers of sugar by lowering its cost any appreciable part of the millions of customs the Democratic Party is now preparing to surrender?

The record of the sugar interests show that they have never surrendered any gains, lawful or unlawful, except when forced to do so. Foreign competition will not interfere with them, as sugar is everywhere controlled by combines; they are world-wide, and the beet-sugar interests, whose production is but one-fifth of our entire consumption of sugar, is not yet sufficiently developed to be an important competing factor with the refining interests, even though the beet-sugar interests were in position to act independent, which all the evidence introduced shows that they are not.

From what source can the American public hope for relief? Surely it can not be expected from turning over to the refining interests millions of dollars in customs now collected by the Government and thus rely on the Sugar Trust to distribute these millions to the public by voluntarily reducing the price of sugar.

The solution of the trust question is one of the great questions of the times. It can never be settled through tariff legislation. Government control in some form will probably be the final solution. All efforts to control trusts so far have been through legislation enacted by the Republican Party, and all prosecutions of the trusts have been carried on by Republican administrations.

Our Democratic friends for years have asserted that if they were given control of legislation they would stamp out all trust evils. They have now been in control of the House over a year, the branch of this Government where legislation should be initiated. They have had numerous special committees investigating nearly all the trusts in the country and every phase of trust activity. These investigations have cost hundreds of thousands of dollars of public money, and I appreciate that members of these committees have been diligent and faithful in their service, but not a single recommendation has been made to date by the Democratic majority here looking toward the solution of this question, and if the Democratic majority leader of the House [Mr. UNDERWOOD] is correctly reported, no immediate solution can be expected. He is reported to have stated in a New York speech during the past winter that he did not favor any further amendments to the Sherman antitrust law—not, at least, for the present.

Until the Democratic Party can present to the country some solution they should cease to charge the Republican Party of being responsible for the trusts and their creation.

Other tariff legislation of the Democratic Party since it secured control of the House of Representatives has been against the interests of the farmers of the country. During the special session last summer the majority here passed a wool bill which would have committed this country to the purchase of foreign wools in the place of domestic wools, would have made our people dependent on the foreign producers of wools by wiping out the flocks of our farmers, and the party proceeded to carry out this legislation without adequate information; and while it is undoubtedly true that the wool schedule needs revision and that its rates can be adjusted to the advantage of the consumers and the manufacturers of woollens and without destroying the growing of domestic wools—regardless of these facts the Democratic legislation struck at our farmers and flocks first.

The President felt obliged to call a halt on that legislation and he vetoed the bill. That his veto was justifiable is practically admitted by the Democratic Party to-day, as they do not dare to go before the country on the bill they passed in this House last summer, and the President vetoed, as shown by the fact that they are now proposing to bring in another wool-revision measure. Will their method of tariff revision of this schedule be better this spring than were their proposals last summer?

Mr. PAGE. Mr. Chairman, this is the language my amendment strikes out of the bill:

Purchase and distribution of valuable seeds: For purchase, propagation, testing, and distribution of valuable seeds, bulbs, trees, shrubs, vines, cuttings, and plants; all necessary office fixtures and supplies, fuel, transportation, paper, twine, gum, postal cards, gas, electric current, rent outside of the District of Columbia, official traveling expenses, and all necessary material and repairs for putting up and distributing the same; for repairs and the employment of local and special agents, clerks, assistants, and other labor required, in the city of Washington and elsewhere, $285,680, of which amount not less than $226,940 shall be allotted for congressional distribution. And the Secretary of Agriculture is hereby directed to expend the said sum, as nearly as practicable, in the purchase, testing, and distribution of such valuable seeds, bulbs, shrubs, vines, cuttings, and plants, the best he can obtain at public or private sale, and such as shall be suitable for the respective localities to which the same are to be apportioned, and in which same are to be distributed as hereinafter stated, and such seeds so purchased shall include a variety of vegetable and flower seeds suitable for planting and culture in the various sections of the United States. An equal proportion of five-sixths of all seeds, bulbs, shrubs, vines, cuttings, and plants shall, upon their request, after due notification by the Secretary of Agriculture that the allotment to their respective districts is ready for distribution, be supplied to Senators, Representatives, and Delegates to Congress for distribution among their constituents, or mailed by the department upon the receipt of their addressed franks, in packages of such weight as the Secretary of Agriculture and the Postmaster General may jointly determine: Provided, however, That upon each envelope or wrapper containing packages of seeds the contents thereof shall be plainly indicated, and the Secretary shall not distribute to any Senator, Representative, or Delegate seeds entirely unfit for the climate and locality he represents, but shall distribute the same so that each Member may have seeds of equal value, as near as may be, and the best adapted to the locality he represents: Provided also, That the seeds allotted to Senators and Representatives for distribution in the districts embraced within the twenty-fifth and thirty-fourth parallels of latitude shall be ready for delivery not later than the 10th day of January: Provided also, That any portion of the allotments to Senators, Representatives, and Delegates in Congress remaining uncalled for on the 1st day of April shall be distributed by the Secretary of Agriculture, giving preference to those persons whose names and addresses have been furnished by Senators and Representatives in Congress, and who have not before during the same season been supplied by the department: And provided also, That the Secretary shall report, as provided in this act, the place, quantity, and price of seeds purchased and the date of purchase; but nothing in this paragraph shall be construed to prevent the Secretary of Agriculture from sending seeds to those who apply for the same. And the amount herein appropriated shall not be diverted or used for any other purpose but for the purchase, testing, propagation, and distribution of valuable seeds, bulbs, mulberry and other rare and valuable trees, shrubs, vines, cuttings, and plants: Provided further, That $58,740 of which sum, or so much thereof as the Secretary of Agriculture shall direct, may be used to collect, purchase, test, propagate, and distribute rare and valuable seeds, bulbs, trees, shrubs, vines, cuttings, and plants from foreign countries or from our possessions for experiments with reference to their introduction into and cultivation in this country, and same shall not be distributed generally, but shall be used for experimental tests, to be carried on with the cooperation of the agricultural experiment stations.

In offering this amendment to this paragraph in the agricultural appropriation bill I do not feel that any explanation of its effect is necessary. This matter has been, in one form or another, brought upon the floor almost with every recurring annual appropriation bill for the Agricultural Department. I want to say that I represent on the floor of this House a district almost wholly agricultural. Of the 265,000 people who live in that district more than 200,000 of them are engaged in agriculture. There is no provision in this bill for the advancement of the agricultural interests of this country or for the farmer himself that does not have my hearty approval; but this item, which has been carried in the bill since I have been a Member of the House, has never met with my approval, and I am free to say that, in my judgment, it has never met with the approval of the farmer in the United States. In recent years there has not existed an agricultural organization, whether it be the grange or any other organization, that has not at some time passed resolutions condemning this item in this appropriation bill.

I understand, and the farmers of the country have come to understand, why this item is so extremely popular here. It is popular here not because it is for the benefit of the farmer, but, to use plain language, because it is a congressional gratuity, and the farmers of the country know as well as do my colleagues who sit around me that this is the fact. The farmers are tired—eternally tired—of being fed upon the husks of legislation. They are not caring about a 5-cent package of garden seeds of doubtful value, particularly when they know that they are paying vastly more than this amount in taxes in order that they may have them. They are caring intensely about some other things that are not receiving the attention from the Representatives that they think they ought to have. Of all classes in this country the man who digs his living out of the ground is asking less of special favor from the legislators than any other class in it. He does not want special favors nor class legislation. Indeed, his chief complaint is that in the past he has been the victim of legislation conferring special favors upon other people. He is tired of paying the bills to meet the favoritism that has been dealt out here to other classes of people in the country.

The farmer wants the substantial things that can be given him by this body, and mind you, my colleagues, sooner or later he is going to have them, not only because he is asking for them, but because of all classes in this country he most deserves them. I will stand upon this floor and advocate any measure that tends, or will tend, to make better the conditions of the man who lives in the isolation of the country, and by whose toil the whole population is fed, and upon whose well-being and prosperity depends the welfare and prosperity of the country as a whole. He deserves at our hands anything that will make his life more bearable or his profession more profitable. We have done something for him. This Democratic House has passed bills removing the tariff duty from farm implements, wire and wire fencing, woolen clothes, and other necessities. We need to do more, and for that reason, as one, I stand and say to-day that instead of giving him a 5-cent package of garden seeds to remind him of the approach of spring and the congressional primaries, he should be given legislation that he is demanding in the form of parcel posts, and he should be given a fair chance to market his crops under normal conditions without the restrictions of exchanges and speculators upon the market. That is what the farmer in this country wants. He is tired of this bauble, and if those of my colleagues who disagree with me—and I realize, Mr. Chairman, that they are likely in the majority—think this congressional distribution of garden seeds, involving an expenditure of something over $260,000, out of which they may send their farmer constituents a package of seeds, and at the same time write a letter telling of their activities here—if they think they are going to satisfy him with that, they are mistaken. If they will pass some other legislation, and take out of this bill this paragraph, they will then find that it meets with the commendation and the praise of the men they are supposedly legislating for in this paragraph.

Mr. Chairman, I have now, after the speech of my friend from Mississippi [Mr. CANDLER], exactly the same hope of seeing my amendment carried that I had when I introduced it, and if the House is indebted to me for nothing else—and I have heard whisperings of an organization to get me out of the Chamber—it is indebted to me for having brought forth the annual production of the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. CANDLER]. The House of Representatives would have escaped it had it not been for my amendment.

Mr. CANDLER. They did not show much disposition to escape.

Mr. PAGE. They showed no disposition to escape it, having greatly enjoyed it, as I am sure his constituents will when he circulates his speech in his district.

Mr. Chairman, this matter is not either a small or a light matter with me. I am not waging any war upon the agricultural classes of this country; far from it; neither am I waging any war upon my colleagues upon this floor. The Democratic Party came into power in the House of Representatives at the recent election, and if it was pledged to anything at all it was pledged to economy. In my judgment, and I have the right to express my own judgment on this floor, here is $268,000 appropriated in this bill that is absolutely useless and practically worthless to the class to whom it is pretended the benefits are going, and could be stricken from the bill without injuring any interest in this country.

I should feel that I was not true to my own constituency, or true to the obligations of my own party, if I had allowed this bill to go through with this item in it without making a protest against it. The $268,000 involved is only a small amount of the cost of this congressional gratuity—their preparation and transportation through the mails adds immensely to it.

I know that what I said in the remarks I first submitted to this House this morning is true, that gentlemen here place a large estimate upon the value of this appropriation; but I desire to say to the House that during the first Congress in which I had the honor to serve my people, and that is nearly 10 years ago, I voted against this appropriation for the congressional distribution of garden seeds, and I have voted against it at every opportunity that has presented itself since that time. So far as the farmers in my district are concerned, I know what I am talking about when I stand on this floor and say that they not only do not approve this appropriation, but that they condemn it, and I know that it costs them vastly more than they get out of it and it is used for the purpose of keeping them from having what they want and what they desire. When my colleague from Mississippi [Mr. CANDLER] intimates that the opposition to this appropriation comes from those who are interested in the sale of seeds in this country, I desire to say that this is tommyrot, and nothing less, because this Agricultural Department, by the very provisions of this bill, is permitted and does buy these seeds from the seed growers of the country. There is absolutely nothing in that argument.

Mr. RODDENBERY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. PAGE. Certainly.

Mr. RODDENBERY. The gentleman does not mean to say that the Agricultural Department buys all of its seeds.

Mr. PAGE. I mean to say that it buys the larger portion of them. I would like the gentleman to tell me what proportion.

Mr. RODDENBERY. Does not the gentleman know that the department opens this seed proposition to the best bidder, irrespective of the grower, or whether he is a seed man?

Mr. PAGE. I see by the provisions of the bill that the department is authorized to buy them at private sale or at auction, or in any other way.

Mr. RODDENBERY. Does not the gentleman know, as a matter of fact, that for the last three years certainly all of the seed contracts have been opened to bids of seed men and growers alike?

Mr. PAGE. I think that is probably true, though I do not know it of my own knowledge; but that does not alter the case, so far as the gentleman from Mississippi is concerned. If they buy them from the seed men, the seed men sell them to the Government instead of selling them to the individual. I do not see how that can enter into this argument.

Mr. RODDENBERY. Does not the gentleman know that where everything else is equal, the policy of the department is to give the contract to the grower in preference to the seed men?

Mr. PAGE. The gentleman does know that where everything is equal, where the Government has to buy anything, it pays about twice as much for it as does the individual.

Mr. RODDENBERY. Does not the gentleman know that on the 7th of January of this year—

Mr. PAGE. No; I do not, and the gentleman can get time of his own right to tell what happened on the 7th of January.

Mr. Chairman, in conclusion, I merely want to say that it is a matter of indifference to me individually whether this appropriation remains in the bill or whether it does not. So long as it remains in this bill, and there is a congressional distribution of seeds I shall inflict the people in my district with those apportioned to me, just as every other man does; but I do it only because I would be open to reproach if I did not, for a great many reasons, and with my eyes open to the fact that my people largely do not use them. I have gone through my district during a campaign in September and October, have gone into the homes of my farmer constituents, one after the other, and in the old cupboard in the corner of the living room, where the rubbish is put which they are not quite willing to throw away, but that they consider of little or no value, you will find the garden seeds I have sent them. I have asked the question, "Why didn't you plant them?" And they have replied that they did not simply because they could not depend upon them and that they were afraid to risk them, and that their ground was worth too much to take the risk.

Mr. WICKLIFFE. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. PAGE. Certainly.

Mr. WICKLIFFE. Have the farmers' unions passed resolutions condemning the seed distribution?

Mr. PAGE. I can not say positively, though numerous individual officers and members of this organization have condemned this proposition in private conversation with me, and every reputable agricultural paper of which I have any knowledge has declared it a waste of public money.

Mr. Chairman, my only purpose in this matter or in any other that has come before this body for consideration since I have had the honor of membership in it has been to favor and help to pass such legislation as was in the interest of the great mass of the people, to thoroughly and honestly reflect the will of that immediate constituency who have honored and commissioned me as their Representative, to reflect here by voice and vote their will and to guard their interests. They are opposed, and rightly, to being taxed, even though it is indirectly, to swell the profits of the trusts and monopolies that have grown up under the policy of protection. They still believe in the soundness of the old slogan "Equal rights to all and special privileges to none." They are willing to contribute their proportion to the funds necessary to properly and economically administer the affairs of their Government. They are themselves an economical people and believe that their Government should be careful of its expenditures. I have never received a commission from them to loot the Treasury that they must help to keep filled, but rather to guard it against those who would recklessly invade it for private or local gain. I have made no boast as to the amount of money I have been able to take from the Treasury for investment in my district, but, on the other hand, have spent my time and energies in efforts to prevent useless expenditures everywhere.

Under the administration of the Agricultural Department much has been accomplished for the advance of the science of agriculture, and as time goes on much more will be done, and I shall lend my voice and vote to every measure that has in it the advancement of the science and of the men who follow it. But I shall not vote now nor in the future to expend nearly $300,000 for an item the leading purpose of which is to help the Member of Congress gain the good will and support of a class of his constituents. If my service does not entitle me to their confidence, I shall not undertake to secure their support in this way.

Mr. SLAYDEN. Mr. Chairman, farming conditions must be somewhat less attractive in North Carolina than those in Texas. It does not take a few packages of seed to make farm life attractive or to make a man love the country in my State, where conditions are altogether charming. In Texas we plant and we reap and nearly always have a satisfactory yield. In Texas, in the country, all the land is covered with flowers and the trees are full of singing birds.

Mr. PAGE. Will the gentleman permit a question? Is it not true in Texas, as elsewhere, that the trend of population is to the cities and mostly away from the country?

Mr. SLAYDEN. No; I think not. But, Mr. Chairman, the flowers that bloom in the spring have nothing to do with the case which I meant to discuss. I was just having a little jest with the gentleman from North Carolina. I rose for the purpose of making a serious complaint against some of the officials of the Department of Agriculture. I do not think I will have to raise the question of personal privilege that anybody is trying to steal any large section of the State, and no man can overstate the value of Texas lands when he is trying to induce purchasers. What I complain of is that the Government has some special agents of the Department of Agriculture who are circulating around through the State of Texas undertaking, from what I can gather, to advise the farmers in the conduct of business—which, I think, they understand much better than those agents—and giving the farmers a lot of mischief-making advice. I have received a large number of letters in the last few days from constituents telling me that Mr. So-and-so, an agent of the Department of Agriculture, had been there on certain farm-demonstration work, or delivering lectures, or something of that kind, and that he was advising them to write to their Representatives in Congress to get cotton seed. Now, I am not making an appeal for a greater allowance for seed. Really, I think perhaps it might be reduced. As a matter of fact, each Member receives 100 packages of cotton seed, a peck to each package. The demand created by these pestiferous agents of the Department of Agriculture can not be met. Yesterday I received in my mail one letter containing the addresses of 12 farmers, to each of whom I was requested to send a package of cotton seed. My 100 packages had been distributed, and unless some gentlemen from the banana belt of the Dakotas or Massachusetts comes to my rescue and gives me some cotton seed, or some one who represents a city constituency, I do not know what I am going to do.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Take my part.

Mr. SLAYDEN. I think that the Secretary of Agriculture should tell his agent, and tell him plainly, that that line of advice must be stopped. I have here a sample of letters of many that I have received in the last week. One of them says:

Mr. A. J. Mackey stayed here last night, and he told me you had some Lone Star cotton seed—

I will say to my friend from North Carolina that is the best—that you are giving out to the farmers.

Here is another one which says:

Mackey, an agent of the Department of Agriculture, stayed here last night, and advised, etc.

Last year, Mr. Chairman, an agent of the Department of Agriculture, from Waco, I think it was, advertised in the newspapers that an unlimited supply of cotton seed was at the command of various Members of Congress in the State of Texas, and recommended to the farmers to send for them. Well, they sent. Of course, it was impossible to meet the demand, and now I ask the chairman of the Committee on Agriculture, who has this bill in charge, if he can not incorporate in it, in some form or other, an amendment forbidding the Department of Agriculture from indulging in this bunco game with the farmers.

If the agents of the department create or stimulate this demand, then, of course, the department should supply the seed. If it can not do so; if it has no appropriation from which to do so, it ought to recall its agents, who inspire farmers to ask for what they know they can not get, or take some steps to compel them to quit telling things that are not true.

Mr. LAMB. Mr. Chairman, this question produces discussion every session of Congress. I anticipated that it would occur again, but I did not think that the amendment would possibly come from this side of the House. Now, in looking over this bill in anticipation of what might happen here, I suggested to one member of the committee who is always interested in seeds to be prepared to present the committee's views, inasmuch as this appropriation is in the bill, and Mr. CANDLER, of Mississippi, will answer the gentleman from North Carolina. [Applause.]

Mr. CANDLER. Mr. Chairman, I indulged the hope that the chairman seems to have—that this amendment which has been presented by the gentleman from North Carolina would not be offered to the present bill. This question has been fought out in Congresses preceding this, and the result upon all occasions has been the same as I believe it will be upon this occasion. The gentleman presents the usual argument that certain organizations over the country are opposed to this distribution and that, in his judgment, the adoption of this amendment will meet the approval of those organizations; and, further, he states he believes the people would also approve if this provision is stricken out.

We had occasion when I was a member of the Agricultural Committee a few years ago to thoroughly test and investigate the conditions which existed and the sentiment which was behind the proposition to eliminate the provision which now appears in this bill. It appeared at that time that the sentiment which was behind the resolutions which were passed by different organizations throughout the country and the discussions which appeared in the newspapers throughout the land was in a large measure instigated by the people who produced seeds and who wanted to sell them to the people, and who were at that time recognized as a "seed trust" in the United States and were trying to prevent the farmer receiving even one single package of seed from the Government.

Mr. PAGE. Will the gentleman allow a question?

Mr. CANDLER. Certainly.

Mr. PAGE. Is it not true that these seeds that are sent out by the Members of Congress, known as the congressional distribution, are bought by the Agricultural Department from the seed growers of the United States?

Mr. CANDLER. Not entirely, by any means.

Mr. PAGE. What proportion of them?

Mr. CANDLER. A great many of them are produced under the direct supervision of the Agricultural Department at the experiment stations and on the experiment farms throughout this country.

Mr. ELLERBE. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. CANDLER. With pleasure.

Mr. ELLERBE. Is it not true that while at present the department purchases from individuals who have been successful in producing certain seeds, that if they were to cut that out these seed growers would have a monopoly of the whole business?

Mr. CANDLER. They would have absolutely a monopoly of the whole business throughout the country; and that was the point I was attempting to make when I was interrupted by the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. PAGE]. The evidence taken before the Agricultural Committee at the time to which I refer, when there was the greatest contest ever made in reference to this proposition, thoroughly demonstrated that to be the truth. It is true that some of these seeds are bought from the seedsmen, but they are bought and tested by the Agricultural Department, and none of them are sent through this distribution until they have been thoroughly tested as to type, as to their productiveness, and as to their soundness, and everything that goes to make up the very best possible seed which can be furnished to the people by any means whatsoever.

Therefore, while it may be true that it amounts to but little to the individual farmer or to the individual person throughout this country, it amounts to this much: It goes into every home practically in every congressional district throughout the United States of America. It is practically the only direct means of communication between the citizens in the hamlet and in the vale, in the valley and on the hilltop in this country, with the Government which he supports and which he maintains by digging the prosperity which he gives to the Government out of the ground in the sweat of his own face.

And it is as little as can be done to furnish the farmer throughout this country at least one avenue through which he may communicate with this great Government which he has done so much to sustain. [Applause.]

Mr. PAGE. One question. The gentleman speaks of the communication of the farmer and the great mass of the people with the Government through this package of garden seeds. Would the gentleman accept an amendment sending out these seeds directly by the Agricultural Department and leaving off his frank?

Mr. CANDLER. I would not, I am frank to say, because my people send me here to look after their interests, and I believe I can look after the distribution of seeds for my district better than the Agricultural Department. If it was left absolutely to the Department, they might believe my people were entitled to a few packages of seeds or they might not believe it. They might believe that the great bulk of the seeds should go into one section of the country and that only a small quantity should go into another section of the country. Let us send them to all alike, and this can only be done through the present system of distribution.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. LEVER. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman from Mississippi may have five minutes more.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. CLARK of Florida. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CANDLER. With pleasure.

Mr. CLARK of Florida. I want to ask the gentleman from Mississippi that if we should agree and it should be provided that the Agricultural Department should send out all these seeds, is it not true that the department officials, not being personally acquainted with all the people in the various districts, a great many widows and very poor people, mechanics and laborers in towns, who have little garden patches, and people of that kind, might be left out and might not get the benefit of this great distribution?

Mr. CANDLER. There is no doubt but that condition would exist and that result be obtained. I dare say that every Member, practically, pursues the course I do, in all general respects, at least, and that is to see that everybody, so far as it is possible, shall receive some benefit, though it be small, from this distribution. My rule is and always has been to try to get the names of the widows, as well as the old men, and the young men and the bright, blue-eyed, rosy-cheeked girls, and to see that they are all supplied with garden and flower seed when it is possible to supply them. [Applause.] I seek through my friends to especially get the name of every widow in my district and send to her a package of garden seed. [Applause.]

When you say that the people do not want these seeds you simply state something that is unfounded in fact, so far as my observation and experience go, because there is not a single mail that comes into my office or a single day that goes over my head during the time that this distribution is being made in which I do not receive requests from gentlemen, from ladies, from boys and girls throughout my district to send them garden seed and flower seed. [Applause.]

People do not take the time to sit down and write a letter and inclose it in an envelope and put a 2-cent stamp on it and put it in the post office, and send it on its mission to Washington, asking a little service at the hands of their Representative in Congress, when they do not want what they ask for. No; they put themselves to this trouble because they really do want this service, and really do want the package of flower seed or the package of garden seed that they ask for. [Applause.]

Mr. ELLERBE. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Mississippi yield to the gentleman from South Carolina?

Mr. CANDLER. Yes; I am glad to yield.

Mr. ELLERBE. This is with me rather a serious matter, and I want to ask my friend one or two questions.

Mr. CANDLER. I will yield to the gentleman with pleasure.

Mr. ELLERBE. Is it not true that the Government is trying to eradicate the boll weevil in Texas and spending a great deal of money in that work?

Mr. CANDLER. Yes; and in other parts of the country, and in Mississippi as well.

Mr. ELLERBE. I meant particularly in Texas, where it first started.

Mr. CANDLER. Yes.

Mr. ELLERBE. Is it not true that a package of cottonseed was sent out from the Agricultural Department, and the result of the sending of those seeds proved that the best method of preventing the ravages of the boll weevil was to be obtained by planting that early variety of cotton and thus preventing the ravages of the pest? Is not that true?

Mr. CANDLER. That is true.

Mr. ELLERBE. Was not a package of tomato seed sent to New Jersey, and did not the variety of tomatoes developed from those seed eventually enable the people up there to get 75 cents a basket for their tomatoes, where they formerly got only 15 cents, and did not that enable them to lift their mortgages from their farms? Is not that true?

Mr. CANDLER. It is.

Mr. ELLERBE. Is it not true also that packages of Rocky Ford cantaloupe seed, sent into various localities, have enabled the people there to lift their mortgages from their farms?

Mr. CANDLER. I think that is true.

Mr. ELLERBE. I do not know what is sought to be done here, but, as a man who was born on a farm and who spent all his life on the farm, I think this House will make a great mistake if it knocks out this appropriation. [Applause.]

Mr. CANDLER. How much time have I remaining?

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman has two minutes remaining. Mr. McLAUGHLIN. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the time of the gentleman be extended half an hour.

Mr. CANDLER. I thank my good friend, but I think 10 minutes will be sufficient.

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman be allowed to proceed for 10 minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. BYRNES] asks unanimous consent that the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. CANDLER] be allowed to proceed for 10 minutes. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. CANDLER. Everything that has been said by my distinguished friend from South Carolina [Mr. ELLERBE] is absolutely true. The proof of it is apparent when you begin to try to secure information as to the good effect of the distribution of seed. You find it is so great as to be almost impossible of ascertainment, because of the fact that the benefits derived from it go throughout the length and breadth of this land, in every neighborhood, in every State, in every community, in every county, and in every subdivision of every county in this broad land. [Applause.]

The matter mentioned by the distinguished gentleman when he referred to the Rocky Ford cantaloupe is a good illustration of other matters of the same kind. That cantaloupe not only now supplies the East, which did not know about the richness and the lusciousness of it until it was furnished by the seed from the Department of Agriculture which produced it, but it is sent to the general markets of the country and supplies the tables of those who live in the great cities as well as in the towns. Not only that, it is going across the waters to supply foreign shores and foreign tables therein, and it permits the bringing back of the substance of those shores to our country. It is the only variety of cantaloupe that will bear exportation to foreign countries and preserve its sweetness until it reaches the foreign shores. [Applause.] Now, so far as was suggested by my friend a moment ago, that the farmers want other kinds of legislation, it is true they want some other kinds of legislation, and I daresay there is not a man on this floor who is more ready to give them what they want than I am. If there is one thing I have tried to do since I have been a Member of Congress, it has been to advance the interests of the agriculturist, to advance the interests of the farmer throughout the United States of America, whether he live North, South, East, or West. When it comes to the man who goes down and digs his living out of the ground and works it out in the sweat of his face, I am ready to lend him a helping hand for garden seeds or anything else which he may desire. Whatever legislation he wants he ought to have, and I will join you and give it to him. [Applause.] It may be commendable and necessary for us to consider economy, and I am willing to economize along any line which may be presented wherever true economy can be obtained, except upon the farmers of the United States of America. [Applause.] I am not willing to economize on them, because the record shows that they are the ones who take care of this Government in times of stress and storm, in troubles, trials, tribulations, and sorrow. Whenever we want prosperity we must look to the farmer, because it is from his products that the balance of trade is brought from yonder shores to the people of the United States of America. Taking into consideration every other product that can be exported, of every kind and description, without the farmer the balance of trade against this great country would have run up into millions upon top of millions of dollars. But the products of the farm have gone into the foreign trade and brought the yellow gold back from foreign shores and filled our coffers, so that we have a balance of trade in favor of the United States of America to-day that runs up into the billions of dollars.

I find by investigation that during the last five years we have appropriated for the Navy Department of this Government the enormous sum of $728,000,000. During the same period of time we have appropriated for the War Department $786,000,000, whereas we have only appropriated for the Agricultural Department, from 1839 down to and including the year 1912, the small, the insignificant, the pitiful sum, in comparison with these others, of $168,000,000. Still to-day you propose to take away from the farmer the little pittance of garden seed. You would take away from his sweet wife, who labors with him day by day and helps to keep up the prosperity of the country and to maintain its welfare, its purity, and its nobility, the little package of flower seeds that goes to decorate her front yard. [Applause.] You would take away from her the seeds that would produce the vine that would grow in front of the window to lend gladness to the sunshine with its brilliancy and carry joy through the window of the humble cottage. [Applause.] I do not believe this House will indulge in any such economy as this. I do not believe it will take away from the people of this country this small pittance and send a message into every home that the Congress of the United States, while willing to appropriate billions of dollars for these other purposes, are not willing to appropriate the small sum herein provided for to furnish a package of garden seed, or a package of flower seed, or a package of cotton seed, or other kinds of seed to those who want them. This is an important question. It is so important that I secured a quantity of a certain variety of early maturing cotton seed that I believe will be good for Mississippi and good for the first congressional district, and am now distributing them in order to get ahead of the boll weevil, as was suggested a moment ago, by getting an early maturing variety of cotton, so that it will go in advance of the boll weevil and circumvent his disastrous onslaught upon the greatest commercial asset and the greatest agricultural product in all this land, which is cotton. [Applause.]

That cotton seed is named "Candler's Prolific." It is going into the State of Mississippi to-day, and I hope it is going to be so prolific that it will get-ahead of the boll weevil and preserve the cotton crop in the first congressional district, and if you will send these valuable seeds throughout the country in time I sincerely trust we may save the cotton crop of the country. [Applause.]

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Will the gentleman state what is the name of this early cotton seed?

Mr. CANDLER. It is called "Candler's Prolific." [Applause.] Therefore not only is this cotton proposition very important, but the diversification of crops in connection with the distribution of the seeds is a very important matter to the South, to the people of the South, where the boll weevil has appeared and is absolutely destroying the cotton crop; where the people are not prepared to meet it. My distinguished colleague from Mississippi [Mr. DICKSON], who is not present now, having been called home by serious illness in his family, lives to-day on the farm and in the house where he was born. He has been raising cotton during all these years. Four years ago he raised 376 bales of cotton, the next year 173 bales, and the next year 36 bales. This past year, with 18 families which he supported and took care of and provided the necessities of life for and used to the best advantage, he produced only a bale and a fraction of cotton upon his home farm. You will readily see from this concrete example the importance of this situation. These seeds are sent into localities to determine by actual experiment whether they will prevent the difficulty the people are having, and then by demonstration showing that they can escape this trouble, and by following up the results of these experiments and demonstrations they prevent the awful disaster that overhangs them like a great cloud beneath which they will be submerged and their crops destroyed, and the absolute prosperity of that whole section of the country taken away.

This, my friends, is not a small question. I have stood here and fought for it in days gone by. I hoped that the battle was ended; but I want to tell you that as long as this fight is kept up I am going to stand in the front line and protect the interests of the farmers in this country. [Great applause.] Now, I will not take the time of the House longer. I have many other matters that I want to say, and should I say them, judging from the enthusiasm around me and the cries to go on, I have no doubt they would interest you, but I desist in order to secure a vote as soon as possible, and ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the Record.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Mississippi asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the Record. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. LAMB. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from Mississippi has shown himself worthy of the name I have given him.

A MEMBER. What is that name?

Mr. LAMB. The gentleman from Mississippi will tell you. [Laughter.] I now, Mr. Chairman, move that all debate on this paragraph and amendments thereto close in 10 minutes. We must get along with the bill.

Mr. MANN. I hope the gentleman will not make his motion cover all amendments to the paragraph.

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. Mr. Chairman, I have an amendment that I want to offer.

Mr. LAMB. Very well, Mr. Chairman, I will modify my motion and say 10 minutes on the two pending amendments.

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. What two amendments?

Mr. LAMB. The two that are pending—the one offered by the gentleman from North Carolina and the amendment to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Maine. My motion is that all debate on these two amendments be closed in 10 minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Virginia modifies his motion that the debate on these two pending amendments close in 10 minutes.

The question was taken, and the motion was agreed to.

Mr. SMALL. Mr. Chairman, I am constrained to disagree with my colleague [Mr. PAGE] in the amendment which he has offered to strike out the provision of the bill. In fact, I think the greatest merit in the amendment arises from the reputation of the gentleman who presented it. The item proposed to be stricken out provides for the purchase, testing, propagation, and distribution of seed of improved varieties. I have been able to keep somewhat in touch with advances in agricultural methods during the past decade or more, and the greatest advance has been in recognition of the value of propagation and selection and testing of improved seeds. No greater advance has been made in agriculture than the lessons which have come from the testing of seeds, particularly of the staple crops.

Mr. PAGE. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SMALL. We are all familiar—I have only five minutes.

Mr. PAGE. For a question, or, rather, a statement. I want to say to my colleague that my amendment leaves $58,000 in the bill for the testing of rare and valuable seed.

Mr. SMALL. I understand that, Mr. Chairman, and that would not accomplish the purpose which is intended by this provision. We are all familiar with the wizard, Luther Burbank, and nearly all he has accomplished in a large part of his work has been reached by the process of selection of seed. Now, this bill provides for the propagation and the testing, and, as I understand it, while the department is authorized to purchase seeds from any available sources, yet all of those seeds before they are distributed have samples taken from them and are put through a process of testing by which their germinating qualities and their virility is ascertained, and no seeds are distributed unless they are tested in this manner. I regard this work as being a valuable one. I know there are certain newspapers which ridicule it; I know that occasionally you may find a farmer who is unappreciative of them; and yet if my constituents—and I live in an agricultural district—are typical of the other agricultural districts of the country, I happen to know that this distribution is appreciated by most, if not all, of the intelligent farmers. Time after time—I am sure to the extent of more than 1,000 letters every year—I get communications from farmers telling me of the value of this or that variety of seed, and I happen to know—

Mr. JACKSON. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. SMALL. Yes.

Mr. JACKSON. The gentleman stated the farmers who get the seed greatly appreciate them. Ought not they to be interested enough to write for them? I will ask that question first, and will follow that with another.

Mr. SMALL. Well, Mr. Chairman, that may work in theory, but not in actual practice. There is not a Representative in this House from an agricultural district who is not entirely familiar with the indisposition of the average farmer to correspond with his Representative, and in conversation with them, as other Members I am sure will testify, I have had them to say to me, "I wished to write you about such a matter, or I wished to get some information from you, but for one reason or another failed to write you." The fact that this large quantity of seed might not be distributed, if its distribution was dependent upon personal requests for them, is no criterion of the extent to which they are appreciated by the farmers in the agricultural districts.

Mr. JACKSON. Are there not two sides to this question also? Ought the Government to be expected to make an appropriation here practically of a quarter of a million dollars, leaving a large part of it—most of it—at the disposal of the Congressmen, solely because you say the men who want these seed will not write for them, when if they know that they would write for them the men whom it would benefit could be served at half the expense?

Mr. SMALL. But, Mr. Chairman, to put the proposition the other way: Is a Representative here, supposed to be conversant with the activities of the executive departments, to expect his constituents to be equally as conversant as he is and to write him for information, for publications, or for other results of the activities of the department. It is the duty of the Representative to be in the advance guard and through those activities to serve his constituents. [Applause.]

Mr. ELLERBE. Will the gentleman allow me to ask him one question?

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired. All time has expired.

Mr. MICHAEL E. DRISCOLL. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that this amendment may be reported again, for the information of those who did not happen to be in.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the amendment and the amendment to the amendment will be again reported.

There was no objection.

The amendment and the amendment to the amendment were again reported.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Maine.

The question was taken, and the amendment to the amendment was rejected.

The CHAIRMAN. The question recurs to the amendment offered by the gentleman from North Carolina.

The question was taken, and the Chair announced the yeas seemed to have it.

On a division (demanded by Mr. PAGE) the committee divided; and there were—yeas 19, yeas 84.

So the amendment was rejected.

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado and Mr. PEPPER rose.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Colorado [Mr. TAYLOR] is recognized.

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Colorado offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

"That the sum of $50,000 be, and the same is hereby, appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, for the purchase and special distribution of seeds in those sections of the Western States where, on account of the drought of 1911, the crops were a failure, the same to be distributed at the discretion of the Secretary of Agriculture, to be immediately available."

Mr. LAMB. Mr. Chairman, I reserve a point of order on that amendment.

Mr. MONDELL. Will the gentleman from Colorado [Mr. TAYLOR] yield to me for a suggestion?

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. Yes, sir.

Mr. MONDELL. Will the gentleman object to amending his amendment by inserting the words "field and garden"?

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. No; I will be perfectly willing to accept that modification.

Mr. MONDELL. That would evidently cover what the gentleman desires, I understand.

Mr. LEVER. It is understood that the point of order is reserved against the amendment and the change suggested by the gentleman from Wyoming.

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. I ask to have the amendment modified in accordance with the suggestion of the gentleman from Wyoming [Mr. MONDELL].

Mr. MONDELL. I ask, subject to the point of order, unanimous consent that before the word "seeds" the words "field and garden" be inserted.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Wyoming asks unanimous consent that the amendment be modified, subject to the point of order, as he has suggested. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. Mr. Chairman, I want to call the attention of the House briefly to the condition which makes this amendment necessary. You will all remember that a few years ago Congress passed what is known as the enlarged or 320-acre dry-farming homestead act. Under that law there have been thousands of people who have gone out into what was formerly known as the Great American Desert and located homesteads. During most years there have been sufficient rains so that many of those people have gotten a good start and are doing well. Generally speaking, the law has been a benefit in the development of the West. But during the last two years in some districts there has been an absolute drought, no rain or snow whatever, and thousands of those homesteaders throughout the West have not been able to raise anything for two years. We get a great many heartrending appeals from large portions of several States throughout the West describing the pitiable conditions of those settlers. Some of them have even sold everything they have to live on, and have no possible way by which they can get seed to plant during this spring. There are only a few small districts in eastern Colorado where this condition prevails. My amendment is for the relief of all new settlers throughout all the drought-stricken districts of the West. If the Government would come to the relief of these settlers and furnish them with even a small amount of seed just for the starting over again, it would be an act of common humanity, and it would be a wonderful benefit to a large number of deserving people in those temporarily unfortunate portions of the West. It does seem to those of us who come from that country, that while we are so liberally appropriating hundreds of thousands, yes, millions of dollars for experimental work and other work in the Agricultural Department, that this is a place where Congress could not only do a wonderful amount of good, but you would be saving the homes and almost saving the lives of thousands of bona fide settlers, good people, who are following out the noblest instincts of the human race in trying to establish a home. I feel that this is an amendment which ought to appeal to this House, and that the committee itself ought to join with me in supporting the amendment to furnish to these unfortunate and discouraged people merely a few seeds to be distributed under the supervision of the Agricultural Department.

I have personally taken this matter up with Secretary Wilson of the Department of Agriculture, and he recognizes the merits of this claim. He has written to me and told me personally that if there could be an appropriation secured for this purpose he would very gladly distribute the seed in a way that would do the most good and endeavor to save the homes and be of untold benefit to those settlers. I earnestly hope that the House will favor this amendment and will allow those people to have this necessary seed with which to get another start. This is not for experimentation, nor for anything that is theoretical; it is practical; it is a matter of dire necessity.

The Secretary of Agriculture some time ago promised, if he possibly could, to furnish me with an additional supply over my allotment of garden seeds, so that I might send them to the drought-stricken portions of eastern Colorado, and I have been very much in hopes that I might be able to secure enough in that way to supply these settlers with at least enough to provide a garden for them. But Secretary Wilson advised me the other day that the demands for seed this spring have been so great that the supply of the department is completely exhausted and that he can not furnish me any. So that, unless this appropriation is made, there will be many homesteaders throughout several of the Western States who will be compelled to leave their claims uncultivated and unoccupied during the coming season and the claimants go away to earn a living and if possible earn something with which to get another start.

Mr. Chairman, in this connection and in answer to the amendment offered by the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. PAGE], and which amendment seems to be offered every year by some Member, to strike out the appropriation for the purchase and distribution of garden and flower seeds, I want to offer a few suggestions regarding the manner of distributing these seeds by the Members of the Senate and the House.

Before I came to Congress I had the impression, which seems to be quite common throughout the country, that the sending out of these seeds was a waste of material and energy, and that no one was benefited excepting the people who raise the seeds. I think that impression is in some cases correct, and that the way many Members send out the seed they are very largely wasted and little appreciated. I understand that many Members send their seeds out in bulk, sometimes several large sacks full, to the political leaders of their party in their district; and often these party leaders do not make any systematic attempt to distribute them among people who want and would use them. I understand there is often no effort to systematically ascertain who wants and who will beneficially use these seeds. I am advised that other Members take the poll list of the voters in their district and send one package to each voter. They might just about as well throw the seeds away, because one package of seed is not sufficient to do anyone any good, and 6 out of 10 packages of seed sent out that way go to people who care nothing about them and who can make no use of them and do not want them. They are thrown in the wastebasket, and it is ridiculed and has by those people become a kind of an annual standing joke. Moreover, I do not believe in making the distribution of seeds a matter of partisan politics. Because a congressional district is represented by either a Democrat or a Republican is no reason why the poor people, or people who are not poor, who want and will beneficially use these seeds should have no opportunity of obtaining them unless they belong to the same political party as the man who happens to be elected to Congress from their district. Besides, when they are sent out in that manner there is little or no selection of the varieties, and often the seeds are entirely unsuited to the climate and locality to which they are sent, which very naturally disgusts the people.

I think that way of distributing, or, rather, wasting the seeds, ought to be stopped. I think the distribution ought to be made in a systematic way and in a nonpartisan way. If the seeds could be sent only to those who want them, I believe they would do 10 times more good than they do at the present time. I have thought about this matter and investigated it considerably, and I adopted a system last spring and am following it this spring. I prepared a letter to the newspapers of my State briefly calling their attention to the fact that my annual allotment of vegetable and flower seeds was ready for distribution and that I would not send any seeds whatever to anybody excepting to those who wrote me a letter or postal card requesting them, because I did not want to waste them or bother anyone with seeds who did not care for them, but stating I would be very glad to send a few packages to every one who cared enough about them to drop me a line giving me his or her name and address. I asked the newspapers to kindly publish that letter or mention its substance. I sent those letters to nearly all the newspapers in the State. I, of course, did not send them to all the newspapers in the large cities, but to such papers in the cities as I knew circulated largely among the laboring people; and I tried to reach every paper in the country counties, especially where there are new settlers. Some of the more partisan Republican papers will not mention it, but a few of them do.

Mr. MANN. About how many requests for seeds does the gentleman receive during the course of the year?

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. I received over 8,000 last spring. I am now receiving requests at the rate of about 250 a day. I received 478 letters in one day last March and over 2,000 in one week.

Mr. MANN. Are they made-up lists?

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. No, sir. They are individual letters and postal cards coming from all over the State of Colorado. There were over 100 newspapers in the State that published my letter last week or the week before, and the people who want the seeds are writing directly to me for them. I am not sending out any in bulk or to Democratic committeemen or to a soul who does not personally request them.

Mr. MANN. When we had this discussion up once before in the House, although I never voted for the appropriation, I brought on the floor of the House 10,000 requests which I received one spring from my district, which is a city district.

Mr. JACKSON. Does the gentleman yield for a question?

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Colorado yield to the gentleman from Kansas or the gentleman from Iowa?

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. I will yield to the gentleman from Kansas first.

Mr. JACKSON. Does not the gentleman believe that if the plan which he has followed—and which, I want to say, I have followed with satisfaction to myself—could be carried on at the department it could be done at one-fourth or one-half of the cost to the Government at which the present plan of sending out seed to everybody is carried on?

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. Yes; possibly it could. But, as the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. CANDLER] has well said, that system might not always be satisfactory.

Mr. JACKSON. And that the people who need seeds could secure them better in that way than under the present plan?

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. Yes; I think that would be an improvement over the present system of most Members. But I do not send my seed slips down to the department to be filled.

I started out that way when I first came here, but I found that the department frequently sent out seeds that were of no use in my State, and sometimes they reached there too late, and some of my constituents criticized me for it. I now have the seed slips all addressed in my office, and I employ additional help at my own expense and pack all the seeds in my office. As long as I have them, I pack and send to each person three or four packages of a variety of vegetable seeds and one package of a variety of flower seeds; and I know that there were thousands of homes in Colorado last year that had a good garden and a small variety of flowers as a result of my individual distribution, and I know the seeds I am now sending out will be a source of happiness in thousands of homes in my State this coming summer. I secured an extra allotment last spring and sent out over 200,000 of the small packages of vegetable seeds and 20,000 small packages of flower seeds, and I expect to send out as many this spring. This involves an enormous amount of extra work and personal expense, but I know it does an inestimable amount of good.

Mr. ANDERSON of Ohio. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Colorado yield to the gentleman from Ohio?

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. Certainly.

Mr. ANDERSON of Ohio. I know that the gentleman is in favor of the distribution of seeds as much as I am. Has he received many letters protesting against the distribution of seed?

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. I think I have received in three years possibly a half dozen letters asking me to vote against the seed distribution. But no one ever has the opportunity to protest against my sending him seeds, because no one gets them from me unless he asks for them. I have received two or three protests from seed houses or stores dealing in seeds. But I do not feel that they are materially injured or affected by this seed distribution. I think if it were not for this Government seed distribution that the seed trust might make the people pay a good deal more than they do for seeds. I have changed my opinion entirely on this seed matter since coming to Congress. I absolutely know that seeds sent out in the way I am distributing them do a world of good.

I get hundreds and hundreds of letters—I may say thousands of letters—and postal cards from women, many of them from the wives of laboring men in the cities and new settlers in the country asking me for a few seeds. Afterwards many of them write me, saying that they got "John" to spade up the back yard, and they planted and irrigated the garden, and had all the vegetables the family could eat and some to give to their neighbors, besides having some flowers to beautify their little homes. When anyone says the people do not want these seeds he simply does not know what he is talking about. A great many boys and girls write to me for them. If these people had to buy the seeds, even though they cost only a few cents, they might not do so. I try to get them into the homes of those who most need them. The seed that each person gets does not cost the Government probably more than 3 or 4 cents, and the way they are used by the most of the people I send them to, each family is benefited to the amount of probably $50 to $100. The greatest benefit is assisting the people who will make the best use of them in getting new and suitable varieties of seeds. It would make the heart of every Coloradoan swell with pride to hear the beautiful tribute to the Rocky Ford cantaloupe paid by the eloquent gentlemen from Mississippi [Mr. CANDLER] and South Carolina [Mr. ELLERBE]. Through the energy of the Rocky Ford citizens, and especially that grand old pioneer, Senator George W. Swink, the Luther Burbank of the cantaloupe industry, assisted by the Department of Agriculture, Rocky Ford cantaloupe seeds have been sent throughout all this country, and have lifted thousands of mortgages and brought happiness to the homes, joy to the hearts, and delight to the tastes of millions of people all over the civilized world.

In my judgment, this seed distribution is one of the best investments the Government makes. The seeds are raised under the direct supervision of the Agricultural Department in large quantities in various places throughout the United States, and they are the means of putting into every township in this country the most suitable seeds and giving the people a start in the best varieties of plants for their respective localities. The good that is thereby accomplished will endure for all time and is beyond calculation. I feel that it would be a very great mistake and misfortune if the amendment of the gentleman from North Carolina should be adopted and the distribution of seeds by the Agricultural Department be discontinued.

Mr. DRISCOLL. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Colorado has expired.

Mr. MARTIN of South Dakota rose.

Mr. LAMB. Mr. Chairman, I was going to ask for a ruling on the point of order.

Mr. MARTIN of South Dakota. I hope the gentleman will withhold his point of order. There are some of us who want to be heard on this question and also on the point of order when it is urged.

Mr. LAMB. Then I will wait awhile.

Mr. LEVER. Mr. Chairman, I move that the debate on this amendment be closed in 15 minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. A point of order is pending.

Mr. LAMB. I withhold it for awhile.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from South Dakota [Mr. MARTIN] is recognized.

Mr. MARTIN of South Dakota. Mr. Chairman, there is a great deal of merit in the amendment which is offered by the gentleman from Colorado [Mr. TAYLOR]. Being somewhat familiar with these conditions, I had prepared an amendment of like character. The chief criticism of the free distribution of seed from the Department of Agriculture, I think, grows out of the limitation which is put in the ordinary distribution in that the largest part of it, three-fourths or four-fifths, must be sent out by this congressional distribution. The result is that seeds are sent into localities and to farmers who do not need them for any practical purposes; whereas if the discretion could be left with the Secretary, this distribution might be of value and reach settlers and localities most needing them.

Now, it so happens that over a considerable portion of the western country there have been two successive years of drought, a thing unknown in those localities in the history of the country. There are localities in the West where—

Mr. ELLERBE. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield there for a question?

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from South Dakota yield to the gentleman from South Carolina?

Mr. MARTIN of South Dakota. Yes.

Mr. ELLERBE. Is there any experimental feature in this work at all? Is it not a fact that because of the drought those people lost their crops, and can not the State take care of them, so that the matter need not come in on this bill?

Mr. MARTIN of South Dakota. O Mr. Chairman, I can not allow the gentleman to take up my time for the purpose of making an argument. The whole question in the arid and semi-arid West is a question of scientific farming, involving not only the study of methods of dry farming, but the development of plants that are of a drought-resistant character. Now, it so happens that over a large area of the West there was a general crop failure in the last year by reason of a practical suspension of precipitation from September to September. There were areas in which there was no rainfall in the aggregate of over 2 inches, in a region that usually has a rainfall somewhere around 15 or 20 inches, and the result of it has been that vegetation did not start until September. Generous rains came in the fall, there has been a heavy snowfall this winter, and there is every prospect of a good crop in 1912 if the people can get seed. Now, those people are up against a condition, a practical proposition, in which the entire Nation is interested—the proposition of adapting agricultural products to the particular conditions of the country.

Hundreds and thousands of people have gone into that region and have struggled manfully with that problem, and many of them are not able now to supply their seed for the coming season. I for one do seriously criticize the sending of a large distribution of seeds into localities where they are not needed. If we would consent to it and confine the efforts of Congress and of the department to the supplying of really needed localities, we would be performing a great public service.

I sent a sack of seeds for distribution to a certain locality in my State some years ago, and after the seeds were distributed I received back from my friend, to whom I had sent them for distribution—he being somewhat of a wag—the statement that he had placed those seeds where they would do me the least harm. [Laughter.]

There are precedents for coming to the relief of localities which have suffered because of unusual conditions. During the years of the ravages of the grasshopper in the West, particularly in 1875, this Congress passed two bills for a special distribution of seeds, and appropriated $30,000 for that purpose—a distribution to settlers who had been damaged by the ravages of the grasshopper. Another measure that was enacted appropriated $150,000 for the supply of food and other needed help to the patriotic pioneers of the frontier who were seeking to wrest progress and utility out of the new country.

Now, I think if we were at this time to place in the hands of the Secretary of Agriculture this sum of $50,000 for the purpose of making a special and discriminatory distribution in those localities of those field and garden seeds that are best adapted to those conditions that sum would do more good than the entire aggregate of this appropriation of $285,000 carried in this bill for the whole seed distribution. [Applause.]

Mr. LAMB. Mr. Chairman, I ask for a ruling on the point of order.

Mr. RUCKER of Colorado. Mr. Chairman, I hope the gentleman from Virginia will wait for a moment. The gentleman has not heard all there is to say about this.

Mr. FOSTER of Illinois. The 15 minutes have not expired yet.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Colorado [Mr. RUCKER] is recognized.

Mr. RUCKER of Colorado. Mr. Chairman, the amendment offered by my colleague from Colorado [Mr. TAYLOR] is the basis of a bill that I have had pending before Congress, and especially before the Committee on Appropriations, since early in January; and I have been promised more times than I have fingers and toes that I should be heard before that committee. I despair, however, of being allowed an opportunity to appear before it.

I wanted to say to that committee, as I say to this House, that this is not a distribution of seed in an ordinary way. This is for field sowing—a very necessary thing to-day—and it would be far better, in my judgment, to curtail the expense incident to the sending out of these general packages of seed. We should send them out by sacks.

Mr. SHACKLEFORD. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Colorado yield to the gentleman from Missouri?

Mr. RUCKER of Colorado. Yes.

Mr. SHACKLEFORD. I did not quite catch the provisions of the amendment which the gentleman speaks of. Does this proposition include furnishing the mules and the drills to plant the seed with?

Mr. RUCKER of Colorado. No, sir. When it comes to that, if it were to vote for more mules, I would count on his vote; but we will furnish the mules and everything else if we get the seed. [Applause.]

Now, I want to say that in my district, especially in the last two years, there has been a drought. The farmers there have undertaken to farm by the Campbell system of dry farming, but by reason of there being no precipitation it was impossible for them to raise anything. Now, it does not behoove a Member representing a district to show up its impoverished condition, but in my district that condition exists in spots, and I may therefore justly disclose the actual condition.

People in that district in the last year have been compelled to burn up their fences and burn part of their barns and sell off every head of their stock in order to get through the severest winter we have had in Colorado for the last 35 years.

So I say, gentlemen, if it can get beyond this point of order, I hope the gentleman from Virginia has heart enough within his body so that he will withdraw it and let us get a vote, and let this committee determine whether they will relieve these sufferers. I want to say that within my recollection a bill of this kind came in for the relief of western Texas, and in my judgment it was to the discredit of the Chief Executive, while it was to the credit of the Congress, that an appropriation of this kind was voted for this identical purpose, for the same reason, but President Cleveland vetoed the bill. I will undertake to say as a Democrat that if this bill is passed the Republican President now occupying the chair of the Chief Executive will not veto it. [Applause.]

Mr. HELM. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RUCKER of Colorado. Yes.

Mr. HELM. Will the gentleman admit that the appropriation carried in this bill is intended in the least to be experimental, or for experimental work?

Mr. RUCKER of Colorado. This amendment?

Mr. HELM. I mean the item carried in this bill.

Mr. RUCKER of Colorado. No.

Mr. HELM. And is not this amendment intended to supply people with seed enough to plant their entire crop, because of a calamity, a drought?

Mr. RUCKER of Colorado. Yes; that is absolutely true.

Mr. HELM. Does the gentleman think that, enthusiastic as I am for this experimental work, we ought to go to this very extreme limit? Can not the State take charge of that situation?

Mr. RUCKER of Colorado. I have no doubt that if there was a drought in China or in Japan, or a similar condition of affairs in Samoa, or some other place, you could find in this House Members who would fall over one another to vote for an appropriation; but when it is proposed to relieve our own people, who are suffering—

Mr. HELM. Does the gentleman think that because there has been a drouth in that section he ought to come to the American Congress and ask us to help those people in this way?

Mr. RUCKER of Colorado. Yes; certainly. Otherwise I would not ask it.

Mr. HELM. Perhaps the gentleman could come in another way, and I would be delighted to help him.

Mr. MARTIN of South Dakota. I would like to ask the gentleman whether there is any difference in principle between this sort of an appropriation and the appropriation to fight the boll weevil?

Mr. ELLERBE. Oh, that is entirely different.

Mr. RUCKER of Colorado. There is no difference at all. The only difference is that the country from which the gentleman comes has a yearly complaint and we have only had reason to complain for the last two years. As long as the gentleman is a Member of Congress he will be here asking for seeds to resist the boll weevil, and every time he comes here, as long as there is a Democratic majority, he will get what he wants, and when we from the great West come and ask for relief we expect fair treatment. [Applause.]

Mr. HELM. Will the gentleman yield for another question?

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, if the point of order is overruled and the amendment comes before the House, I expect to offer an amendment to it, which I ask to have the Clerk read for information.

The Clerk read as follows:

And for the purchase, test, and distribution of seeds, plants, shrubs, trees, and vines, including the necessary labor with which to plant the same within the limits of the city of Chicago, the further sum of $10,000.

Mr. LAMB. Mr. Chairman, after my preacher friend from Wyoming [Mr. MONDELL] is heard, I shall insist on the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will hear the gentleman from Wyoming.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Chairman, a few days ago in discussing another paragraph of this bill, I referred to the fact that when I was a small boy I lived in a district in Iowa which was ravaged by grasshoppers. A great many people remember those grasshopper days, and I hold in my hand a copy of two bills passed by Congress for the relief of grasshopper sufferers in Kansas, Nebraska, Iowa, and Minnesota. I think that some of that distribution was made in northern Missouri, where the crops had been destroyed by grasshoppers. So that this legislation is in line with former action of Congress.

We have had two succeeding seasons of extreme drought in the West. The result is that there are many farmers in Wyoming, North and South Dakota, Colorado, and possibly in other States, who have practically produced nothing in the way of crops for two years. Over vast areas the grain sown last spring did not germinate.

I planted a field of winter wheat a year ago last fall and it came up last August. When the frost came in October it was a flourishing field, but it was just a year too late. There were vast areas over which seeds did not germinate at all, and still larger areas where the crops after they came up were withered and killed by the drought. These people need relief. This Congress ought to appropriate not $50,000 but $100,000 to give them relief. They are out there on the western plains, the pioneers no less to-day than the pioneers of 35 or 40 years ago, carrying forward the frontier of civilization, and we certainly can afford to make it possible for them to continue their struggle, to conquer that region and bring it into a condition under which it will produce food for man and beast.

Mr. RUSSELL. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MONDELL. I will.

Mr. RUSSELL. Suppose this amendment should be passed, would these seeds be fairly distributed over the country under this amendment which provides for the Western States that suffered from drought? There were some Southern States that suffered from drought.

Mr. MANN. Texas is a Western State.

Mr. RUSSELL. Texas is a Western State, but Oklahoma and Arkansas are Southern States. Why should this be confined to Western States?

Mr. MONDELL. This amendment applies particularly to the people on the public land who are the people who need this aid. In my State settlers on the public domain are the ones who need it—those who have gone forward conquering the wilderness.

Mr. RUSSELL. Can Congress afford to pass a bill for the distribution of seed in one section of the country only when there are other sections that suffer as much?

Mr. MONDELL. I do not think the gentleman from Colorado would have any objection to modifying his amendment so as to supply any drought-stricken section.

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. Not the slightest in the world.

Mr. MONDELL. I have no doubt that under the amendment as offered it could be used in Texas, because I think Texas is considered as a Western State, although a portion of it is a good ways south.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MONDELL. Certainly.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. I would like to ask the gentleman whether or not he thinks there would be any real worthy distribution on an appropriation of $50,000?

Mr. MONDELL. I do not think it is enough, but it is better than nothing. I think we should have at least $100,000 for this work. Mr. Chairman, I have not yet discussed the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is ready to rule.

Mr. MONDELL. If the Chair is entirely clear, I do not care to take up the time of the House discussing the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. This amendment undertakes to provide an appropriation for the distribution of field and garden seeds in certain Western States where the crops have been a failure. In the opinion of the Chair that does not at all come within the purview or the letter or spirit of section 520 creating the Department of Agriculture. The distribution of seeds spoken of there is the distribution of new and valuable seeds and plants, the clear purpose of which is to introduce new varieties or improve existing varieties, and not to furnish seeds as a donation for any section of the country, however great the emergency may be. The Chair is of opinion that the point of order should be sustained.

Mr. PEPPER. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend, on page 25, line 13, by striking out the words "those persons" and inserting in lieu thereof the following: "Teachers and pupils in public and other schools interested in the study of agriculture." Also insert after the word "Congress," in line 15, page 25, the words "or which may be received direct by the Department of Agriculture."

Mr. LAMB. To that, Mr. Chairman, I reserve a point of order.

Mr. PEPPER. Mr. Chairman, I hope the gentleman from Virginia will not insist upon the point of order. It strikes me that this involves a principle that is very important. Under the bill as it is written, and as it has been written for a number of years, seeds that have not been distributed by the Members of Congress by April 1 go back to the Department of Agriculture. I understand that a large amount of seed is not distributed by the Members of Congress and a considerable amount of this congressional allotment goes back to the department every year. This amendment provides that that seed which reverts to the Department of Agriculture shall be distributed to the teachers and the pupils of the schools of this country who are interested in the study of agriculture.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. PEPPER. Yes.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Could not that be accomplished much more readily through the Member of Congress representing the district in which the school is located?

Mr. PEPPER. It can be accomplished better, providing the Member does it; but if the gentleman will notice, this provides that it shall be distributed by the Department of Agriculture upon lists of names furnished by the Member of Congress or sent to the Department direct. I understand that a great many Members do distribute a large amount of seeds to the school children.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I am one of those who do that, and I find that it is very much valued by the children in the schools.

Mr. PEPPER. If it were generally understood among the 12,000,000 rural school children of this country that on the 1st day of April a considerable amount of seed becomes available, there is no doubt these boys and girls would gladly avail themselves of its use in their school gardens or in their own experiments. And I want to say this, that while you are making large appropriations for agricultural colleges, and while you are spending thousands of dollars to develop scientific farming, in my judgment the thing you have got to do first is to interest the boys and girls in the subject of agriculture in order to make the matter a success. I believe this offers a practical method of starting this work.

Mr. RUSSELL. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. PEPPER. Yes.

Mr. RUSSELL. I understand this amendment provides for the distribution of seeds that are not distributed by Members of Congress by the 1st of April in each year.

Mr. PEPPER. That is right.

Mr. RUSSELL. I would like to know what becomes of them now?

Mr. PEPPER. According to the bill, any portion of the allotment to Senators, Representatives, and Delegates in Congress remaining uncalled for on the 1st day of April is to be distributed by the Secretary of Agriculture, and he is to give preference to those persons whose names and addresses have been furnished by Senators and Representatives.

Mr. LAMB. There will not be any left. Over 25 men in this House have asked me to get them more seeds.

Mr. PEPPER. I want to call the gentleman's attention to the fact, however, that last spring when I came to Congress I was told there were over 100,000 packages that had not been distributed by Members of Congress. I understand, of course, that in a presidential year perhaps the distribution is a little more general, but I also understand that every year there are certain Members who do not distribute the seeds, and that those seeds go back to the Department of Agriculture. I simply provide in this amendment that whatever does go back shall be given to the school children of the country, 12,000,000 in number; that they shall have a preference. It is a practical step intended to assist in getting them interested in the subject of agriculture.

Mr. LAMB. They would not get one-quarter of a package a piece.

Mr. PEPPER. I think the gentleman is mistaken. I undertake to say that if the attention of the department is called to this—

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Would not the gentleman rather have that done through the Member of Congress?

Mr. PEPPER. Certainly, but this does not prevent that being done. It does not in any way affect the distribution of seeds by the Members of Congress.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. It would rather tend to centralize the distribution.

Mr. PEPPER. Not at all.

Mr. MANN. Does not the gentleman believe that if this policy which he suggests is adopted it would increase this appropriation ten or twenty fold inside of the next two years?

Mr. PEPPER. I do not see why it should.

Mr. MANN. Every school in the land would file an application with the Secretary of Agriculture for seeds. There would only be seed enough to go a very small way round, and either the Secretary would exercise favoritism or else he would be compelled to refuse most of the applications.

Mr. PEPPER. I will say in all seriousness—

Mr. LAMB. It is opening a Pandora's box of evils.

Mr. PEPPER. If it would increase the appropriations for seed and this extra amount is sent to the school children of this country who use seeds in the planting of their gardens and who become interested in the study of agriculture, it will be worth all it costs and is just as justifiable as any appropriation under this bill could be, because it puts the child in touch with something that not only will interest him, but puts him in touch with the Government itself. The way to secure interest in the study of agriculture in our schools is to have the pupils plant something and watch it grow. This will help to solve the problem of keeping the boys on the farm and getting them interested in raising their own crops and in planting something that will be their own. I do not know whether it will increase the appropriation or not, but I will say to the gentleman if it does it will serve a good purpose if it tends to foster and stimulate the study of agriculture in our public schools.

Mr. MANN. I thoroughly agree with the statement of the gentleman with reference to keeping the boys interested, and I am practicing it out in my district, but it is contrary entirely to the present scheme of distribution and will result in a duplication of the distribution in the end, and will result in their soon asking for ten times as much seed as we ever gave them and increasing an appropriation which ought not to be made at all to an enormous extent.

Mr. PEPPER. Let me call the gentleman's attention to the fact that there will be no duplication, because the bill provides "and who have not before during the same season been supplied by the department."

Mr. MANN. The Secretary of Agriculture does not keep a list of the names furnished him alphabetically throughout the country.

Mr. PEPPER. He keeps a list of the names furnished him by Members of Congress who furnish him the names.

Mr. MANN. Under the gentleman's amendment?

Mr. PEPPER. Yes.

Mr. MANN. Under the gentleman's amendment the Secretary of Agriculture will do as he pleases with the applications directed to the department.

Mr. PEPPER. Seed may be furnished upon a list furnished by a Member or by the department direct.

Mr. MANN. That means they make application direct to the department.

Mr. PEPPER. It provides, first, that preference shall be given to names furnished by Members of Congress and to persons who have not before during the same season been supplied by the department.

Mr. MANN. That is a matter of preference to determine, and the department does not make any investigation of that kind.

Mr. PEPPER. But the department does distribute seed under the same section of the bill.

Mr. MANN. Oh, no; the department has no authority to distribute these seeds. That part for distribution by a Member of Congress, except—

Mr. PEPPER. I understand there might be applications sent into the department that ought to be taken care of.

Mr. MANN. If the gentleman's proposition is to take the names coming from Members of Congress, that is already provided for. If the proposition is to have the application made direct to the Secretary of Agriculture, it means that every school-teacher in the country will make a request, and it will add enormously to the expense.

Mr. PEPPER. It simply provides the Member of Congress, instead of furnishing the list of voters, shall furnish the names of school children and teachers who are interested in this work.

Mr. MANN. It does not require them to furnish a list of voters. I believe every Member of Congress sends more or less seed direct to schools and school-teachers.

Mr. PEPPER. It puts a limitation upon the list furnished by the Member. In other words, it puts a limitation on the manner of distribution of those seeds which revert to the department under the terms of this bill.

Mr. MICHAEL E. DRISCOLL. Will the gentleman yield for just a question? I would like to ask, as a matter of fact, if there are any seeds which are not distributed in the spring.

Mr. PEPPER. I understand so. I am informed that there is a considerable quantity that revert to the department every year, and I think they ought to be utilized in the manner I have indicated.

Mr. LAMB. They go back to the Congressman.

Mr. ELLERBE. I would like to say to the gentleman, yes; there are a good many!

Mr. LAMB. Mr. Chairman, sometimes patience ceases to be a virtue. Now, I appeal to the good sense and the judgment of this committee, and I ask if the gentleman in charge of this bill has not been patient to a degree? Two hours have passed, and we are on the same paragraph where we ended when the committee had the bill last under consideration two days ago.

Mr. MANN. We spent two days on it once.

Mr. LAMB. We have given plenty of opportunity for Members to talk here, and I now insist, and I shall in the future move, that such debates as this close, particularly, Mr. Chairman, when we have a point of order. I make the point of order, Mr. Chairman, and I ask for a ruling.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Virginia reserved the point of order, and the debate was proceeding while the point of order was being withheld.

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado rose.

The CHAIRMAN. For what purpose does the gentleman from Colorado rise?

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. I wish to debate this amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. A point of order is insisted upon, and the Chair is prepared to rule. If this were a new question, the Chair would without hesitation sustain the point of order, because in the opinion of the present occupant of the chair there is scarcely a provision in this paragraph that is not subject to a point of order. It appears, however, that this paragraph was held out of order when first proposed, which ruling the Chair would have concurred in at the time, but that ruling was reversed on an appeal to the House. It seems, further, that where a provision of new legislation is permitted improperly to remain in an appropriation bill it is open to germane amendments, and such germane amendments are not subject to a point of order. The sole question remaining, therefore, is whether the amendments proposed by the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. PEPPER] are germane to the provisions of the bill. The point of order is therefore overruled.

Mr. LEVER. Mr. Chairman, I move that debate on this paragraph and all pending amendments be closed now.

The CHAIRMAN. It is moved that the debate on this paragraph and the pending amendments be closed in 10 minutes.

Mr. MICHAEL E. DRISCOLL. I want to know whether the gentleman means this amendment or all amendments.

Mr. LEVER. All amendments to this paragraph.

Mr. MANN. Oh, no.

Mr. LEVER. Give them 15 minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. It is moved that all debate on this paragraph and amendments thereto close in 15 minutes.

Mr. MANN. Then nobody can offer an amendment and discuss it or have it discussed.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. LEVER].

Mr. LEVER. Mr. Chairman, I move to close debate on this amendment in five minutes.

The motion was agreed to.

[Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado addressed the committee. See Appendix.]

Mr. ELLERBE. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman from Colorado may have five minutes more. I want to ask him a question.

Mr. LAMB. I hope, Mr. Chairman, that this debate will not last any further. We must insist that something be done here.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. ELLERBE] asks unanimous consent that the time of the gentleman from Colorado [Mr. TAYLOR] be extended five minutes. Is there objection?

Mr. LAMB. I object.

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. Let me say to the gentleman from Virginia that I have occupied only 10 minutes on this entire bill.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. PEPPER].

The question was taken, and the amendment was rejected.

Mr. FOWLER. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment, which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment offered by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. FOWLER].

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend, on page 26, after the word "station," in line 10, by adding as a separate paragraph the following: "That during the year 1912 Irish potatoes—"

Mr. JACKSON. A point of order, Mr. Chairman.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. JACKSON. We have not reached that section yet. I desire to offer an amendment to the section.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Chairman, I have an amendment which I desire to offer to the paragraph.

The CHAIRMAN. Is the amendment of the gentleman from Illinois intended to add a new section?

Mr. FOWLER. It is intended to add a new section.

The CHAIRMAN. That is not in order at the present time.

Mr. FOWLER. Mr. Chairman, I desire, when the section is reached, to offer that amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will submit it at the proper time. The Clerk will report the amendment offered by the gentleman from Wyoming [Mr. MONDELL].

The Clerk read as follows:

On line 1, page 24, strike out the words "two hundred and eighty-five thousand six hundred and eighty" and insert "three hundred and thirty-five thousand." And after the word "distribution," in line 4, page 24, insert "of which amount $50,000 shall be used for the purchase and distribution of drought-resistant field seeds."

Mr. LAMB. Mr. Chairman, I reserve a point of order on that.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Chairman—

Mr. LAMB. Let the gentleman from Wyoming confine himself to the point of order, please.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Chairman, I intended to discuss the point of order. Does the gentleman reserve it?

Mr. LAMB. Yes.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Chairman, I do not desire to take up the time of the House in discussing the merits of this amendment at any great length. I would like to discuss the point of order, after merely stating that the amendment proposes to increase the appropriation for seeds and provides that the increase shall be used for the purchase of drought-resistant seeds for the farmers for the drought-stricken sections.

Mr. Chairman, this appropriation ought to be made. I have already called the attention of the House to the drought conditions which exist over large areas of the West, and the very unfortunate condition in which the people find themselves in that country. Some of the farmers who have gone upon the public domain and taken up public land in the last two years have raised no crops. Those people are out on the dry lands. They propose to stay there. They propose to conquer that semiarid country if it can be done, but many of them are unable to secure the seed for their lands. It would be impossible for many of them to remain upon their farms unless the Government gives them some slight assistance. We simply ask that the Government do now what it did years ago in the grasshopper times. I remember those times very well. I lived in a region in good old Iowa, good, fat, corn-growing, wheat-growing Iowa, that received Government wheat and Government rye and Government oats. The farm that I lived on did not plant any of that Government seed but our neighbors did.

Mr. BUTLER. Why did not the gentleman get some of it?

Mr. MONDELL. If it was right and proper and just for Congress to relieve the settlers 30 or 35 years ago in Iowa, Nebraska, and Kansas, why is it not just and proper that Congress should now relieve the settler in North and South Dakota, Wyoming, and Colorado, who is battling with conditions more difficult than those which confronted the farmers in Iowa in grasshopper times? We have asked a very small sum, an increase of $50,000 in this appropriation. There should not be a dissenting voice on the floor of the House in opposition to the appropriation.

Now, Mr. Chairman, as to the point of order. The Chair has just called attention to the fact that this paragraph is subject to a point of order. The point of order has not been raised with regard to the paragraph, and therefore any amendment which is germane to the paragraph is not subject to a point of order. Certainly this amendment is germane to the paragraph. It is a paragraph providing for the purchase and distribution of unusual seeds.

Mr. LAMB. If these people are suffering as the gentleman thinks they are, why does he not come to Congress and ask for a special appropriation for this purpose and not mix it up with the agricultural appropriation? When Iowa suffered years ago I think I am correct in my recollection that a special act was passed for their relief. That is the proper way to bring up this question.

Mr. MONDELL. I suppose the agricultural appropriation bill was not under consideration at that time. This is the time and this is the place in which to grant the relief.

Mr. HELM. Do your people at heart really want a distribution of rare seeds or an abundance of seeds?

Mr. MONDELL. Both. Mr. Chairman, I was arguing the point of order. This paragraph provides for the general distribution of seeds of various sorts and kinds. It contains legislation, and therefore would have been subject to a point of order. The point of order was not raised. Any amendment germane to the paragraph is in order, and no amendment which is germane to the paragraph is subject to the point of order. My amendment is germane to the paragraph. It provides for a general distribution of certain classes of seeds, to wit, drought-resistant seeds.

Mr. MICHAEL E. DRISCOLL. What are those?

Mr. MONDELL. And therefore it seems to me very clear that this amendment is not subject to a point of order.

Mr. RUCKER of Colorado. I should like to inquire what is the point of order that the gentleman makes, and what are his reasons for it?

Mr. LAMB. That this is new language and legislation, and therefore is subject to the point of order.

Mr. MARTIN of South Dakota. Does the Chair desire to hear me in opposition to the point of order?

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is prepared to rule. The Chair is of opinion that the same ruling made a few minutes ago on this paragraph applies to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Wyoming. While the provision would be new legislation standing alone, it is certainly a germane amendment to the portion of the bill to which it relates. It increases the amount already provided for in the bill. It provides that a certain amount of the sum appropriated shall be used for certain purposes—that is, that a certain amount shall be used for drought-resisting seed. In the opinion of the Chair, both provisions are germane to the section of the bill to which they are offered, and, therefore, the point of order is overruled. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Wyoming.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. MONDELL) there were 24 ayes and 45 noes.

Mr. MONDELL. I ask for tellers.

The question of ordering tellers was taken.

The CHAIRMAN. Thirteen Members have arisen, not a sufficient number, and tellers are refused.

Mr. MANN. Well, Mr. Chairman, if we have not enough Members in the House to order tellers, we better have a quorum present. We do not seek delay, but when we can not get enough to ask for tellers I think we had better keep a quorum present.

Mr. LAMB. I appeal to the gentleman from Illinois; I appeal to his generosity; I have been patient as a lamb. [Laughter.]

Mr. MANN. I shall not insist on a quorum at this time, but I give fair warning that where we ask for tellers on this side on a reasonable proposition and can not get votes enough to order tellers, you will have to have a quorum present to refuse tellers.

Mr. FITZGERALD. The gentleman does not expect the opponents to the measure to furnish votes?

Mr. MANN. The votes for tellers? I think they are afraid of it.

Mr. FITZGERALD. If the gentleman can not keep a fifth of a quorum present on that side he can not expect us to furnish votes.

Mr. MANN. Well, I am present all the time, which the gentleman from New York is not.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I am present except when I am engaged in committee.

Mr. JACKSON. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 24, line 1, strike out lines 1, 2, 3, and 4, to and including the word "distribution," and insert in lieu thereof the words "one hundred thousand dollars."

Strike out all of page 1, after the words "United States," line 14, and all of lines 1 to 16, inclusive, on page 25.

Mr. JACKSON. Mr. Chairman, this amendment, if adopted, will leave this section in this way: It will appropriate $100,000 for the use of the Department of Agriculture for the purpose mentioned in the section for the distribution by the department. It would cut out all congressional distribution of seeds, and that, in my judgment, is what we ought to do about this matter. I think I am just as proud of the Department of Agriculture as any other Member of Congress or any other citizen of the United States. I think this great department, the one perhaps the nearest to the hearts of the people of any department in the Government, should be liberally supported, but I can not see, gentlemen, why we should stand here and in the name of agriculture absolutely waste $100,000 each year.

I voted very cheerfully the other day for an amendment adding $100,000 to the appropriation to provide farm-management experiments in counties and in the States and bring to the people of the country the benefits of this great department, because, in my judgment, that was simply providing the corner stone, the foundation of this great department. But, gentlemen, there is no reason why a man, woman, or child who has enough interest in this seed distribution to plant the seeds and give them a fair chance should not notify the department that they want the seeds and will use them. It will cost but a penny, or the fraction of a penny, to do it, and I say it is an insult to the intelligence of the American people to say they will not take enough interest to write for the seeds.

Mr. ELLERBE. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. JACKSON. Not just now. I say the people who are capable of governing themselves—and there are some who think that we ought to add to the responsibilities of self-government in this country—I say that sort of people are competent and able to write to the department for the package of seeds if they want them.

Mr. Chairman, there is another side to this question. Every time the department of the Government makes a mistake, every time you put upon the department something it ought not to do, some privilege or duty that is not governmental in its essence, that moment you turn upon the Government the wrath of the people and the prejudice of all the people of the country. You are year by year perpetuating this sort of graft—because it is a sort of graft—for the benefit of the seed growers and contractors, and you are not only doing that, but you are destroying the popularity of this department with all the people of the country. And you will keep it up until the department will either be seriously crippled or driven out of existence. So, I beg of this Committee on Agriculture, which has sat here and talked in the interest of the farmer, I beg of the many men who have delivered these eloquent orations—and many of them have been eloquent—for the benefit of the farmer, to come now to the defense of this great department itself, which is maintained for the benefit of the farmer, and help us to vote this amendment into the law, and cut out what is wrong, cut out what savors of graft. I use that word, Mr. Chairman, because there is a deep-seated conviction all over this country that this is maintained solely for the benefit of a lot of seed contractors.

Mr. LAMB. Mr. Chairman, every principle involved in this amendment was passed on this morning by this House when the amendment offered by the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. PAGE] was voted upon. This is merely attacking the seed distribution along another line. That is all there is to it. There is no use of wasting the time of this House in discussing this seed distribution. Time and again here since I have been a Member of this House this matter has been brought up and the House has pronounced its judgment on this question. I can see no good, no necessity for delaying the consideration of this measure and meeting the end we have in view—passing the measure as soon as possible. These amendments are offered, I will not say for a dilatory purpose, but I think because gentlemen desire to get them into the RECORD. Everything that the gentleman from Kansas has said has been said upon this subject this morning, and I ask for a vote.

Mr. ELLERBE. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LAMB. Yes.

Mr. ELLERBE. I only want to say this, that I am not willing to have it said that I am voting for this bill for buncombe or in order to popularize myself in my district. I am voting for it because I believe it is right. I want to say, in answer to the statement of the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. JACKSON], that if the Government sends out this seed, how do we know that the Government will not send to Mrs. Brown, who lives in a brick or a stone house, a package of cotton seed, and at the same time send to Tom Jones, who is a tenant on a farm in Ouithlacoochie, a package of flower seed. If I did not know more about my district than the Agricultural Department does, I would not be willing to represent it any longer.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Kansas.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. JACKSON) there were—ayes 15, noes 49.

Mr. FOWLER. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment, which I send to the desk and ask to have read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend, on page 24, line 14, after the word "State," by inserting the following:

"Provided, That Irish potatoes shall be admitted to the United States during the year 1912 free of duty."

Mr. LAMB. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order on that amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The point of order is sustained.

Mr. LEGARE. Mr. Chairman, on the 27th of February, in the city of Boston, the distinguished Member from Georgia [Mr. BRANTLEY] delivered an address which, in my opinion, is a masterpiece of oratory. In every sentence of his great speech there is an idea worthy of consideration. Every utterance that fell from the lips of the speaker bristled with wisdom. Through it all there breathes the spirit of patriotism and love of country. It was in every sense the effort of a statesman. I wish to place this gem upon the altar of publication by offering for print in the RECORD.

I do this in order that this document of wisdom may have a place in history and with the hope of its being read far and wide. I am fully persuaded that even in this day of radicalism and unrest the logic and reasoning of the gentleman from Georgia will find a resting place in the minds of all thinking men and materially aid those of us who are lending our efforts toward safe and sane government; and I ask, therefore, that his speech be printed.

SPEECH OF HON. W. G. BRANTLEY BEFORE NEW ENGLAND IRON AND HARDWARE ASSOCIATION, BOSTON, MASS., FEBRUARY 27, 1912.
A GOVERNMENT OF LAW.

"As the man who being asked if he would take oxtail soup remarked 'That is going back a long ways for soup,' so I may say that to go from Massachusetts to Georgia to secure a speaker for this occasion is going back a long ways for a speaker. Permit me to add, however, that I am glad you went, and permit me also to thank you for the honor thereby done me and for the pleasure and privilege I now enjoy in being with you.

"The day has been in the not far-distant past when your people and mine saw too little of each other and thought they had too little in common. The causes thereof it is not necessary to discuss. It is sufficient to know that that day has happily passed, and that we now full well know that all of us are equally concerned for our country and for the common destiny awaiting us. The truth is, in my judgment, there exists to-day in our country a more universal spirit of nationalism than has existed since the dark days of the sixties drove the sections asunder. There is to-day less of sectional feeling and less of political partisan bitterness than at any time since Appomattox. In this connection due praise for his contribution to this fortunate situation must be accorded our present Chief Magistrate, President Taft. His broad nationalism was shown when he went to both Georgia and Tennessee for a Supreme Court justice, and his epoch-making appointment of Justice White—a southern man, a Democrat, and an ex-Confederate soldier—to be Chief Justice of the Supreme Court of the United States was the boulder marking and commemorating the end of sectionalism, while the prompt and ready acquiescence therein by both Senate and country was but a garland of patriotism bedecking this giant boulder and evidencing the people's satisfaction over the fact of a reunited country. Reflecting upon these things, I do not feel that I have come a stranger among strangers. Indeed, knowing the message I bring, I am not concerned that you are of New England and that I am of the South, for I would speak to-night as one American citizen to other American citizens of a matter that concerns all American citizens. My message concerns all who love the flag, revere the Constitution, exalt liberty, and all who would preserve American institutions.

THE LAW.

"I invite your attention briefly to a few thoughts on our Government, viewed as a government of law, for such it is and has been, and such it must continue to be so long as it endures. After our experience of a century and a quarter under this government of law, enjoying its protection and beneficence as we have grown in wealth, in art, in knowledge, and in the science of government, it ought to be superfluous and a useless waste of time to enter upon a discussion of its merits other than to extol and praise them, and yet to those who read the signs of the times such discussion is at this time both appropriate and needful. Law, as we all know, is but a rule of action or conduct, and a government of law simply means a collection of fixed and certain rules of conduct, for all the relations of the people, the one with the other, and with the government, with power to compel their observance.

"Ours," says Judge Story, "is emphatically a Government of laws and not of men." The supreme law in our land is our written Constitution. The framers of our Government were not willing to create a pure democracy. They not only created a representative form of government, but through the Constitution they limited the power of their representatives and as well the power of the people themselves. They of course did not and could not limit the power of the people to supersede the Constitution with another constitution nor limit the power of the people by revolution or otherwise to overturn the Government itself and substitute another therefor. They declared, however, that in order for the Republic to live the rights of the individual, the rights of the minority, and the rights of all should be clearly fixed and limited by the fundamental law—the Constitution—which fundamental law should be the compact of the people, the one with the other, and alike binding upon all until such time as in the way prescribed within that compact itself it should be amended or repealed. The fathers knew that a government based solely upon the unrestrained will of the majority could become as arbitrary and despotic as that of any single tyrant or despot, and they would not have it. They established liberty, but it was liberty under the law; it was not license whether of the one or the many. The majority were to be just as much bound under the compact as was the individual. The 'law' was ordained as the sovereign master whose edicts all should obey. The temple of justice was erected, within whose portals all differences were to be adjusted and all wrongs righted. This temple, while to be officered by men, was not to execute the will of men, but within its sacred precincts the majesty of the law was to be maintained and justice between man and man and between the people and the Government was without fear or favor to be administered. The system of government thus devised was not perfect, because man is not perfect, and because no human agency is perfect. It was and is, however, the grandest conception of human government that the world has ever known. It has demonstrated its strength, its wisdom, and its virtues, and has vindicated the wisdom of the men who planned it.

THE PEOPLE.

"John Adams, in his inaugural address in 1797, declared that the existence of such a Government as ours for any length of time "is a full proof of a general dissemination of knowledge and virtue throughout the whole body of the people." This Government has lived for more than 100 years since these words were spoken, and thus the proof of both the knowledge and the virtue of the whole body of the people is established. Has this knowledge grown less or has virtue declined that to-day the proposal is seriously made to overturn our Government of law and substitute therefor a government of men? We surely can not arraign the virtue or the patriotism of any considerable number of our people, but may it not be that we have grown so far removed from the origin of our Government that too few people know anything of that origin or of the reasons for or the purposes of the Government itself? Men to-day are ushered upon the scene of life's activities to find a Government already existing and complete in all its parts. Too few of them, perhaps, stop to inquire whence it came or how it is to be maintained. Other things that to them seem of more importance absorb their attention. We may therefore conclude that if our Government of law shall fail, the cause will not be the loss of virtue, but the growth of ignorance.

BUREAUCRACY.

"The movement to-day to substitute the will of men rather than rules of law for our guidance and control is not confined to the ignorant, the toilers, the poor, or the weak, but it is participated in by the rich, the strong, and the powerful. All who join therein are not actuated by the same purpose or seek the same end, but in the result achieved, should the movement succeed, the end—anarchy and revolution—will be the same. Individuals and corporations engaged in commerce, smarting under antitrust-law prosecutions and what they think is the tendency of present-day legislation to destroy the right of contract, are equally zealous with those who smart under the high cost of living and those who are excited by the rantings of demagogues for a change. Danger to our government of law approaches from both ends of life's line. From one end comes the demand to strike down the law and substitute a man or set of men whose will shall be the law as to what commerce or business can do. From the other end comes the demand to strike down the law and substitute therefor the will of the majority. The divine right of the majority is claimed, and it is asserted that the majority can do no wrong. The demand from one end is for a bureaucracy and from the other for a mobocracy. At neither end of the line does the law find any hope or encouragement, and either demand, if granted, would destroy our government of law.

"Let us in fairness for a moment look at the demand for a bureaucracy and see upon what it rests. This demand might be curiously met with the simple suggestion that the law be obeyed and no other remedy would be found necessary. The subject, however, is broader and bigger than that and merits a more civil answer, for in truth we know that the law most complained of is uncertain, and, therefore, difficult to obey.

THE SHERMAN LAW.

"The Sherman law in itself is sufficient topic for an evening's discussion, and my suggestions concerning it must, indeed, be brief; but I submit without argument that an endurance of the law, however uncertain and however drastic, is preferable to fettering that freedom of commerce and that freedom of contract guaranteed by the Constitution that must inevitably result when that freedom is given as a favor from some individual rather than claimed as a matter of right. I submit also that an appeal to the conscience and intelligence of the American people for such changes in the law as can be demonstrated to be needful will not go unheeded. The remedy for a bad law is to amend or repeal it, but not to destroy all law governing the subject involved.

"It is a curious history that the Sherman law has had. It prohibits in terms 'every' combination, contract, or conspiracy in restraint of trade, without defining what is a restraint of trade, and now, after 20 years of experience under it, we have at last learned that the word 'every' as used in the statute does not mean 'every' act interfering with trade and that only such acts are prohibited as 'unduly' interfere with the orderly course of trade. The precise definition of 'unduly' is not given, and each business man must determine at his peril whether or not his acts of interference are 'undue.' Perhaps in another decade, if the law remains the same, the courts will determine this for him also.

"Comparatively early in the life of the law the courts determined that its purpose and meaning was to enforce competition, and that whatever restrained competition was the restraint thereby prohibited. The law itself says nothing about competition, and, with all due deference to the courts, it may be that they missed the true construction of the law. The law of competition is the law of 'the survival of the fittest,' and, unrestrained by any other law, must inevitably lead to monopoly; and yet the Sherman law prohibits monopoly as well as restraints of trade. Competition, enforced by the first section of the law, leads to monopoly, which, when reached, is by the next section of the law made the open door to the penitentiary. The absence of competition is not necessarily a restraint of trade so far as the public is concerned. One competitor by superior capital or capacity may drive another competitor out of business, and the trade of this competitor is of course restrained, for it ceases to exist. The successful rival, however, may so enlarge his trade that singly he does more business than the two combined had previously done. Trade, therefore, so far as the public is concerned, has not been restrained. It has been increased, and unless the public has thereby been unduly taxed by an increased price for the commodity sold, as the result of a monopoly created, the public has not been injured. Monopolies have ever been abhorrent to all law, but no just Government ever penalizes success or restrains the lawful use of brains.

"One administration has followed upon another since the Sherman law went into effect, and each has challenged the plaudits of the multitude by citing a greater number of prosecutions under the law than stand to the credit of the preceding administration. Is this the test by which we must determine the beneficence and wisdom of the law? Would it not be better and more informing to cite the public to a reduced number of 'trusts' and to a reduced cost of living? The prosecutions instituted are but the means employed whereby the end of public benefit is supposed to be reached. What of the end? Let us pass by the means employed and ascertain the result reached. Can anyone deny that the cost of living is to-day greater than at any time during the life of the law, and that the number of so-called 'trusts' now in existence is greater than at any time in our history? Viewed, therefore, from the standpoint of the end sought rather than that of the means employed, we appear not to have made any headway under the law.

"Broadly speaking, our country is divided into the two classes of consumers and producers. Each merits and deserves the fostering care and protection of our Government. In the interest of which was the Sherman law enacted, and which has benefited thereby? Has either been benefited? If neither has been benefited, what purpose does the law serve? From the framing of the first tariff law until now, and under all political parties and all administrations, the producer has been protected. Sometimes more and sometimes less, but always in some degree protected. Sometimes the protection has been freely given and sometimes grudgingly given because found to be unavoidable under our revenue system, but always it has been given. Protection is said by its advocates to foster and develop, to build up and make to grow, and they credit our great commerce to its influence. If the Sherman law, designed solely to enforce competition, is in the interest only of the consumer, is it proposed thereby to strike down the protection to the producer that is afforded by the tariff? If so, will it not be better to do this directly by repealing our tariff laws? If competition is the end sought, will it not be more directly reached by pulling down the tariff wall and opening our markets to the producers of all the world? That Congress, in enacting the Sherman law, was not aiming at competition is possibly shown by its retention of the protective tariff.

"So far as dishonesty, wrongdoing, fraud, and misconduct are concerned, whether in trade or elsewhere, they should be heavily penalized. That is a different proposition from enforcing and compelling competition under any and all circumstances. It is also a different proposition from that of furnishing an opportunity to compete.

"This brief review of the Sherman law is perhaps sufficient to explain the restlessness of those who come within its operation and the desire upon their part to substitute a bureaucracy for it. For those who are honestly seeking to obey the law and at the same time to do business under it, the Government should be concerned to aid them. For those who knowingly and willfully violate the law there can be no sympathy from anyone. The thought, however, should be in the minds of all of us that all the greatness and glory of our country is builded upon its commerce. To commerce we owe our wealth, our cities, our towering buildings, our railroads, and our greatness among the nations of the earth, and it must be fostered and protected. We should not forget that it was the desire to make commerce free—to make the markets of each State open to the products of all the other States—that led to the writing of our Constitution, nor should we forget that when it was written the Supreme Court declared that the commerce clause thereof did make commerce free, save as Congress might restrain it. Congress can have no thought to restrain except to benefit or save. Does the Sherman law unduly impede or restrain commerce? The question is big enough and important enough to receive a more carefully considered answer than I can make to-night. It is big enough and important enough to bring together the enterprising patriotic men who are engaged in business, both 'big' and 'little,' to consider and answer it. Surely the great commerce of which our country boasts is not the product of crime. Surely our leaders in finance, in business, and in prosperity are not all criminals. Surely there is honor and honesty to be found in our commercial life. And yet one dissolution suit follows so swift upon another, one prosecution so rapidly succeeds another, that the entire commercial world must stand aghast at the arraignment of American business by the American Government. The conclusion is irresistible that either our business methods are rotten or else our law is rotten. If the defect is in the law the business men of our country owe it to themselves as well as to American honor to point out the defects and suggest the changes to be made. If the defect is in our business methods haste should be made to change them. We can not maintain government by making it fashionable to be indicted, and neither can we maintain it if we are to become a nation of lawbreakers. The demand for a law that is simple and plain is not an extravagant demand. If neither the lawmaking power nor the courts can clearly define the restraints of trade that are made criminal, how can the layman define them? Is a law just that penalizes not simply ignorance of American law, but ignorance of the English common law as well?

"Whatever change we make in the law there must remain a law for our guidance. A bureaucratic Government in free America is not to be tolerated. Even though business should be willing to run the risk of the tyranny, the favoritism, the partiality, and the fraud of such a government, the American people can not consent to it, so long as they believe in a government of law. Has our initiative and capacity so failed us that we can not frame proper rules for the government of business? If Congress can not frame them, if business can not suggest them, from whence will a few autocrats draw their inspiration? If individuals can enforce rules, when once they are made, why can not the courts enforce them? Shall we admit the impotency and incapacity of the law and the courts to decree and compel honesty and fair dealing where business is involved? If so, we should at once and for all time admit the failure of government by the people.

MOBOCRACY.

"The other end of the line is insisting, not upon a one man or a two men's Government, but upon a Government by the majority of the people. This demand for a mobocracy presents a more serious problem than the demand for a bureaucracy, and one that is more difficult to understand. It is more serious, because more widespread, and we can not in true patriotism overlook a demand that enlists the open sympathy of seekers after the Presidency.

"The demand is more difficult to understand, because there is so little excuse or justification for it. It is but a pretense to say that a more representative form of Government is desired, or that the change is necessary in order to give the people control of their own Government, for the people now control. They have all the direct power of Government that was not deliberately and intentionally contracted away for their good, as their part of the compact, at the time the Constitution was written. Indirectly they have all the power there is, and directly they have all that a representative form of Government can concede and remain a representative form of Government. The voice of the people is perhaps more potent to-day in our lawmaking department than at any time in our history.

"In the life of this Republic the rule once was that a Representative in Congress represented the entire United States, and gave the country the benefit of his judgment and leadership, and the rule also was to believe that worse things could happen than being defeated for reelection. Regretfully we must admit to-day that these rules are more honored in the breach than in the observance. The legislation that is to-day enacted or defeated represents the sentiment and wishes of the majority of the people, in so far as those in power are able to read and understand such sentiment and wishes, and if a remedy is wanted for things done and for things undone it must be found, not by increasing the already supreme power of the people, but by directing the use of that power.

THE INITIATIVE, REFERENDUM, AND RECALL.

"Those who urge upon us the initiative, referendum, and recall do not all agree—publicly, at least—upon the end they would achieve. The bolder and more aggressive do not hesitate to declare for a pure democracy—for the supreme power of the majority, without let or hindrance, and for the use of that power in all the affairs of Government. The more timid will not avow so bold a purpose. They would strike down, however, the checks and balances of constitutional government, and while conferring supreme power upon the majority they would cautiously advise that the full power so granted be not always used. The distinction is meaningless and merits no consideration.

"The preamble to the Constitution does not read, 'We, the majority of the people,' but it reads, 'We, the people.' The Constitution is the Constitution of all, and not simply of the majority. In the first section of the first article thereof all legislative power is vested in the Congress, and this makes our Government representative in form. In the fifth and again in the fourteenth amendment the individual is protected by the declaration that 'no person' shall be deprived of 'life, liberty, or property without due process of law.' The simple statement of these provisions of the Constitution shows the revolutionary character of the proposal to substitute for them the will of the majority.

"Under our present form of government when by industry and frugality a man procures the means and purchases a home, obtaining good title thereto, it is his. The law gives it to him and protects him in it, and neither a majority nor any other number of his fellow citizens can lawfully take it from him. This is the protection of property that is guaranteed by the Constitution. The same protection is given to life and liberty, and for this protection, now so ample and complete, it is proposed that we shall substitute the pleasure of the majority.

THE COURTS.

"The most astonishing because the most revolutionary of all the proposals made is that relating to the courts. Some of the people claim to have discovered that the courts are a menace to liberty and should be restrained. Little they know that they are striking at the only protection of life, liberty, or property that they enjoy. But for the courts we must have autocratic government or anarchy; but for the courts a government of law would be without strength or power and could not live. The statutes of Congress and the orders of the Executive would be dead and meaningless things but for the power of the courts to give them vitality and compel obedience thereto. The power of the courts is plainly and simply conferred by the Constitution, and it is a most necessary power. Power must be somewhere lodged to say when a given act violates the law or when a given law violates the Constitution or else each man or each department construes for himself or itself and all is confusion. Where better can we lodge this power than in an independent judiciary? Suppose Congress should enact a law establishing a State religion and requiring my observance of it when under my conscience I hold to a different faith? Suppose Congress should levy a tax forbidden by the Constitution? Suppose Congress should assume to itself all the police powers of the States and proceed to their exercise? In any of these supposed cases ought there not to be a power competent to declare such acts void? If not, of what avail is the Constitution? If it be said that Congress will not knowingly violate the Constitution and its oath by passing such acts, can it not be equally said that neither will the courts knowingly violate the Constitution or their oath of office? The possibility of the abuse of power has never yet been held a sufficient reason for the nonexistence of the power. The one thing that has ever differentiated our Republic from all other Governments has been our judiciary. The maintenance of our judicial system has been our crowning glory, for it has made and maintained our government of law.

"The Constitution without definition, limit, or qualification vests 'the judicial power of the United States' in the courts. Judge Story says, 'No man can doubt or deny that the power to construe the Constitution is a judicial power.' Before the day of Story, Madison said: 'It may be a misfortune that in organizing any government the explication of its authority should be left to any of its coordinate branches. There is no example in any country where it is otherwise. There is no new policy in submitting it to the judiciary of the United States.' Webster in one of his great speeches declared that the constitutional provision making the Constitution the supreme law of the land, together with the other provision vesting judicial power in the courts were 'the keystone of the arch.' 'With those,' he said, 'it is a constitution; without them it is a confederacy.' We read the utterances of these great men, we search our own understanding, and we are stupefied and amazed at the treason to constitutional government that is abroad in our land. Of what are the people thinking that such as this can exist among them?

RECALL OF JUDICIAL DECISIONS.

"Some of the advocates of the recall of judges would go further and nullify judicial decisions by a popular vote. Declaring for 'constitutionalism' they would, nevertheless, by the will of a simple majority override the legislature that stood for it and the court that enforced it. They would make of the Constitution but a bit of paper to be torn to tatters at the will of the mob.

"The Constitution, the crowning glory of American achievement, they would submit for construction and enforcement to the fleeting fancy of the temporary majority. Such a proposal can only be fitly characterized as anarchy gone mad. It is said in support of the proposal that judges make mistakes. Of course they do. Who does not? We are to-day, however, protected against mistakes in lawmaking fivefold times and more. In the first place, by the people themselves in their selection of competent and upright Representatives. In the second place, by the oath of the Representatives to support the Constitution. In the third place, by the Senate, that must concur. In the fourth place, by the Executive, who must approve. In the fifth place, by the courts, to whom appeal can be made; and finally, by the people again, who, if a mistake is made, notwithstanding all these precautions, can elect new Representatives and correct it. For all these safeguards it is proposed to substitute the will of a majority of those voting under the stress and excitement of a political campaign.

"Judges have made mistakes, but be it said to the honor and glory of the American judiciary that but few of them have ever made them intentionally. Judges have made mistakes, but no judge in all our recorded history has ever made the monumental mistake that is now being made by those who urge upon us the revolutionary proposals that we are now considering. These proposals are urged in the face of the fact that through peace and war, through prosperity and panic, through health and through pestilence, our Government as the fathers planned it, has not only lived for more than a century of time, but has grown resplendent in its proud achievements and has brought our country to a position of eminence among the greatest of the nations of the earth. They are urged in the face of the fact that in all the records of time no such government as is proposed ever lived to tell the tale of its existence. We stand amazed at the recklessness of the proposals made, and more so at the public sentiment that will tolerate them. From whence comes this sentiment? In the financial and business world we know that credit is the basis of our tremendous transactions, and we know that credit rests upon confidence. We also know that when confidence is destroyed or undermined, panic follows. Is it not the same in a representative government? The basic principle of our Government is patriotism. The Government rests upon the patriotic belief of the people in the existence of patriotism among themselves. It rests upon their confidence in the honesty and integrity of human agencies. Destroy that confidence, inspire distrust, and our representative Government must fail, for the people will no longer trust one another. May it not be that we are but reaping the fruit of the seed so lavishly sown by the muckrakers? No greater enemies of the Republic have ever lived than those who in season and out of season, for purposes of selfish and sordid gain, have sought to destroy the confidence of the people in their trusted public servants. These enemies must be overcome and confidence must be restored if we would save the Republic.

NEEDED REFORMS.

"Reforms we need and improvements we ought to have, but let us not change the form of our Government structure. Let us build on the old foundations, preserving forever the eternal principles of equality and justice embedded therein. We should find a way to utilize the 'judicial power' for determining the constitutionality of important general legislation before putting same in force. No greater reform can be urged, for justice should not be impeded or delayed nor individuals taxed by personal litigation to settle constitutional questions. A uniform law for the regulation of all interstate commerce and those engaged therein whereby both business and the public will be protected should be devised. Ways should be found to curtail our output of new laws and to lessen the volume and shorten the determination of litigation. These and many other reforms are needed, but when all is said and done, the fact remains that this is a Government of and by the people, and will be good or bad accordingly as the people possess knowledge and virtue or are controlled by ignorance or cupidity. It also remains that the proposals of government we have been discussing deal only with means of government. The great ends of government are not involved or referred to. They offer no solution of any of the real problems confronting us.

"A new way of legislating is proposed, but what is to be the legislation? The restrictions of the Constitution are to be removed, but what is then to be done? No legislative proposal is advanced, and we are left to assume that there is something the people want and which they now can not get under our present system of government, but what is it the people want? There can be no real reform affecting our Government that does not start among the people themselves. While we have legislatures and laws, courts and officers of all kinds that we call our Government, there is in the last analysis no government in our land save that of public sentiment. Elevate the standard of citizenship and the standard of legislation is at once raised. Purify the body politic and the government becomes pure. The stream can rise no higher than its source. What our country needs is not a new government, nor new ways of making laws, nor more laws, but it is the planting deep in the hearts of all the people the spirit of the law.

"In the Colonial Congress in Philadelphia in 1774 Patrick Henry declared:

"Oppression has effaced the boundaries of the several colonies; the distinctions between Virginians, Pennsylvanians, New Yorkers, and New Englanders are no more. I am not a Virginian, but an American."

"The assaults to-day upon constitutional and representative government are an appeal to our patriotism. They have effaced all sectional lines. It is not as Republicans nor as Democrats, but as Americans that we must meet and repel them."

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word in the paragraph for the purpose of making an inquiry. The gentleman stated the other day that the appropriation for the Brownsville experiment station was carried in this item at the top of page 26. That appropriation for the testing of rare and valuable seeds, and so forth, has been increased from $52,520 to $58,740. Is that increase sufficient to provide the Brownsville testing station with the money which has been used there before?

Mr. LAMB. I think so; and I will give this explanation: The appropriation for foreign seed and plant introduction has been increased from $52,520 to $58,740, as the gentleman states, an increase of $6,220. The appropriation for the Texas garden—$11,260—was transferred to this item, and seven employees have been transferred to the statutory roll, amounting to $5,040, making a net increase of $6,220. That explains that whole situation.

Mr. MANN. That seems to cover that. While Brownsville is taken care of in that item in that way, the appropriation under the entire paragraph is reduced from $289,680 to $285,680. That is a reduction in the total amount, although there is an increase in the work to be performed by the appropriation. Is that also caused by a transfer to the statutory roll?

Mr. LAMB. That is right. The decrease is $9,160 and the increase is $28,214, and the difference between the two is made by transfers from the lump sum to the statutory roll.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the pro forma amendment will be withdrawn.

There was no objection.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, the agricultural appropriation bill provides for the investigation of diseases of animals and plants and to check the spread of damage to crops by insects, such as the boll weevil, but it gives scant consideration to one of the most distressing of modern tree diseases, the chestnut blight. All that was appropriated for this purpose last year, if I remember correctly, was $5,000, and this year the investigation is to be taken care of, along with many other worthy objects, in the item of $29,510 "for the control of diseases of forest and ornamental trees and shrubs." The Committee on Agriculture could not see its way clear to favorably consider the bill introduced by me December 4, 1911, providing an appropriation of $80,000 "to enable the Secretary of Agriculture to meet the emergency caused by the continued spread of the chestnut bark disease," but the distinguished chairman of the committee, the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. LAMB], in the discussion of my amendment on yesterday indicted the readiness of the committee to hear argument upon the bill as a separate measure, and with this the advocates of a broad and scientific "study of the nature and habits of the parasitic fungus causing the disease" will have to be content for the present.

I think, Mr. Chairman, the Government, which is doing so much in other directions for agriculture and forestry, should take a livelier interest in the awful havoc that is being done the useful and stately chestnut trees of the country. To a large extent we have permitted the walnut trees to fall a prey to commercialism, since the wood has been so valuable for manufacture and export, but the chestnut tree is still with us, and appeals strongly to those true conservationists of our natural resources who contend against the utter extinction of valued species of American animal and plant life. And so far as the chestnut tree is concerned, it can very reasonably come to Congress for aid and redress, since some of the States in which it makes its habitat have already undertaken to preserve and protect it. This is notably so with the State of Pennsylvania, which has appropriated $275,000, which is now being used "for the investigation and scientific study of the problem, and more especially to ascertain the exact extent of the blight and to devise ways and means through which it might, if possible, be stamped out."

PENNSYLVANIA IN THE FIELD.

Indeed, without waiting for Government action, Pennsylvania has already constituted a commission, which has organized and put its force of experts in the field. The reports of these experts, together with the results thus far attained, were presented at a conference held in the city of Harrisburg, February 20 and 21 last, at which many States into which the chestnut blight has made its unwelcome presence known were represented.

The purposes of the Harrisburg convention are very clearly set forth in the announcement issued by the secretary of the Pennsylvania Chestnut Tree Blight Commission, Mr. Harold Pierce, of Philadelphia, who said:

In order that the other States not yet touched by the blight, but certainly in its line of advance, may realize the seriousness of the situation, the governor, who is much interested, has called this convention for a consideration of ways and means, in the hope that the States may be aroused to action and be ready to meet the invasion at their borders. Pennsylvania's problem is now or soon will become the problem of Maine, Vermont, New Hampshire, Massachusetts, Rhode Island, Connecticut, New York, New Jersey, Delaware, Maryland, Virginia, North Carolina, South Carolina, Georgia, Alabama, Mississippi, Tennessee, Kentucky, West Virginia, Ohio, Indiana, and Michigan. Active cooperation of the States is essential.

So far as the Harrisburg convention is concerned, it was very largely attended and evinced the deep interest of the delegates in a problem which did not arise in Pennsylvania, but which having arisen, had worked great loss in that State and was destroying chestnut trees by the thousands in neighboring States, with the prospect of a continuance of the work of destruction wherever chestnut trees are to be found throughout the country. There never was a situation more analogous to the demand for checking the spread of the boll weevil, which harasses the southern cotton planter, or of the Texas fever, or of any other cattle or plant disease than this. And if the Government has seen fit to step in and stop the ravages of disease as it passes over the borders of the States in any one of the others, so it should also step in now to check the chestnut-tree blight.

A CONDITION CONFRONTS US.

In opening the Harrisburg convention, the governor of Pennsylvania made this interesting and comprehensive statement of the movement to preserve the trees and to protect the property value represented by them:

This conference has been called for the purpose of obtaining all information possible concerning the best methods of fighting the destructive fungous disease known as the chestnut-tree bark disease or chestnut-tree blight, which was first detected in the neighborhood of New York City about eight years ago and has since spread to the northeast as far as eastern Massachusetts and to the southwest as far as central Pennsylvania, Maryland, and northern Virginia.

This tree disease is virulent in character. To date no specific remedy to be applied to individual trees is known. It seems almost unthinkable that a disease of this character should so invade a large area and that no means of preventing its spread is at hand. Unless this disease be stopped by concerted action among the States it is certain that within a few years very few living wild chestnut trees will be found in America. It is therefore entirely in accord with the American spirit that we make every effort to destroy or check the advance of this disease.

The value of the standing chestnut stock to-day in America is enormous. In Pennsylvania alone the wild chestnut tree is found native throughout the State, and in the southern counties of the State forms the principal remaining forest tree. The value of this tree in the State of Virginia is reliably computed by competent authority to be not less than $35,000,000. The best chestnut in the world is still remaining in the mountains of North Carolina, West Virginia, eastern Kentucky, and Tennessee. The chestnut stock of the future must necessarily be drawn from these States. To date the blight has not reached this region, but is steadily tending in that direction. This tree is also of great value in Ohio and the remaining Atlantic seaboard States, and by reason of the all too prevalent forest destruction going on, the tree can ill be spared, much less its value wasted, as it largely will be should the remaining chestnut stock be attacked.

The destruction of the wild chestnut trees in New Jersey, in southeastern New York, western Connecticut and Massachusetts, and southeastern Pennsylvania is marked to be complete. The industries depending upon the wild chestnut tree for their support are of large proportion and great value. Every part of the tree is valuable for making tannic acid, used in the tanning industry. Telegraph and telephone companies depend most largely upon this tree for their stock of poles. The railroad companies are largely dependent upon it for their best railroad ties. The nuts produce no inconsiderable amount of valuable product. Many thousands of men are employed in the industries depending upon the saving of the wild chestnut tree, and many other thousands of real estate owners will find their land values seriously depleted should the tree be ultimately destroyed.

Two great facts to be borne in mind are: First, that the plague is with us and it must be reckoned with; and, second, that harmonious action and complete cooperation among all the interests involved, as well as the governments of the various States, can and will be the only means of checking this disease, if it can be checked at all. We are not so much concerned with its origin as we are with its presence and effects. While its botanical history and pathology are of importance, the real thing is preparedness to repel the invader, using every means known to science and practical experience.

I submit this statement as an aid to Congress in the consideration of the bill now before the Committee on Agriculture. It is a strong argument in favor of some such measure, but a still stronger argument may be found in the appalling estimate that this insidious chestnut-bark disease, up to 1911, had destroyed chestnut-tree property valued at no less than $25,000,000.

VIEWS OF REPRESENTATIVE BODIES.

So far as the history of this tree disease is known, it appears to have originated in the vicinity of New York City in 1904.

Since that time it has spread over at least 10 States and is still spreading. It has not only cut down the beautiful and umbrageous shade trees in public parks and upon large estates, but with equal cruelty it has destroyed the wild forest timber, to which even the schoolboys resort for health and sport in autumn time. That the chestnut tree, apart from the timber in it, is also a source of revenue to the farmer and to the nut gatherer is not to be disputed.

But most significant is the attitude upon this question taken by recognized associations of agriculturists and foresters, who fear the consequences of further delay in securing Government cooperation to properly combat this epidemic of the tree.

The House should understand how some of these authorities stand upon this question, and to that end I submit herewith resolutions of the American Forestry Association, the Pennsylvania Forestry Association, the Pennsylvania State Board of Agriculture, the Commission for the Investigation and Control of the Chestnut Tree Blight in Pennsylvania, and the Pennsylvania State Grange:

AMERICAN FORESTRY ASSOCIATION.

Washington, D. C., January 17, 1912.

MY DEAR SIR: At the annual meeting of the American Forestry Association, held in this city on January 9, the following resolutions were passed, and, as they have a very important bearing upon the forestry interests of the United States, your careful perusal and earnest consideration of them is respectfully urged.

Very truly, yours,

P. S. RIDSDALE,
Executive Secretary.

Whereas a virulent fungous disease known as the chestnut-tree blight has already infected a large portion of the region wherein the wild chestnut tree is a native, and threatens the destruction of this valuable timber tree throughout its range in the United States; and
Whereas the great body of wild chestnut in the New England States, in New York, New Jersey, Pennsylvania, and Maryland has been reached by this infection, and vigorous efforts are required to prevent its further spread into the States of Delaware, Virginia, West Virginia, Ohio, Indiana, Michigan, North Carolina, South Carolina, Kentucky, Georgia, Tennessee, and Alabama; and
Whereas the States not yet reached by the infection are justly entitled to every possible help and protection which Congress and the States themselves may be able to employ in saving their chestnut timber from attack; Therefore be it

Resolved, That the American Forestry Association pledges its support in arousing the public to combat this disease.

Resolved further, That the American Forestry Association strongly urges the Members of Congress to support a bill now pending before that body appropriating $80,000 for the use of the United States Department of Agriculture, to be used in a thorough study and investigation of this tree disease, with the view of devising ways and means to combat its further spread and to subject it to possible control, and urges the executives and legislatures of the States named above to take measures to check the spread of the disease.

Resolved, That a copy of these resolutions be sent to each Member of the Senate and House of Representatives in the Congress of the United States and to the governors of the States concerned.

PENNSYLVANIA FORESTRY ASSOCIATION.

PENNSYLVANIA FORESTRY ASSOCIATION,
Philadelphia, Pa., December 20, 1911.

Hon. J. HAMPTON MOORE,
House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

SIR: I wish to call your attention to resolutions passed by the Pennsylvania Forestry Association at their annual meeting on December 11, 1911, as follows:

"Whereas the chestnut-tree blight has caused a loss to the Nation estimated at $25,000,000 and threatens the destruction of the chestnut forests of the country; and

"Whereas there is great need for further investigation into the habits, distribution, and methods of control of the chestnut-blight fungus in this and adjoining States:

Resolved, That the Pennsylvania Forestry Association strongly urges the Pennsylvania delegation in Congress to support the bill which has been introduced into both Houses appropriating $80,000 for the use of the United States Department of Agriculture in investigating the chestnut blight."

It is hoped that you will support this bill. The Commonwealth of Pennsylvania appropriated $275,000 to be used in combating this disease, and every possible means is being employed to check the further spread of the blight. This is a national problem, however, since the blight has appeared in Maryland, Virginia, West Virginia, New York, and most of the New England States, and the assistance and cooperation of the National Government would be most acceptable.

Very respectfully,

F. L. BITLER,
Recording Secretary.

PENNSYLVANIA STATE BOARD OF AGRICULTURE.

PENNSYLVANIA DEPARTMENT OF AGRICULTURE,
Harrisburg, February 23, 1912.

Hon. J. HAMPTON MOORE,
House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR SIR: Please find below copy of preamble and resolutions adopted by the Pennsylvania State Board of Agriculture at its regular meeting recently held in this city.

Very truly, yours,

N. B. CRITCHFIELD,
Secretary Pennsylvania State Board of Agriculture.

Whereas a destructive fungous disease known as the chestnut-tree blight has appeared in many counties of Pennsylvania, causing a serious loss to timber owners and taxpayers; and
Whereas the blight threatens the entire destruction of this valuable native species of tree in Pennsylvania and adjoining States if not checked and eradicated: Therefore be it

Resolved, That the Pennsylvania State Board of Agriculture hereby pledges its earnest and active cooperation with the Pennsylvania Chestnut Tree Blight Commission in the efforts of that commission to control and eradicate this new enemy of our forests, recommending that each member of this board assist so far as practicable in promoting public interest in the subject, that the work of the commission may be advanced as rapidly as possible throughout the affected areas of the Commonwealth; be it further

Resolved, That the bill introduced into Congress appropriating $80,000 for the use of the United States Department of Agriculture in similar work in the various States where the chestnut-tree bark disease has appeared is recognized as a worthy and deserving measure, and the Pennsylvania delegation in Congress is respectfully urged to give it their united support.

TREE BLIGHT COMMISSION.

PHILADELPHIA, February 7, 1912.

Hon. J. HAMPTON MOORE,
House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

DEAR MR. MOORE: A copy of the preamble and resolutions relating to the chestnut-tree blight, which were unanimously adopted at the annual meeting of the Pennsylvania State Board of Agriculture held at Harrisburg, is herewith respectfully submitted.

The legislative committee of the same organization also made the following recommendation:

"We favor all active efforts toward the suppression of what is known as the chestnut-tree blight, which is attacking the chestnut timber in various parts of the State. We indorse and hope for the passage of the bill now before Congress appropriating $80,000 for the aid of this very important work."

Very respectfully,

OLIVER D. SCHOCK,
Assistant to the Executive Officer.

PENNSYLVANIA STATE GRANGE.

PHILADELPHIA, January 4, 1912.

Hon. J. HAMPTON MOORE,
Member of Congress, Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR: The Pennsylvania State Grange at the annual meeting recently held at Scranton, Pa., adopted the following preamble and resolutions by a unanimous vote. Nearly 2,000 delegates representing over 65,000 members of the grange were present.

"Whereas a virulent fungous disease, known as the chestnut-tree blight, is attacking the native chestnut tree in this State, and if not checked threatens destruction to this valuable species of tree; and

"Whereas many of the landowners in Pennsylvania, members of the grange, will be disastrously affected if the progress of this disease continues unabated: Therefore be it

Resolved, That the Pennsylvania State Grange indorses the object of the work of the Pennsylvania Chestnut Tree Blight Commission in its efforts to eradicate this disease, and pledges its support, recommending that all Pomona and subordinate granges assist in promoting public interest therein, to the end that the efforts of this commission may not be hindered or impeded.

Resolved, That the bill pending before Congress appropriating $80,000 for similar work, for the use of the United States Department of Agriculture, is recognized as a worthy measure, and the Pennsylvania delegation in Congress are respectfully and earnestly urged to give it their united support."

Respectfully submitted.

S. B. DETWILER, Executive Officer.

NOT A ONE-STATE QUESTION.

In submitting to the House these evidences of the popular will in relation to the chestnut tree blight, I commend most heartily the action of the State of Pennsylvania in doing all that rests in the power of one State to do to correct a national annoyance. It does not lie in the mouth of anyone to say that this movement to obtain national cooperation is solely in the interest of Pennsylvania. New York, Massachusetts, Rhode Island, Connecticut, New Jersey, Delaware, Maryland, and Virginia are already deeply concerned in this problem. States farther south and farther west may yet be and probably will be, despite Pennsylvania's activity, unless the Government aids in suppressing the disease when it passes out of the Keystone State. While Government aid is annually appropriated for the maintenance of forest reserves in many of our sister States, Pennsylvania has gradually been building up at her own expense a forest reserve which now reaches the vast proportions of a million acres. The Government has done nothing to further this great enterprise, which is of some little advantage to the Government if forest reserves maintained by the Government in other States are of advantage to the Government. And it is also fair to say that while there is now arising an agitation which promises to bring up to the Federal Government the question of constructing good roads within the borders of the various States, Pennsylvania has taken care of her own roads and is now embarking upon an enterprise of road building and road improvement which contemplates the expenditure of $50,000,000. In this matter of the chestnut blight Pennsylvania has provided $275,000 to take care of her own investigations within the borders of the State, but the result of those investigations and whatever else may be put forth to check the chestnut blight will be of equal advantage to other States as it will be to Pennsylvania. But Pennsylvania can not go beyond the borders of the State where the chestnut blight has already gone, and hence the cooperation of all the States may not be secured with that harmony of direction and authority which rests in the Federal Government. It is, therefore, both logical and proper that the Federal Government should step in, as proposed in the bill now before the Agricultural Committee, and assume that general jurisdiction in the premises which will safeguard all the States. In this the Federal authorities will have the cheerful and substantial cooperation of Pennsylvania.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the pro forma amendment will be withdrawn, and the Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Total for Bureau of Plant Industry, $2,089,900.

[Mr. FOWLER addressed the committee. See Appendix.]

The Clerk read as follows:

General expenses, Forest Service: To enable the Secretary of Agriculture to experiment and to make and continue investigations and report on forestry, national forests, forest fires, and lumbering, but no part of this appropriation shall be used for any experiment or test made outside the jurisdiction of the United States; to advise the owners of woodlands as to the proper care of the same; to investigate and test American timber and timber trees and their uses, and methods for the preservative treatment of timber; to seek, through investigations and the planting of native and foreign species, suitable trees for the treeless regions; to erect necessary buildings: Provided, That the cost of any building erected shall not exceed $650; to pay all expenses necessary to protect, administer, and improve the national forests; to ascertain the natural conditions upon and utilize the national forests; and the Secretary of Agriculture may, in his discretion, permit timber and other forest products cut or removed from the national forests, except the Black Hills and Harney National Forests in South Dakota, to be exported from the State, Territory, or the District of Alaska in which said forests are respectively situated: Provided, That the exportation of dead and insect-infested timber only from said Black Hills and Harney National Forests shall be allowed until such time as the Forester shall certify that the ravages of the destructive insects in said forests are practically checked, but in no case after July 1, 1914; to transport and care for fish and game supplied to stock the national forests or the waters therein; to employ agents, clerks, assistants, and other labor required in practical forestry and in the administration of national forests, in the city of Washington and elsewhere; to collate, digest, report, and illustrate the results of experiments and investigations made by the Forest Service; to purchase law books, to an amount not exceeding $500, necessary supplies, apparatus, and office fixtures, and technical books and technical journals for officers of the Forest Service stationed outside of Washington; to pay freight, express, telephone, and telegraph charges; for electric light and power, fuel, gas, ice, washing towels, and official traveling and other necessary expenses, including traveling expenses for legal and fiscal officers while performing Forest Service work; and for rent outside of the District of Columbia, as follows:

Mr. MARTIN of South Dakota and Mr. MONDELL rose.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. Mr. Chairman, I would like to have the attention of the chairman of the Committee on Agriculture for a moment. Formerly this item of general expenses was a lump sum. In the present bill it is distributed among the forest reserves. I think that distribution an excellent one, but it seems to me the item is scarcely in proper form now. This is for the "general expenses of the Forest Service," I assume, in the forest reserves. It is divided up pro rata among the reserves, a certain amount to each reserve. Therefore there should be nothing under this head that does not relate to the Forest Service connected with the forest reserves. I call the gentleman's attention to the words on page 30, lines 9 and 10:

To advise the owners of woodlands as to the proper care of the same.

Now, that is an expenditure, as I understand it, outside of the forest reserves—an entirely proper expenditure, I grant you, but, it seems to me, that ought not to be carried in this item and divided up among the forest reserves. The way in which the bill is drawn, is it expected that the department must divide up the money and charge to each forest reserve of the country a portion of the amount it intends to expend to advise the owners of woodlands with reference to the care of the same?

Mr. LAMB. The money they use under that comes from the general expenses, and there is something besides that—to investigate and test timber and timber trees and their uses. It comes in under the appropriation of general expenditures for silviculture and other purposes.

Mr. MONDELL. I was going to call attention to the fact that there is a duplication—that these items the chairman now refers to are items which carry an appropriation.

Mr. LAMB. That is a specific appropriation; but they are bound to name what they do with their money, and so they explain what this money is used for.

Mr. MONDELL. It seems to me very confusing that there should be any language in this paragraph for general expenses that does not refer to expenditures on the forest reserves.

Mr. MANN. You can not put anything else in.

Mr. MONDELL. But there is language there that does not refer to the forest reserves at all.

Mr. LAMB. There are projects in here that we have contended did not pertain to the forest reserves in these general appropriations, namely, the testing of wood, and so forth.

Mr. MANN. That does not come under this item.

Mr. LAMB. I know it does not, but this refers to it.

Mr. MANN. Let us see, though. The gentleman takes exception to—

To advise the owners of woodlands as to the proper care of the same.

Mr. MONDELL. I do not take exception.

Mr. MANN. As to its being in this place. Are there not forest reserves where there are owners of lands that have some woodland interests in the forest reserves?

Mr. MONDELL. That may be true in a limited way, but I do not think that is what this item is intended to cover.

Mr. MANN. I think so.

Mr. MONDELL. This was the language of the bill before there was a division in appropriations for reserves, and I remember very well when that particular language was inserted in the bill; and it was not intended to cover any work within the boundaries of the forest reserves; but in the modification of the bill under the new plan they have failed to take that particular language out of it. There is more that should not be in this paragraph.

Mr. MANN. But they can not expend any of that money unless by the transfer of 10 per cent of this money that is appropriated for that purpose outside of the forest reserves.

Mr. MONDELL. I do not know of any other way they can get at it with the language as it is, because if the gentleman will turn to the remaining paragraphs he will find nothing that authorizes just that kind of work.

Mr. MANN. There is no appropriation under this paragraph just read at all. It is preliminary. The appropriation comes next, as follows:

For salaries and field and station expenses, including the maintenance of nurseries, collecting seeds, and planting, necessary for the use, maintenance, improvement, and protection of the national forests named below.

That is all they can use this appropriation for.

Mr. MONDELL. It seems to me, then, that this is all surplusage. It does not any of it belong in here if that is the fact.

Mr. MANN. This is a preface to the whole thing.

Mr. MONDELL. It seems to be all unnecessary. I want to call attention to the fact that over here—

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I ask that the gentleman have five minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. MONDELL. In lines 11, 12, and 13, on page 31, it reads:

To collate, digest, report, and illustrate the results of experiments and investigations made by the Forest Service.

Then I call attention to the paragraph over here on page 47, where the same language is used. It seems to me that appropriation ought to be all in one place.

Mr. MANN. I think the gentleman is a little confused about this, as I was. I just stated that that was confined to the appropriation for the national forests, but the gentleman will see now, if he looks at the bill, at first there is the paragraph "General expenses, Forest Service," with no appropriation, and "as follows." Following "as follows" comes, first, the provision for the appropriation for different forest reserves complete by itself. Following that comes the appropriation for fighting forest fires complete by itself. Following that is another paragraph, for maintenance, library supplies, and so forth. Following that is the investigation of methods for wood distillation, and so forth. All of those are subsidiary to this first paragraph for "General expenses, Forest Service."

Mr. LEVER. Let me say to the gentleman from Illinois, that on page 46, beginning with line 20, there is the item:

For silvicultural, dendrological, and other experiments and investigations, independently or in cooperation with other branches of the Federal Government, with States, and with individuals, to determine the best methods for the conservative management of forests and forest lands.

And so on. That is the proposition that the gentleman from Wyoming is talking on, and the other is preliminary to it.

Mr. MANN. Except it authorizes books and telephone service, and things of that kind.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Chairman, I am not yet convinced that, in the interests of clarity in the appropriation bill, this entire paragraph should not be entirely revamped or dropped out. It can not, certainly, be held that this paragraph, "General expenses, Forest Service," covers all of the purposes for which appropriations are made in the succeeding paragraphs. That is very clear. For instance, there are in the succeeding paragraph items for the purchase and maintenance of necessary field, office, and laboratory supplies and for investigations of methods of wood distillation.

They do not come under that general language also—"for experiments and investigations of range conditions." Now, either that preface ought to contain all of the subject matter that is treated of later under the paragraphs in which the appropriations are made, or else it should be omitted altogether.

Mr. LAMB. Mr. Chairman, I claim that it would not affect the general result a particle. It is merely general language; that is all.

Mr. MONDELL. I think it is confusing language, if the gentleman will permit me to say so.

Mr. LAMB. We have explained it, and it seems that the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] has caught on to the general idea of arrangement. It is just a statement of facts.

Mr. MONDELL. It is only a partial statement of facts. If you are going to have only a partial statement of facts, you should not have any.

Mr. LAMB. It is a complete one when you come to consider the other appropriations.

Mr. MONDELL. I submit that the gentleman will admit it is not a very complete expression in an appropriation bill. The gentleman is not responsible for it, however, because I think he inherited it.

Mr. LEVER. Yes; it has been in the bill for years.

Mr. MONDELL. Inasmuch as the gentleman will have charge of the bill next year, I think it should be improved.

Mr. LEVER. I think every proposition, however, is covered by this general language. That follows this specific appropriation. I am satisfied of that.

Mr. BOOHER. I would like to ask the committee or somebody else in the House what the revenue derived was last year from the national forests?

Mr. LAMB. I can give it to the gentleman right now. Or would the gentleman prefer to wait until we reach the proper paragraph?

Mr. BOOHER. I would like to have the information now, so as to prepare some figures.

Mr. LEVER. I can give the information to the gentleman from Missouri right now. That question was asked, and Mr. Graves, the Forester, answering, said, in substance, that the bureau had received $1,014,769.84 from the timber sales, $925,490.38 from grazing, and the balance, $76,645.93, from various special uses, making a total from the forests for the year 1910 of $2,026,906.15.

Mr. LAMB. If the gentleman will examine my remarks, delivered when I introduced this bill, he will find that I elaborated this whole thing and explained it.

Mr. BOOHER. I desire here to call the attention of the committee to the fact of the rapidly increasing expenses of the Forest Service.

Mr. LAMB. But we are reducing it.

Mr. BOOHER. In the year 1907 the total appropriation for this service was $1,193,000. This bill carries for the same service $5,115,000. One-third of all the appropriation carried by this bill for the great Department of Agriculture is swallowed up in this Forest Service.

Mr. LAMB. That is a fact. But we have reduced the appropriation this year, and the receipts from the sales of timber and grazing permits will be greater each year.

Mr. BOOHER. I want to call the attention of the committee to the fact that in 1907 the Littlefield committee, as it was known, in charge of the expenditures in the Department of Agriculture, investigated the Forestry Service, and Mr. Pinchot, who was then at the head of the Forestry Bureau, made the statement that he had promised the Committee on Agriculture, when the Forest Service was turned over to the Department of Agriculture, that in five years he would make that bureau self-supporting. That year, 1907, the bill for the Department of Agriculture carried only $1,193,000, as I have stated, for the Forestry Service. He said, "I have three years yet of that time remaining in which to make my promise good." Mr. Pinchot is now out of office, and during every year that he remained in office after that statement there was a very rapid increase in the expenditures in that bureau until now, instead of being self-supporting, there is a deficit in that department of $3,000,000. This is called "scientific conservation." It may be "scientific conservation," but it is not common-sense conservation.

Mr. LEVER. Mr. Chairman, will my friend from Missouri yield?

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Missouri yield to the gentleman from South Carolina?

Mr. BOOHER. Yes.

Mr. LEVER. On that very proposition, what the gentleman states is entirely true. The appropriations for this bureau have grown by leaps and bounds, very much faster than many of us desire them to grow. But as to whether or not in the future these forests shall be made self-sustaining, the Forester was questioned by myself, and was asked this question:

Mr. LEVER. Do you have in mind the policy of making the receipts from the national forests ultimately meet the expenses of administration of the forests?

Mr. GRAVES. Yes, sir. If we are able to continue at that rate—and there is no reason why we should not—receipts from all sources will, without question, pay for administration. But I do not want to make any assurances as to just when it will be completed, because I can not tell what the lumber market will do. If there should be a boost in the lumber market, say, next year, then perhaps by 1914 we could make $3,000,000 from timber sales. But I do not think there will be that increase in the market.

Elsewhere in the hearing this additional information was elicited:

Mr. TALCOTT. I asked you about the receipts.

Mr. GRAVES. The receipts for the last year are $2,026,906.15.

The CHAIRMAN. You have covered that back into the Treasury?

Mr. GRAVES. All of that goes into the Treasury.

Mr. HANNA. From what was that received, Mr. Graves?

Mr. GRAVES. $1,014,769.84 was received from timber sales, $935,490.38 from grazing, and the balance, $76,645.93, for various special uses.

Mr. MAGUIRE. Did you receive any from water-power sites?

Mr. GRAVES. There is a small return from water powers.

The CHAIRMAN. You had last year a very interesting table in the hearings, showing these receipts, where they came from, etc.

Mr. GRAVES. I will incorporate the receipts by States. I have all the data. They were as follows:

Gross receipts, 1911.
Arizona	$223,980.81
Arkansas	14,171.49
California	220,825.33
Colorado	213,733.30
Florida	6,425.62
Idaho	222,006.43
Kansas	3,817.80
Michigan	17.00
Minnesota	5,238.22
Montana	313,103.05
Nebraska	12,758.25
Nevada	51,066.05
New Mexico	134,300.16
North Dakota	285.65
Oklahoma	1,094.70
Oregon	148,512.71
South Dakota	56,954.38
Utah	140,148.93
Washington	97,743.45
Wyoming	120,809.88
Alaska	39,903.94
Total	2,026,906.15

So that what I had desired to say to the gentleman from Missouri was that the committee itself have in mind the very difficulty under which the gentleman is laboring, and we are trying to press the service as much as we can to make the receipts larger and the expenditures less.

Mr. BOOHER. And yet they are constantly increasing their force which they have out there in protecting these forests. You hope they are going to decrease the expenses. How are they going to decrease the expenses when they are constantly augmenting the force?

Mr. LEVER. On the contrary, the Forester himself, in his own statement, says that during the past year they have reduced the clerical force and the supervisory force in the national forests 33 per cent, and the Committee on Agriculture have reduced it further.

Mr. BOOHER. I am glad somebody is reducing some expenses in connection with the conservation policy of the Government. If there is one bureau in the Agricultural Department that ought to be looked after it is the Forestry Service.

Mr. LEVER. We have tried hard to look after it.

Mr. LAMB. We did reduce the expenses.

Mr. BOOHER. I trust sometime or other they will make it self-supporting. The Chief Forester, Mr. Graves, was very careful in his language to say that he could not fix that time. If they go on as they have, neither he nor any other man can tell when the service will be self-supporting. The committee is to be congratulated on the good work done in preparing this bill. The estimate of the department for the fiscal year was $17,240,262. The bill carries $15,836,976, a difference between the estimate and the amount appropriated of $1,430,516, and of this decrease $1,183,370 was taken from the estimate of the Forestry Service. The committee did well, and I sincerely hope that when the next bill is prepared the pruning knife will again be used, and used again and again until the Forest Service is made self-sustaining.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. The gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. LEVER] stated that there had been a very large reduction in the clerical force. Looking on page 27 of the bill, in one place there is an increase of 8 clerks, in another of 9, and in another of 34.

Mr. LEVER. Let me say to my friend from New York that I know the difficulty under which he is laboring. The committee have experienced the very same difficulty, and that is to make some kind of distinction here between the transfers from the lump-sum fund to the statutory roll and the transfers from the statutory roll to the lump-sum fund.

Under an amendment put upon this bill in the Senate a year ago it was necessary that all of these bureaus of this department should transfer their clerical force from the lump-sum fund to the statutory fund, and that accounts for this large increase.

Mr. FITZGERALD. That is done every year, is it not?

Mr. LEVER. Yes.

Mr. LAMB. Yes.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Why not put in a prohibition against employing clerks out of the lump appropriation?

Mr. LEVER. Under the law it is necessary for all clerks to be transferred from the lump-sum fund, and these clerks were under the lump-sum fund before this act was passed. Under the law now they must be transferred to the statutory roll, and in the future these bureaus will not have the right to employ clerks under the lump-sum fund, as I understand.

Mr. LAMB. The lump-sum fund is reduced accordingly each time.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I want to know whether the statute prohibits the employment of clerks out of the lump appropriation now?

Mr. LEVER. The agricultural appropriation bill, passed on May 26, 1910, contains this provision:

The Secretary of Agriculture, for the fiscal year 1912 and annually thereafter, shall transmit to the Secretary of the Treasury, for submission to Congress in the Book of Estimates, detailed estimates for all executive officers, clerks, and employees below the grade of clerk, indicating the salary or compensation of each, necessary to be employed by the various bureaus, offices, and divisions of the Department of Agriculture.

That act seems to apply only to the Agricultural Department, and on account of that act the statutory roll has been in this bill very largely increased, because the bureau chiefs and the entire Agricultural Department have been very careful in trying to follow the letter and the spirit of the law.

Mr. FITZGERALD. But there is nothing in that provision which prohibits the employment of clerks out of the lump appropriations.

Mr. LEVER. I think it does by indirection.

Mr. FITZGERALD. It may by indirection, but the fact is that each year since that was enacted the committee have been requested to increase the number of clerks, because they were, at the time the request was made, being paid out of the lump appropriations.

Before this bill is completed I shall offer such an amendment to prohibit the employment of clerks and other officials of the grades mentioned out of lump-sum appropriations carried in the bill. This department should not be different from any other department of the Government; it should submit detailed estimates to Congress—

Mr. LEVER. Which it does.

Mr. FITZGERALD (continuing). And Congress should determine the extent of the service, and the department should be confined to it. Under this provision, and under the wording of a number of these appropriations, the department still has the power to employ clerks and personal services in addition to those specifically appropriated for in the bill, pay them out of lump appropriations, and next year the committee will receive estimates and give as a reason for the increase of clerks the fact that the clerks are at the time paid out of lump appropriations.

Mr. LEVER. I do not think that the Committee on Agriculture would have any objection to the amendment suggested by the gentleman from New York, but as a matter of fact—and I am not much of a lawyer—I confess that the law now on the subject is entirely full enough to cover the very proposition the gentleman has in mind.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I think the gentleman from South Carolina will find, if he investigates, that since the enactment of that provision clerks and other service have been employed and paid out of lump appropriations.

Mr. LEVER. My understanding is that out of the lump-sum appropriation only experts, scientists, and men covered under the designation of scientists are paid out of the lump-sum fund.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I do not question the good faith of the gentleman from South Carolina, but there should be no question about the intent of Congress.

Mr. HAUGEN. If the gentleman will allow me, the gentleman from New York is aware of the fact that it is necessary for the department to employ clerks temporarily, and sometimes permanently, and it is difficult to estimate in advance the number of clerks that will be required; and therefore it is necessary to make the appropriation in this way.

[The time of Mr. FITZGERALD having expired, by unanimous consent he was given five minutes more.]

Mr. FITZGERALD. It is not a sufficient excuse to give a lump-sum appropriation with blanket authority to employ personal services. Every department of the Government would prefer such an appropriation. There is no particular difficulty about compelling detailed estimates to be submitted, and it is the only proper way to legislate for such personal services.

For instance, this situation has happened, and it shows how easy it is for the department to accommodate itself to the change. In the past three or four years more than 500 clerical positions have been abolished in the Treasury Department, and yet not a single one of the employees was dropped from the service; because of vacancies, occurring for one reason or another, they were absorbed in the service. Every department of the Government to-day, including the Treasury Department, is overloaded with clerical service. It can all easily be reduced without impairing the efficiency of the service.

Mr. LAMB. That does not apply to the Forestry Service.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I think it does.

Mr. LAMB. We have reduced the clerical service 55 in one place, and in several other places smaller reductions have been made.

Mr. FITZGERALD. If the gentlemen were able to make the exhaustive investigation that should be made, and would probably have been made if it were not for the other matters that crowd upon them in this bill, the Agricultural Committee could get the information necessary and could find out that it could easily reduce the clerical service in the Forestry Department 10 or 20 per cent and improve its efficiency.

Mr. LAMB. That would be a wonderful achievement.

Mr. FITZGERALD. No; it would not be a remarkable achievement. The statement was made before the Committee on Appropriations that one of these departments of the Government was so overloaded with clerical help that Congress could reduce the clerical service next year 10 per cent and annually thereafter 5 per cent until they got to a normal basis.

Mr. LAMB. That does not apply to the Agricultural Department.

Mr. FITZGERALD. With that statement before the committee every bureau head came before the committee insisting that not only would it not be possible to reduce the clerical force, but claimed, in some instances, that additional help was requested.

Mr. HAY. Will the gentleman allow me to ask him, Was the person who made that statement informed as to the needs of the department?

Mr. FITZGERALD. I think he should be informed about it.

Mr. HAY. But was he?

Mr. FITZGERALD. I assume that he was. The statement was made by the Chief of the General Staff, who is the close, confidential, and intimate adviser of the Secretary of War regarding all military matters, including departmental matters. So thorough and searching, apparently, has been the inquiry made by him that he volunteered the information to the Committee on Expenditures in the War Department that the department service here was overloaded. I think the committee will make such recommendations as will effectually relieve that situation. I have pointed out that in the Treasury Department over 500 positions have been abolished, and yet every employee was retained in the service by being absorbed into positions then existing without creating new positions.

The result has been to make more efficient the service being performed by the department. I am not criticizing the gentleman—

Mr. LAMB. Oh, I know the gentleman is not, and I appreciate what he has said.

Mr. FITZGERALD. But I believe the recommendation that came from this committee while the gentleman served upon it was a wise one—to require detailed estimates and to provide the force required; and I also believe that as a matter of safety there should be no misunderstanding, but there should be an express prohibition against the employment of services of the character indicated in the provision read by the gentleman from South Carolina out of a lump-sum appropriation.

Mr. LEVER. Let me call the gentleman's attention to this situation, which may happen. We have increased in this bill an appropriation in one item something over $50,000. The bill has left the Committee on Agriculture, and it will leave the House, and it will go to the Senate. It is necessary in the administration and disbursement of that $50,000 item which we put on on the floor of the House, and which could not be estimated for by the department, that clerical assistance be had. How would the gentleman provide for that if his suggested amendment should be acted on favorably by the committee?

Mr. FITZGERALD. I do not believe that an increase of $50,000 for any line of work in this department should necessitate the employment of a single extra clerk. The service to be performed is of an expert character and not of a clerical character.

Mr. LAMB. I want to say to the gentleman from New York that these hearings will show the fact that we interrogated the Chief of the Bureau of Forestry along this line, and after careful consideration we struck out from 50 to 75 of these employees. The very suggestion that the gentleman makes would prevent these people from employing temporary employees to do temporary work. We asked them about that very point, and they said it was in the interest of economy that you had to employ for a few days or a month various men whom they must pay from the lump sum.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Yes; and that is the excuse that is given at the end of the fiscal year for transferring them to the statutory roll. On page 27 of the bill I attempted to find out what the net reduction of clerks in the Forestry Service was, as accomplished by the committee. I found that on line 22 last year there were 17 clerks at $1,020 each. The estimate for this year was 51 clerks at $1,020 each, apparently an increase of 34 clerks at $1,020 each; yet I found that there had been omitted 34 clerks at $1,000.

Mr. LAMB. That is right.

Mr. FITZGERALD. So that it merely meant, instead of an increase or decrease in the number of clerks, a very slight increase in the compensation of 34 clerks.

Mr. LAMB. The gentleman has made the explanation that I intended to make myself.

Mr. FITZGERALD. So that it is very difficult to determine what has actually been done.

Mr. LAMB. I know it is.

Mr. FITZGERALD. On line 15, last year there were 17 clerks at $1,600 each. In this bill there are 25. In line 17 there were 8 clerks at $1,400 each, and in this bill there are 17, a net increase of 15 clerks. Then there were omitted 4 at $1,080 and 7 at $1,020, so that 11 of these apparently new clerks unquestionably are increases of compensation.

Mr. LAMB. That is right. They are small increases. When you transfer 1,900 men from the lump sum to the statutory roll, only Congress can make the increase, and we are bound to pass upon them.

Mr. FITZGERALD. How many clerks in this bill are transferred from the lump appropriation?

Mr. LAMB. About 1,984.

Mr. FITZGERALD. But in the provision read by the gentleman from South Carolina it was his impression that no clerks could be employed from the lump appropriations.

Mr. LEVER. This act would be effective only in this bill.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Oh, no; it was effective during the current year.

Mr. LEVER. This is the first bill that has been drawn under that act.

Mr. FITZGERALD. The law requires detailed estimates for the fiscal years 1912 and 1913, and annually thereafter, and yet after 1912 it is found they have over 1,900 clerks still employed out of the lump-sum appropriations, and unless some prohibition is placed in this bill next year there will be almost as many to be transferred.

Mr. LAMB. I think the gentleman is mistaken.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. MARTIN of South Dakota. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

After line 16, page 30, insert: "And provided further, That no part of the appropriation made by this act shall be used for the construction, repair, maintenance, or use of buildings or improvements made for forest-ranger stations within the inclosed fields of bona fide homestead settlers who have established residences upon homestead lands prior to the date of the establishment of the forest reservation in which the homestead lands are situated."

Mr. LAMB. Mr. Chairman, I reserve a point of order. I did not quite catch the gentleman's amendment. Where does that come?

Mr. MARTIN of South Dakota. Mr. Chairman, it comes on page 30, at the end of line 16. I submitted the amendment to the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. LEVER], and I think the committee will have no objection to it. However, if desired, I will explain the subject more fully.

Mr. MANN. Will the gentleman permit a question?

Mr. MARTIN of South Dakota. I will.

Mr. MANN. I suppose the gentleman's purpose is to keep the Forest Service from locating rangers' buildings upon property which had been taken by somebody else against that person's wish?

Mr. MARTIN of South Dakota. Yes.

Mr. MANN. But suppose it is agreeable to all parties, and not only that but extremely convenient to have the buildings erected upon such property. What is the objection?

Mr. MARTIN of South Dakota. There will be no objection to adding to this proposed amendment an addition of that character, say, for instance, using the words "without the consent of the homesteader."

Mr. LEVER. Mr. Chairman, I suggest the gentleman add that provision.

Mr. MARTIN of South Dakota. Mr. Chairman, I will modify my amendment, and add to the end of it the additional words "without the consent of the homesteader."

Mr. McLAUGHLIN. Mr. Chairman, I would like to ask the gentleman a question.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from South Dakota asks unanimous consent to modify his amendment. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. McLAUGHLIN. As I heard the amendment offered by the gentleman from South Dakota, it was to forbid the erection of a building upon any homestead within the reservation that was a homestead at the time the reservation was established?

Mr. MARTIN of South Dakota. Yes.

Mr. McLAUGHLIN. Well, I suppose the gentleman knows that all the time, continually, applications are made for the locations of homesteads within a forest reservation, and those applications are acceded to, and the entryman proves up and receives a patent within the forest reservation. Should not his amendment be drawn in such a way as to forbid the erection of a building upon any homestead, whether it was a homestead at the time the reservation was established or whether it became a homestead later?

Mr. MARTIN of South Dakota. I think there is much less likely to be any controversy or difficulty from this class of cases from the fact the listing of that class of homesteads is first done by the Agriculture Department itself, and the instances of hardship or controversy that have come to my attention have been cases where the homesteader was already upon his lands and had them inclosed before the establishment of the reserve; and in many instances the rangers find it much to their convenience to appropriate a part of the homestead, cultivated fields, and meadowlands in connection with the establishment of the rangers' stations, and the purpose of this amendment is to avoid a controversy of that kind.

Mr. LAMB. If my colleague on the committee and the gentleman from South Dakota will permit, let me say I asked this very question, and I stated to the Forester that this was one of the criticisms made here. They said the law prohibited the expenditure of more than $650 on any one building, and it is impossible to put a too elaborate house on any national forest for this price. And now the Forester says:

Furthermore, houses for rangers to live in are built only in those districts where it is impracticable for the ranger to provide himself with living quarters. The exigencies of the work demand that many of the rangers be stationed in outlying districts away from towns or other settlements where they could reasonably be expected to purchase or rent houses themselves. If the Forest Service did not build houses in which they could live with their families it would be impossible to get anybody to stay on the job.

Mr. MARTIN of South Dakota. I am not seeking at all to put a limitation on the use of the buildings or the making of buildings for rangers' stations, but this amendment prohibits the going into inclosed fields and upon homesteads established before the coming of the Forest Service for the purpose of establishing stations. I think it is much better and it will put the settlers who are there established in the position of co-operating heartily with the service in the carrying on of the general purposes of the service.

Mr. LAMB. With that statement we will not object to the amendment.

Mr. LEVER. I understand the gentleman has provided in his amendment the words "without the consent of the homesteader."

Mr. MARTIN of South Dakota. Yes.

Mr. LAMB. Mr. Chairman, I ask for a vote.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Virginia reserved the point of order. Does the gentleman withdraw the point of order?

Mr. LAMB. Yes.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is upon the amendment of the gentleman from South Dakota.

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

Angeles National Forest, Cal., $13,577.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. I notice in a very large portion of the items relating to the specific national forests the amount of the appropriation is considerably reduced. Where that is done, is it for the purpose of appropriating a smaller amount of money for the use of the forests, or has there been some other manipulation of the situation?

Mr. LAMB. We asked the Chief of the Bureau of Forestry on that point, and he said in some cases they had to be reduced and in others they were added to, and this arrangement of his we did not disturb at all.

Mr. MANN. This is the estimate?

Mr. LAMB. Yes.

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. Mr. Chairman, I would like to ask the chairman of the committee if he has any assurances from the Forestry Service that they are not increasing in some ways rather than diminishing the hardships and exactions upon the people who use these forest reserves?

Mr. LAMB. Yes, sir. They are surely reducing the exactions, as you claim, and the relations between the forest people and the surrounding citizens are more pleasant than formerly.

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. Now, wait a moment. Is it not true that for the purposes of getting more fees the Forest Service is this season increasing the charge per head for grazing stock on forest reserves above the fees of last year?

Mr. LAMB. My friend knows just as well as I do that those estimates for forest grazing are made by the Secretary of Agriculture, and that they are uniform.

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. You do not answer my question. Are not the Forest Service officials raising the fees and making it more difficult and expensive to use the Government reserves on the ranges and mountains of the West than it has been heretofore?

Mr. LAMB. I think not.

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. My information is that they are. I have recently received resolutions from stockmen's associations denouncing them for increasing the fees.

Mr. LAMB. But they have not increased the grazing permit.

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. I do not mean the permit. I mean the charge of so much per head per year for cattle eating grass on the public land.

Mr. LAMB. What I speak of and want to impress upon you is the contemplated increasing of it; and I think that possibly a small increase can be made, and then it will not reach the per cent of increase that the private owners of forestry lands demand for grazing.

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. But where is the limit? Simply because they get in a wedge here and get the right to charge people for running cattle on the public domain, like all the States in the East have had for nothing for a hundred years—

Mr. LAMB. But you can not have the old common law now, my brother, and turn your cattle out to graze other people's lands.

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. The common law? Now that you have eaten your cake you want to divide ours with us, do you not? You have had a free range in the building up of your State, every one of you, and now you are imposing a tax on us.

Mr. LAMB. You can not talk that way to a man whose State gave away sufficient territory to make a number of States.

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. You gave away territory in order to have the country settled and built up. Because the Government of the United States authorized this Forest Service to charge a small fee, and we accepted it because we had to do so, is that any reason for increasing it every year?

Mr. LAMB. Let me answer your question now from the record. On national forests it is 3.9 cents and for private individuals 11 cents.

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. I do not care what the rate of pasturage is on privately owned lands.

Mr. LAMB. You said that we were increasing your fees for grazing, and I want to show you that the charges for grazing by private owners is twice and often three times greater than the charges on national forests.

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. Are you going to put as much charge on the public domain as you do on blue-grass and clover fields in the Eastern or Middle States?

Mr. LEVER. Not at all; and the statement of Mr. Graves takes into consideration that very fact, and that on grazing land fees are charged in proportion to the amount of grazing, and on good grazing ground the fees are proportionately higher. If the gentleman wants to know, let me read from the testimony.

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. Whose testimony?

Mr. LEVER. The testimony of the Forester, Mr. Graves.

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. Let me ask this question: Has this committee ever taken any testimony from a living soul in the United States residing west of the Mississippi River on the forest reserves or on anything that pertains to our country? Now, answer my question. I have not heard anything about any testimony of that kind.

Mr. LAMB. I want to say to my friend that during extra sessions of Congress time and again I said to him, "Mr. TAYLOR, if you will come before our committee and explain the facts, we will be glad to hear you." I said it to the gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. FLOYD] and others whom I have noticed on this floor time and again have raised these objections. The gentleman from Colorado has nobody to blame but himself.

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. Just a moment. You asked me to prepare a statement of the conditions existing in the West and submit it to you, and I said I had prepared it and I gave it to you in the form of a statement from the governor of the State of Colorado, did I not?

Mr. LAMB. Yes; we had it.

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. Did you put it in your hearings?

Mr. LAMB. No.

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. Why did you not?

Mr. LEVER. It was printed in the RECORD.

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. I gave it to you to put in the hearings.

Mr. LEVER. It is not in the hearings. Who reads the hearings? I ask you if you have read these hearings? If you had said that you had, possibly you would not have asked all these questions which you have asked now.

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. You have not answered yet whether the Forest Service officials are going to indefinitely increase the fees for the people of the West for grazing on the public lands.

Mr. LEVER. Just in proportion as the circumstances surrounding the particular forests will justify.

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. In other words, there is no limit to the Forest Service putting the cattlemen and ranchmen out of the stock business in the West if they see fit to continue to increase the grazing fees. They have already driven some of them out of business.

Mr. LAMB. I do not so understand. The grazing fees have not been increased; but I think they can be slightly increased, and no one will be injured.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Colorado has expired.

Mr. RAKER. Mr. Chairman, I desire to amend page 32, lines 7 and 8, by striking out the words "thirteen thousand five hundred and seventy-seven dollars" and insert the words "nineteen thousand nine hundred and eighty-three dollars."

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment offered by the gentleman from California [Mr. RAKER].

The Clerk read as follows:

On page 32, lines 7 and 8, strike out the words "thirteen thousand five hundred and seventy-seven," and insert in lieu thereof the words "nineteen thousand nine hundred and eighty-three."

Mr. LAMB. Mr. Chairman—

Mr. RAKER. Will the gentleman permit me to proceed for just a few minutes? I have five minutes, and I hope to use them. I would like, in my own time, to ask the chairman of the committee if there was any hearing had upon any of these matters in regard to fixing the amounts that should be specified in any of these particular national forest reserves?

Mr. LAMB. We asked the Chief of the Forest Service what he proposed to do about this, why he increased some and decreased others, and he gave us his reasons, which to the committee were satisfactory. Does the gentleman suppose that we could go through these 159 estimates here and investigate them—

Mr. RAKER. Surely. Therefore I come here for information—

Mr. LAMB. With any knowledge that we have to bring to bear upon them? We could not do it.

Mr. RAKER. Yes. It seems peculiar that in my district there should be some seven of them cut down without one word in the record or one fact adduced before the committee. I am asking the chairman of the committee now why they cut down those that were specifically in my district?

Mr. LAMB. Because we felt that the Chief Forester knew his business.

Mr. RAKER. There is no evidence before the committee showing why that was done.

Mr. LEVER. Does the gentleman from California imagine that the Chief of this Forestry Bureau, a gentleman ambitious to make his bureau a great bureau, is going to ask for any less money in California than he needs and wants?

Mr. RAKER. Surely.

Mr. LEVER. That is a strange proposition to me.

Mr. RAKER. It is not a strange proposition. This matter was submitted to the President. They were afraid they could not get the amount of appropriations that they wanted and would be cut down in their amounts by the President, and therefore they reduced the amounts generally, and in particular in my district.

Mr. LAMB. Mr. Chairman, I feel that I ought to answer that right now. We gave them all they asked. We did not cut them.

Mr. RAKER. I am not accusing the committee of cutting them.

Mr. LAMB. The gentleman said that.

Mr. RAKER. No. I asked the committee if there was any reason why they should reduce this particular appropriation from $19,000 to $13,000. There is nothing in the record about it, and I made it my special business to investigate this matter.

Mr. LEVER. Let me say to the gentleman from California this: I had a talk yesterday with the Chief of the Forestry Bureau. I sent for him, and he came to my office to answer just such a proposition as this; and he told me that this year the expenses in one of these subdivisions here may be large on account of the business conducted in the forests, while next year the business may slack off and not be so large, and hence the expense will not be so large. Hence in his estimates he makes the reduction in accordance with the business that may be conducted within each forest. In other words, the expenses of the several subdivisions in a forest reserve must of necessity vary exactly as the business of the forest varies. For instance, a lot of cattlemen may come into a new forest, and the work in connection with the matter of permits for grazing is therefore increased. Again, a lumber company opens up in a national forest, and that involves the work of marking the trees and issuing the permits and doing all of the work that is necessary in connection with that lumber deal, and it necessarily makes a larger draft on the expenses of this particular forest. Hence they are bound to vary the estimates from time to time.

And I will say to my friend that the Committee on Agriculture could not possibly in one year, or in two years, or in four years, go out among the national forests, involving an area bigger than the New England States, New York, Pennsylvania, Delaware, Rhode Island, New Jersey, Ohio, Virginia, and West Virginia, and make an investigation covering not one year, but a dozen years, and reach any very definite idea about this thing.

We are men, and we think we are sensible men, and we are willing to face the proposition. The only thing we can do is to accept the judgment of these men who have come before the committee, who have been charged with this duty, and who are, in the very nature of things, experts upon these propositions. That is all there is to it. We have not in this bill, for a single, solitary subdivision of the national forests, interfered with the estimates of the Chief Forester. We have taken them and swallowed them absolutely whole. Perhaps we have made mistakes. Perhaps a great many of these appropriations are too large. I will not say they are. But we had to take them. We did not know. It is an enormous area. It is too big a proposition, and I am sorry that my friend did not come before the committee, or have some of his people from the West who are engaged in the cattle business, or engaged in the business of grazing sheep, or in the business of lumbering, come before this committee, if they had any complaint to make against the Forestry Service, in reference to these features.

The gentleman knows that there is not a committee of this House more willing to listen to the testimony of men who have information than is the Committee on Agriculture. And I think the gentleman from California will fully agree with me, because he has appeared before that committee and has found us quite willing to listen.

Mr. RAKER. Have I made any complaint? The gentleman does not refer to me as making any complaint, does he?

Mr. LEVER. Perhaps I should have said the gentleman from Colorado.

Mr. RAKER. I do not want you to refer to me in that way. I am taking the position that I am going to defend myself before this committee in reference to this bill before we get through with it. I asked a specific question, and the committee have been unable to answer. I know the reason why. It is because they have not the testimony in regard to the matter. I am not criticizing the committee nor the Forest Department, but I want this appropriation because it is necessary, and if you get the evidence of the department they will tell you so. They think they are compelled to do this, when, in fact, they are not. That is why I am complaining. If they are going to use over $46,000 for the forest in the Appalachian Mountains, they should put that in the bill and let it appear for what it is for and not take it from the forest that needs it. Equal treatment is what I want. It is wrong to legislate in this fashion. Let every native forest have the same rights and an appropriation large enough to properly run it.

Mr. MANN. Will the gentleman permit an interruption? If it is necessary we can get him more time.

Mr. RAKER. I yield to the gentleman.

Mr. MANN. These items in reference to the national forests have only been segregated in the last year or two?

Mr. RAKER. Yes.

Mr. MANN. And when they were segregated, everyone understood that it was impossible, to begin with, to know how much each of the forests ought to have, and that we would have to learn that in the course of time by the amounts of money that were actually expended, where enough was appropriated, or how much need they had for additional money when enough was not appropriated; and I think that largely accounts for the reduction.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from California [Mr. RAKER] has expired.

Mr. RAKER. I consented to let my time be used up because this is an important matter. The committee will admit it took no evidence on this matter. I should like an extension of five minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Unanimous consent is asked that the time of the gentleman from California be extended five minutes. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. RAKER. There was no hearing upon this matter. There was not anything before the committee to show the occasion for reducing the amount of money to be appropriated for specific national forests. That is correct, is it not?

Mr. LEVER. Here are some of the estimates furnished to the Committee on Agriculture showing the amount of money expended.

Mr. RAKER. I know. I have the Book of Estimates before me.

Mr. LEVER. There is a statement of the purpose for which the money is spent—maintenance so much, new construction so much, and so forth—and the committee have some idea of what these appropriations should be from statements of that kind. In addition to that, we have a general statement of the Forester on all these propositions.

Mr. RAKER. The committee did not take any testimony outside of this.

Mr. LEVER. Let me say to my friend that I tried to emphasize a moment ago that we had before the committee the Chief Forester—the man in charge of that work. In addition to that, we had these other facts. We had the estimates of the Secretary of Agriculture, submitted in the regular way to the Congress of the United States.

Backing up that, as we say, was the testimony of the chief in charge of this work, who said that we did not need any more money here.

Mr. RAKER. Oh, no; because I have the letter lying here. I have been investigating this matter and have gone into it myself. Gentlemen must remember that they cut down the appropriation $35,000 for the West and put it on the Appalachian chain.

Mr. LEVER. Not at all; I am afraid the gentleman from California has a deal of misinformation on this subject.

Mr. LAMB. We did no such thing.

Mr. RAKER. Did not the committee reduce the amount appropriated so that it could be used on the Appalachian chain; did you not reduce the amount $35,000?

Mr. LEVER. We did not.

Mr. RAKER. I have the letter here. If the gentleman has a record to show that they did not do it, and he says they did not—

Mr. LEVER. The only record we have is the statement we make.

Mr. RAKER. Now, Mr. Chairman, I do not want to get into any wrangle with the Committee on Agriculture.

Mr. LAMB. Then the gentleman must not make any charges, if he does not want to get into a controversy.

Mr. RAKER. I have not made any charges against the committee. I have simply stated that from my information there had been a reduction from the forestry in the West in the neighborhood of $35,000, which went to take up and provide for the Appalachian chain.

Mr. LEVER. Why does not the gentleman show the letter, and then we will know what there is to it?

Mr. RAKER. The gentleman said that the committee had not done that. I dropped it in incidentally.

Mr. LEVER. Will the gentleman show the letter?

Mr. RAKER. I am going to proceed with one case at a time.

Mr. LAMB. Let us give the gentleman from California an opportunity to state his case.

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. With the permission of the gentleman from California, I want to make one statement.

Mr. RAKER. I will yield.

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. I am not complaining of any estimate on any reserve nor of the cuts of 18 in my State, or anything of that kind. I am assuming that the committee acted right, but what I am objecting to is the disposition by the Forestry Department to raise the fees for the use of the forest reserve.

Mr. LEVER. The gentleman knows that the Committee on Agriculture has no jurisdiction over that unless you bring in a bill.

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. No; but when it gets its appropriation from this committee and when Congress is passing upon it, it seems to me that we ought to have the assurance of fair treatment.

Mr. LAMB. The Forestry Service claims that the fees are lower than they ought to be.

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. But we do not think so.

Mr. RAKER. Mr. Chairman, I can not yield further. On this one reserve they have reduced the appropriation from nineteen thousand and some odd dollars to thirteen thousand and some odd dollars. There is no reason on earth why, in this particular district, the sum should be reduced. This forest has been maintained and well conducted and has practically paid for itself, and where you find these forests that are being well conducted you ought not deduct money from them and place it on another one. If the other forest requires more give it more, but do not take it away from this one that needs it.

Mr. LAMB. Now, right there; we did not do any such thing. Mr. Graves is in charge of this matter, and you do not expect this committee to investigate one of these forest reserves to see whether it ought to be $13,000 or $18,000, because we would not be able to do it. We do not know what the situation is. Mr. Graves is supposed, with other employees, to know the situation. He goes through it carefully, and he apportions this amount of money to these various forests, and that is all there is in it.

Mr. RAKER. I am not saying a word against any man on earth, but is it possible, is it the fact that one man absolutely dominates and dictates and passes legislation? Not even the committee of the House may have the opportunity to change it, much less when the committee comes before the House the Committee of the Whole is prohibited from suggesting an amendment. And even when you get on the floor of the House out of 391 Representatives we are tied and bound and gagged and told that one man makes that estimate and that is the law. This is all wrong, to my way of thinking. Congress should have power to do what it thinks is right and best. When a matter is presented to the Committee of the Whole House, that committee must act, and should not be bound by anyone's statement. They should act upon their own independent judgment, otherwise we are in a mighty sad state of affairs.

Mr. RUCKER of Colorado. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. I was in the cloakroom taking a little nap, so necessary in best legislation, when I heard a few familiar voices from the West, in your heat, intemperance, and, I was almost about to say, in your ignorance, and thought I had better come in and enter my white alley. [Laughter.]

I have introduced a bill providing for the decrease to the cattle and sheep men of the grazing fee. I have gone to the Secretary of the Interior, I have gone to the President, and I believe we are going to get these fees decreased, and therefore I am interested just to the contrary of what these gentlemen on my left are.

Mr. LEVER. Let me ask my friend if he really believes that the grazing fees are too high?

Mr. RUCKER of Colorado. Oh, yes; I know they are.

Mr. LEVER. Are they higher than the grazing fees among individuals?

Mr. RUCKER of Colorado. That is not a fair standard. Private individuals will only take a few heads of stock. Take, for illustration, Australia and New Zealand, and those sections of the country where large areas are leased, and the fees here are very much higher. At any rate I have convinced the department, and I think I have convinced the President, that we ought to have some relief in this direction. I am not interested, as it appears these gentlemen are, as against these appropriations—that is to say, by reason of these appropriations having been decreased. I am in favor of increasing the appropriations so as to cover the loss that they will sustain by giving us cheaper grazing fees.

Mr. LEVER. Does the gentleman think that from 35 to 60 cents per head for cattle for a year is too much for a grazing fee?

Mr. RUCKER of Colorado. For a year? It is only three months.

Mr. LEVER. We understand this is a year, long rate.

Mr. RUCKER of Colorado. Oh, yes; it is a year, long rate, but they have to go in and they are not there more than three months.

Mr. LEVER. Does the gentleman think that is too much for a horse?

Mr. RUCKER of Colorado. It is the same thing for a horse. As my colleague suggests, they do not go up there until the 1st or the 15th of June, when only there is any grass.

Mr. LEVER. I know in my own country my father used to rent a pasture for grazing purposes, and a dollar a month was not considered too much.

Mr. RUCKER of Colorado. I want to say to the gentleman in that connection that I understood him to say a few moments ago that this committee had nothing to do with that matter, and why is it the gentleman is taking up the proposition of increasing the fees? And why is he now butting in, for he may spoil my speech?

Mr. LEVER. I was not taking that up. I was trying to get information from the gentleman.

Mr. RUCKER of Colorado. And I was trying to help out the gentleman by saying that this committee has not anything to do with that. We should uphold the hands of this committee and put more money into this appropriation if we expect any relief ourselves.

Mr. LAMB. My friend will let me make this statement, that in the national forests the cattle grazing is 3 per cent as against 11 per cent on other lands, and for horses it is 5 per cent as against 15 per cent on private land.

Mr. RUCKER of Colorado. I know, but what has the chairman of this committee got to do with that at all?

Mr. LAMB. To answer these questions; that is all. It is to be ready, and I got ready for this very condition that now confronts us.

Mr. RUCKER of Colorado. But the committee has no jurisdiction over that at all. I have been trying to help out the committee in that respect. I do not want the committee's influence against me, before the department and before the President. Under my bill—

Mr. LAMB. But we are not discussing the gentleman's bill. Wait until it comes in.

Mr. RUCKER of Colorado. And I will say that the chairman ought not to discuss it now.

Mr. LAMB. Mr. Chairman, I move that all debate on this paragraph and pending amendments be now closed.

The motion was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from California.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. RAKER) there were—ayes 2, noes 21.

So the amendment was rejected.

The Clerk read as follows:

Arapaho National Forest, Colo., $14,758.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. I hope that conditions will not arise that will necessitate Members from the West offering amendments modifying the sums carried in this bill for specific forest reserves. It is not possible that we should know just how much of the entire sum to be used on the reserves generally should be apportioned to the reserves in our States. It seems to me that that is a matter that must necessarily be left to the department and to the committee, and I should regret very much, indeed, if I felt that the interests of my State or reserves in my State demanded that I should rise here when the bill is under discussion and offer amendments to increase appropriations for specific preserves. I have noticed that as to reserves in my State the appropriations are in some cases increased and in some cases decreased. I take it for granted that the Forestry Bureau had very good reason for making the increases and for making the decreases in the various cases, and I think, unless there is better evidence presented than there is likely to be regarding the necessity for any increase in any of these cases, they should stand as they are.

Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from Colorado [Mr. TAYLOR] has referred to the matter of grazing.

I had occasion to take that matter up with the Chief Forester the other day, and he wrote me a letter which I received this morning—I regret I have not it with me—in which he explained what they had done. I assume that what he said in regard to reserves in my State applies to reserves generally. They have not intended, so he tells me, to generally increase or in the aggregate to increase the grazing fees. They have modified and changed them somewhat in some cases upon consultation with the stockmen in the various localities. Some of the stockmen in my State are objecting to an increase—

Mr. FOWLER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Wyoming yield to the gentleman from Illinois?

Mr. MONDELL. I will be glad to do so.

Mr. FOWLER. I understand that some years ago the appropriation was made in the aggregate, and that about two years ago it was segregated to the different reserves. I will be glad to have the gentleman explain, if he will, what was the reason for making this change. I will be glad to ask for more time for the gentleman, as I would like to have the reason.

Mr. MONDELL. Well, Mr. Chairman, I am not a member of the committee, and I had nothing to do with the change, but I think it was an excellent one. I think it is always a very good idea to segregate items in order that Congress may understand just where and for what purpose the sums appropriated are to be used. To go back to the question of grazing fees. Sheepmen on one of the reserves in my State felt that the charge had been unreasonably increased, and possibly that is true. I shall make further inquiry with regard to it, but the Forest Service assures me that they have no present intention of increasing the fees generally, but rather to readjust them as between cattle and sheep on the various reserves, so as to make them more uniform in accordance with the length of the grazing season in the various reserves.

There is one very serious ground for complaint, however, with regard to grazing fees, and it is this: There is no law authorizing the charge of grazing fees. The Chief Forester a number of years ago endeavored to get the committee, endeavored to get Members of Congress, to agree to an item in the bill which would authorize a grazing fee. Congress never took any action and the Chief Forester proceeded to legislate. A grazing charge was made, and then the people of the West tried for a number of years to have the question taken to the courts, first, in order that the question might be determined as to whether the Forest Bureau had any right to charge a grazing fee without specific authorization of Congress.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Wyoming has expired.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Chairman, I ask that my time may be extended for five minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Wyoming asks unanimous consent that his time may be extended for five minutes. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. MONDELL. Second, in order that the question might be determined as to what constituted a trespass on a forest reserve. Men living in the vicinity of a reserve had cattle which grazed generally upon the open range, but sometimes they strayed upon a reserve, and the question was, Did that straying upon the reserve constitute a trespass? Efforts were made to have that question taken to the courts and there decided. There is no way in which it could be done without an agreement on the part of the Government. The forest officials refused to allow a fair case to be taken to the court. The State of Colorado finally took what is known as the Fred Light case to the court, because they could not get any other case there.

It never should have been taken to the Supreme Court, because the facts in the Fred Light case clearly indicated intentional trespass—there is no question about that—and so the Supreme Court very properly, I think, said that an intentional trespass upon a forest reserve is punishable. Well, now, the result of that is that the straying upon a forest reserve of animals roaming upon the public domain in the vicinity of a reserve is held by the Forest Service to constitute a trespass—a willful trespass. The further result is that those living in the vicinity of a reserve who have cattle and horses grazing upon the open range feel called upon to take out grazing permits, not because they intend to graze their stock upon the reserve, not because their stock is ordinarily upon the reserve, but because some of the stock may some time roam on the reserve, and in order to protect themselves they take out grazing permits for a given number of animals.

In my State a private individual can not collect damages from the owner of live stock which strays upon his unfenced land, and yet the Federal Government may establish forest reserves here, there, anywhere in the country, and if the stock of any citizen, wandering generally upon the public domain, goes upon the forest reserve it constitutes a trespass. The Federal Government therefore occupies a position entirely different from any private individual. Our people do not feel comfortable under that condition of affairs. We do not believe it is good law.

Mr. BUTLER. What is your remedy in case of trespass?

Mr. MONDELL. The remedy on the part of the citizen is to defend himself the best he can before the United States courts.

Mr. BUTLER. I am asking seriously for the information. Do they really enforce the law against small trespass—trespass made by mistake? Does the Government enforce the law?

Mr. MONDELL. I do not think the Forestry Service intends to or desires to be unjust—the present forestry management. I think the gentlemen now in charge of the forest reserves are trying to be reasonable and just. But here is a Supreme Court decision, in a very extreme case, which made very bad law, just as extreme cases always do.

Mr. LEVER. Is this true:

That within the last two years no stock grower has been denied the privilege of using forest ranges because of unsettled trespass. And that few stock growers have been denied grazing privileges because of outstanding charges of trespass; during the past two years absolutely none whatever?

Mr. MONDELL. I will say to the gentleman I presume that is correct, as I have had no complaints of that kind. I once had numerous complaints of that nature. And I will say to the gentleman that if I had any now I would probably have aired my grievances on the floor of the House. But I have not had any, and I think the department is more reasonable in that matter now.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. LAMB. Mr. Chairman, I move to close debate.

Mr. MONDELL. I ask unanimous consent for five minutes more.

Mr. LAMB. Mr. Chairman, I move that debate close on this section right now. The gentleman has already had 10 minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

Mr. MONDELL. Will you give me two minutes more?

Mr. LAMB. Certainly. I want to be as courteous as possible.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Virginia asks unanimous consent that the gentleman from Wyoming may have two minutes more. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. MONDELL. There have been cases where men have been compelled to defend themselves at very great cost. I have one case in mind where a man was assessed by a supervisor and fined because his horses strayed on a forest reserve. Of course, that was a little irregular, and when the attention of the Forest Service was called to it they corrected the action.

Mr. LEVER. The gentleman has to-day, in accordance with his admission of a moment ago, admitted that none of these things have happened under the present administration of the Forest Service, and it is begging the issue.

Mr. MONDELL. I am not; and the very fact that the gentleman misunderstood me shows that he does not fully understand the matters under discussion. The paragraph the gentleman read says that when men are under charges for trespass they are allowed to have their stock on the reserve during the pendency of the charge. Is not that it?

Mr. LEVER. That is one proposition; yes.

Mr. MONDELL. The other was similar to it, as I understood it.

Mr. LEVER. The proposition I made was that the abuses of which you have complained have not happened in the past year.

Mr. MONDELL. Not altogether. Men are being compelled to take out permits for the grazing of stock on the reserves whose stock may never see the reserves. They are compelled to do it because they are afraid of the Supreme Court decision in the Fred Light case, and because the local supervisor may tell them that that decision will be adhered to.

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. Will the gentleman from Wyoming yield for a question?

Mr. MONDELL. If I have any time.

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. Is it not true that the forest rangers go to the assessment roll and get the number of heads of stock a man is assessed for, and then make him take out permit for all of them whether they ever see the forest reserves or not, and try to fix the rate as it would be for pasture on privately owned land?

The Clerk read as follows:

Arkansas National Forest, Ark., $14,402.

Mr. MORSE of Wisconsin. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. I think it is only fair that the position of the Forest Service should be stated at this time, and in this connection I will state that I have a letter from the Forester on this matter of grazing on the public lands, which I shall in a moment ask permission to insert in the RECORD. Let me read a part of it, and you will notice, as I proceed, that the Government is not charging these people for the use of our land one-half of what it is worth or what the Government ought to charge them for grazing purposes. I read:

During the past three years a very careful study has been made of the prices paid for the use of private lands for grazing purposes. The prices paid for the use of Indian and military reservations has also been taken into consideration. The result has been to show that the rates charged for grazing live stock on the national forests are only about one-third as much as those charged for the use of private lands, railroad land grants, and lands within military and Indian reservations.

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield to me?

Mr. MORSE of Wisconsin. Not now; let me finish.

And lands within military and Indian reservations, and also that the proportionate amount paid for pasturing sheep on a per capita basis is about 30 per cent of the rate paid for cattle, which is in conformity with the ratio established by the present regulations. The basis of this rate for sheep grazing is, first, that the proportionate number of stock under 6 months of age allowed to graze free under national-forest permits is much greater with sheep than with cattle, and the lambs mature more rapidly than calves, therefore requiring more feed and reducing the feed-lot ratio of 8 sheep to 1 cow, where all animals are counted to a range ratio of 5 sheep to 1 cow in the amount of forage required.

A little further on I read:

From the results obtained in the study of grazing rates we now have before us the problem whether there should not be a readjustment of grazing fees. As a matter of policy, I am not in favor of fixing the rates paid by competitive bid.

That deals with another question. Now listen:

If the present rates were increased to 60 per cent of the full value of the forage, it would almost double the returns from grazing upon the national forests.

In other words, these cattlemen and sheep men are paying to the Government to-day only about one-third of what this is worth. They are grazing their cattle and sheep upon the lands belonging to all this Nation at one-third of what it is worth, and still they are down here in Congress introducing bills for the purpose of getting it for less.

Now, those are the facts, and I want to ask unanimous consent, Mr. Chairman, that I may insert in the RECORD this letter from the Forester, Mr. Graves.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Wisconsin asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD by inserting the letter referred to. Is there objection?

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. Before the gentleman sits down I would like to submit a question.

Mr. MORSE of Wisconsin. With pleasure.

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. Does the Canadian Government or any other government charge for the use of the Government's domain the free grass that would burn out and destroy the timber if it was not grazed off? And has the United States Government done so in the history of this country until within the past six or eight years? Answer the question; yes or no.

Mr. MORSE of Wisconsin. In the first place, I am not familiar with what the Government does, and—

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. Answer the question.

Mr. MORSE of Wisconsin. Let me finish. I am perfectly willing to answer. That is all right. This Government is charging something for the use of this range. That range belongs to all of the people of this Nation, and not to the people who live out there—

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. Yes—

Mr. MORSE of Wisconsin. And furthermore, we are appropriating every year money from the National Treasury to support that range.

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. And if you did not appropriate a dollar it would be better for the United States. [Applause.]

Mr. MORSE of Wisconsin. And that money is derived by taxation from all the people of this Nation, and therefore all the people should receive some benefit. Therefore, I say, it matters not what the Canadian Government or any other government may do. It is just and proper that these forests, which are supported at the national expense, should pay back money into the National Treasury, and just because you are living at the doors of the forests is no reason why that should not be done.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. MORSE] asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD by inserting a letter. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Following is the letter referred to:

UNITED STATES DEPARTMENT OF AGRICULTURE,
FOREST SERVICE,
Washington, February 26, 1912.

Hon. I. L. LENROOT,
House of Representatives.

DEAR MR. LENROOT: In reply to your letter of February 21:

I have the honor to inform you that prior to the year 1906 no charge was made for the grazing of live stock within the national forests.

The regulations first adopted for the management of the national forests, then called forest reserves, followed in general the policy which governed the use of the other public lands. The Government had restricted the use of timber on the public lands by legislation designating the amount of public timber which might be used by settlers and others free of charge and the conditions under which timber in excess of this amount might be purchased, but had never undertaken to regulate, or make any charge for, the use of unreserved public lands for grazing purposes.

Whenever grazing had been allowed upon public lands included within either Indian or military reservations a charge had been made which was based upon the full commercial value of the forage. At the time of the transfer of the administration of the forest reserves from the Department of the Interior to the Department of Agriculture, by the act of February 1, 1905, it was provided that all money received from the sale of any products or the use of any lands or resources of the forest reserves should be covered into a special fund available for the protection, administration, improvement, and extension of the forest reserves. This was with the idea that ultimately the forest reserves would be made self-sustaining.

In order to carry out the evident intent of Congress, a regulation was promulgated by the Secretary of Agriculture on July 1, 1905, providing that on and after January 1, 1906, a charge would be made for grazing permits on the forest reserves. Owing to the fact that no charge for grazing on the forest reserves had theretofore been made and that no charge was made for the use of the unreserved public lands, it was deemed advisable at first to fix the grazing fees at a moderate amount which would represent a fair share of administrative cost of the national forests and a reasonable return to the Government for the value of the forage and for the benefit to the stock industry in protection and stability to business received through regulated use of the grazing land, but which at the same time would not be unreasonable from the standpoint of the live-stock industry.

With this idea in view rates were established of from 20 to 35 cents per head for cattle and horses for the regular summer grazing period and from 35 to 50 cents per head for the entire year, and from 5 to 8 cents per head for sheep for the regular summer grazing period. Notice was also given in the published regulation that these rates would be advanced when market conditions, transportation facilities, and demand for the range warranted it, but that the grazing fee charged would in all cases be reasonable.

On July 1, 1907, the regulations were revised and the schedule of grazing fees made to include a rate of 10 to 18 cents per head for sheep for the entire year. In the last revision of the regulations, which was made on May 1, 1911, the grazing fees on cattle were again fixed at from 35 to 60 cents per head per year, and the fees for sheep at 30 per cent of the cattle rate. While several minor readjustments of the schedule of grazing fees have been made, the general charges have not been materially changed since the establishment of the policy of charging a fee for the grazing on the national forests.

During the past three years a very careful study has been made of the prices paid for the use of private lands for grazing purposes. The prices paid for the use of Indian and military reservations has also been taken into consideration. The result has been to show that the rates charged for grazing live stock on the national forests are only about one-third as much as those charged for the use of private lands, railroad land grants, and lands within military and Indian reservations, and also that the proportionate amount paid for pasturing sheep on a per capita basis is about 30 per cent of the rate paid for cattle, which is in conformity with the ratio established by the present regulations. The basis of this rate for sheep grazing is, first, that the proportionate number of stock under 6 months of age allowed to graze free under national-forest permits is much greater with sheep than with cattle, and the lambs mature more rapidly than calves, therefore requiring more feed and reducing the feed-lot ratio of 8 sheep to 1 cow, where all animals are counted to a range ratio of 5 sheep to 1 cow in the amount of forage required; and, second, that under the customary methods of handling stock upon the range sheep are herded in bands while cattle are turned loose. For this reason sheep are more destructive to young forest growth than cattle, and also destroy a much greater amount of forage by trampling. Careful investigation has shown that herded animals require from 25 to 50 per cent more range than animals which are turned loose. These facts justify the present ratio fixed by the regulations.

From the results obtained in the study of grazing rates we now have before us the problem of whether there should not be a readjustment of grazing fees. As a matter of policy I am not in favor of fixing the rates paid by competitive bid, for the reason that the small owner and new settler would not be able to compete with the large owners, and such a system would therefore tend to place the grazing privileges in the hands of the larger outfits and check the wider distribution of these privileges which is being brought about under our present regulations. Therefore I believe that the rates should be fixed by the Government with due consideration of all factors which bear upon the matter, and with such deduction on account of the greater restrictions which are placed upon grazing within the national forests than upon the use of other kinds of lands as seems justified. We have not yet completed the study of the amount of damage done by different kinds of stock and of other matters which have a bearing upon the deduction which should be made on account of necessary restrictions, but from what has already been learned it is probable that it should be somewhere between 25 and 40 per cent, or in other words, that the charge for grazing on the national forests should be from 60 to 75 per cent of what would be a reasonable charge for the use of similar lands without restrictions. If the present rates were increased to 60 per cent of the full value of the forage it would almost double the returns from grazing upon the national forests. We are now studying the question of just what changes should be made, how and when.

Any readjustment of rates which is deemed advisable should be made gradually and with due consideration for the welfare of the live-stock industry.

Very sincerely, yours,

H. S. GRAVES, Forester.

Mr. MARTIN of Colorado. Mr. Chairman, I would like to strike out the last word, pro forma. I had intended to ask the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. MORSE] a question, and will then take only two or three minutes time. The defect of the gentleman's proposition is that it does not go to the fundamentals of this question at all. The gentleman loses sight of an all-important fact when he says that the lands that are held in private ownership are leased at three times as much as those included in the public domain. I do not know whether that is true or not, or whether the charge on the public domain is one-third of what is charged on the private domain, but the gentleman loses sight of the fact that the lands in private ownership bear a share in the expenses of local government, and bear their share of the burdens of the Commonwealth, whereas these lands in the public domain are absolutely exempt from taxation, and we never get any benefit from them except what Congress may see fit to vote to us in these appropriations, 95 per cent of which, I may say, goes into official salaries.

Mr. LAMB. The State gets back 25 per cent of it, I may say to the gentleman.

Mr. MARTIN of Colorado. The State now gets back 25 per cent of it, whereas—

Mr. MANN. Which is more than the taxes amount to—

Mr. MARTIN of Colorado. Whereas if this land were reduced to private ownership the State would get back all of it. You pay back 25 per cent of it and the Government keeps 75 per cent, and you boast of your generosity to us. We do not consider that generosity, Mr. Chairman. We do not call that generosity. So far as you have the public domain in Federal reserves it is not a part of the resources of the State at all. It is simply a Federal tenancy, not a part of the State. You could not build up an American State under those conditions. If this land were under private ownership it would be locally taxed, and the people would build their schoolhouses, roads, and bridges, and make their own improvements on it.

Mr. RUCKER of Colorado. And the Government would not be behind year after year in the administration of those forests.

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. Is it not true that to-day we maintain the courts which preserve the peace upon the Government land out of which we get no return whatever? We maintain the schools and build the roads that some of these carpet-bag Federal employees use out there.

Mr. RUCKER of Colorado. We maintain the criminal courts, where some of these men ought to be arraigned.

Mr. LAMB. The gentleman from Colorado says that these Federal employees are carpetbaggers. They are not carpetbaggers. They are selected from your localities.

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. Let me read to you.

Mr. MANN. You say you get no return. We pay you 25 per cent of the gross receipts, and if you pay that proportion of taxes on your private property, God help you.

Mr. LEVER. Fifty thousand dollars to the State of Colorado.

Mr. RUBEY. Mr. Chairman, I should like to know what business four men have occupying the floor and talking all at the same time.

The CHAIRMAN. The State of Colorado has the floor.

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. I want to support my statement in regard to carpetbag administration.

Mr. LAMB. I challenge that statement.

Mr. BURLESON. The gentleman does not know what real carpetbaggers are. [Laughter.]

Mr. TURNBULL. I should like to ask the State of Colorado a question.

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. I have the floor, and I decline to yield.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Colorado [Mr. MARTIN] has the floor.

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. If my colleague has the floor, I will ask him to yield to me.

Mr. MARTIN of Colorado. I do not think I have had over one-fourth of the floor, but if my colleague wants to go ahead in the good work, and he seems to have something there that he wants to read, let him proceed.

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. I want to read a Washington Associated Press dispatch, dated October 7, 1908, and I want to ask how much the conditions have changed since:

WASHINGTON, October 7, 1908.

The district foresters who will be in charge of the six field districts of the Forest Service, beginning January 1 next, have been selected by United States Forester Gifford Pinchot.

They and their headquarters are as follows:

- District 1. Missoula, Mont. W. B. Greeley, of California.
- District 2. Denver, Colo. Smith Riley, of Maryland.
- District 3. Albuquerque, N. Mex. A. C. Ringland, of New York.
- District 4. Ogden, Utah. Clyde Leavitt, of Michigan.
- District 5. San Francisco, Cal. F. E. Olmstead, of Connecticut.
- District 6. Portland, Oreg. E. T. Allen, formerly State forester of California.

There is not a man in all this list who is appointed from the State in which he is operating, and these are the foresters, so far as I know, who are reigning over us at the present time.

Mr. BURLESON. Carpetbaggers, pure and simple.

Mr. LAMB. I want to read what Mr. Graves said on this very subject:

The CHAIRMAN. Do you aim, as far as you can, to make the service homogeneous—to place the foresters in the localities where they belong?

Mr. GRAVES. Yes, sir; all of the ranger force, the men on the ground, are from local civil-service registers.

The CHAIRMAN. That is what I want to bring out, because it has been disputed, the charge being that you carried into the service men from other States unacquainted with local conditions.

Mr. GRAVES. They are from the local civil-service registers.

The CHAIRMAN. I am glad to hear it. Go on.

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. The gentleman has not said anything about the district foresters or supervisors at all. He is talking about the rangers. I think the rangers are mostly from home, and I am making no objection to them; but we do not relish the men who dictate the policies being appointed from other States.

Mr. BURLESON. And they draw all the big salaries.

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. They draw all the big salaries there are out there.

Mr. OLMSTED. Mr. Chairman, I rise to a question of personal privilege. If I correctly understood, the gentleman from Colorado [Mr. TAYLOR] referred to me as a carpetbagger from Connecticut, an imputation which I resent. [Laughter.]

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. That is a namesake of yours, and at the present time I presume he is reigning over the State of California.

Mr. OLMSTED. He is no relative of mine.

Mr. FOWLER. Mr. Chairman, I move to amend the amendment by striking out the section.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. FOWLER] offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

Mr. FOWLER. Mr. Chairman, I did not rise to make any speech on this question, but I rose for the purpose of getting a little information. I understand from the distinguished gentlemen from Colorado that they are anxious to have the public domain of the West opened up for free grazing for their horses, cattle, goats, and sheep. I desire to ask them this question, How do you expect us in the Middle West and in the East to compete with you in the markets of the country in the sale of our horses, our sheep, our cattle, and our goats, which are fed on grass from lands where we must make the pasturage ourselves if you are permitted to raise yours on the public domain free?

Mr. MARTIN of Colorado. I am glad the gentleman asked that question, and I am going to answer him now. I do not ask to throw the public domain in the West open to free grazing. I ask simply that it be thrown open for settlement and development.

Mr. SHACKLEFORD. The gentleman wants homes and citizens?

Mr. MARTIN of Colorado. Exactly.

Mr. FOWLER. I yielded the floor to the distinguished gentleman from Colorado [Mr. MARTIN].

Mr. MARTIN of Colorado. We want homes and citizens instead of Federal tenants and Federal employees, a mere bureaucracy, which is all that we have now on the forest reserves.

Mr. RUCKER of Colorado. Will the gentleman from Illinois yield to the other distinguished gentleman from Colorado? [Laughter.]

Mr. FOWLER. I will yield to the distinguished gentleman from Colorado whose home is in Denver.

Mr. RUCKER of Colorado. I will say to the gentleman that with reference to his stock he can send it to Colorado, but please keep the billy goats at home. [Laughter.]

Mr. FOWLER. I am a good deal like Tom Merritt was in Illinois. When a certain proposition was put up to him he said he could not do it, and that is just the way that we in the East and Middle West are; we can not ship them across there to graze.

Now, Mr. Chairman, I am not asking this question for the purpose of trying to place any awkward condition on the gentleman from Colorado, but I did it for the purpose of getting at the facts in the case. The distinguished gentleman from Colorado [Mr. MARTIN] says that he does not want the domain thrown open to free grazing of the cattle raisers of the West, but that he wants to get rid of the bureaucracy which is in existence out there over some of their domain not yet opened up to public settlement for homesteading. If that be his object it is a most laudable one; but I have not heard one of these gentlemen answer my question as to how they expect us to compete with them if they get their grass free, and we have to pay for ours. I understand that at least one of the gentlemen from Colorado objects to the charges fixed in this bill for grazing on public land.

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FOWLER. I will yield to the distinguished gentleman representing Colorado at large.

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. I was born and raised in the State which the gentleman represents in part. My father used to graze cattle upon the ranges in Illinois for years and years, and the Government never charged him anything for it, and the people in the East never complained that we were getting free grass in the State of Illinois.

Mr. MANN. I was raised in Illinois, and I am older than the gentleman from Colorado. There never were such herds in Illinois grazing on the public lands as there are in the West—nothing like it.

Mr. FOWLER. Mr. Chairman, I have yielded to the distinguished gentleman from Colorado [Mr. TAYLOR].

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. The gentleman will recollect further that we live about 1,500 miles farther from the markets than he does and that the freight rates from our country will more than make up the difference in the cost of grazing, even with free grazing.

Mr. FOWLER. Kansas City is one of the greatest meat markets in the world, and it is as near to the home of the gentleman from Colorado as it is to the Central West, and yet I have not had an answer to my question. How do you expect us to compete in the Middle West with taxes on our grass when you ask for no tax on your grass?

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. If the gentleman knew anything about the beef business he would know that even in the Central States beef fed on pasture grass brings a higher price than that fed upon the ranges.

Mr. FOWLER. That may all be true; but the cattle of the West raised on free grass cost but little and can be sold on the market at a price far less than can be done by the farmers in the East and Middle West. You brand yours and turn them loose, and when you want to put them on the market you spend a few days in rounding them up. We must graze ours on high-priced land and are at a big expense all the time. You can sell at a low price with a profit and keep us out of the market until you have sold all yours.

Mr. FOWLER. Mr. Chairman, I withdraw my amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the amendment is withdrawn.

There was no objection.

The Clerk, proceeding with the reading of the bill, read as follows:

Ashley National Forest, Utah and Wyoming, $4,434.

Mr. DIES. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. I desire to make a very brief observation. I am not unmindful of the fact that nearly all of the public domain of this country has been appropriated in one way or another. I have a sympathetic feeling for the conservation movement, which has gone to such extremes in this country. There are two kinds of reformers. I wish this House of Representatives might keep in mind that there are two varieties of enemies of progress. The first is the man who sits back and refuses to move, and they call him a standpatter, and the other is the man who wants to move so rapidly that no great institution can keep pace with his movement. I would liken the one to an ox, who will not move at all, and they call him a standpatter. The other I would liken to a grass-fed mustang pony, who kicks while the balance of the team pulls and who wants to run away the moment that the load begins to move. So it is in the conservation movement.

Nothing was said in this country while the great public domain of the Republic was being bartered and frittered away, but now we see conservationists who strain at a gnat and swallow a camel. Only last evening I was interested in the debate precipitated by the gentleman from California [Mr. RAKER] in a case where a company which had honestly invested $500,000 wanted an easement over 3,800 feet of the public domain. The facts developed that they already own an easement which gives them an open ditch over the 3,800 feet, and they wanted an easement to give them the right to sink a pipe line parallel to the open ditch. Yet the great heads of the conservation movement opposed this perfectly natural and justifiable desire of this company.

I was interested to know to what extent the national activities had engaged upon this proposition, which the Government expert testified was worth less than $50. Mark you, Mr. Chairman, this is an easement that this company already owned, and they only want to change their open ditch to a buried pipe line of 3,800 feet, and this a concern that is lighting a number of small cities in the West and furnishing energy for a number of manufacturing plants. Upon investigation I found that the President of the United States; the Attorney General of the United States; the Secretary of Agriculture; Mr. Willis L. Moore, the Acting Secretary; Mr. George McCabe, the Solicitor of the Agricultural Department; and an assistant solicitor of the Treasury Department, and not one but dozens of others of the great functionaries of the Government, had given great consideration to this matter, and numbers of pages of reports have been made, and, in a word, this small thing had occupied the energies of the functionaries of this great Republic, from the President of the United States down to some of the smaller officials, and they were occupied over what? Over the desire of an electric company which had already spent $500,000 of honest money and which wanted to change an easement, an open ditch, to a buried pipe line.

Mr. Chairman, I say that we have gone to extremes, and, like the sleeping passenger on the train who has been relieved of his purse, of his watch and coat, we have awakened to find we are robbed of all, and now we go to pitiful extremes upon legitimate business. I have all respect for a true reformer, and for your insurgent I have some respect, but there are two ways of progress. There is the steady pull of the honest legislator who wants to promote the public good, and there are then those fitful jerks of insurgents, like the grass-fed mustang, who kicks when honest horses pull, and who wants to run away the moment the load begins to move. I have no sympathy with that sort of progress.

The Clerk read as follows:

Battlement National Forest, Colo., $6,593.

Mr. GUERNSEY. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. I would like to inquire about the estimates here. I see these estimates are quite uniform in many instances as to different reserves. Are the estimates based on acreage?

Mr. LAMB. They are not based on acreage, but on what is recommended by the Chief of Forestry Division. He arranges the forest divisions on the conditions surrounding them.

Mr. RAKER. Is it not a fact that they are based on mathematical calculation sent to the committee?

Mr. LAMB. They are based on conditions before the Chief of Forestry Division, and he knows about this work. We can not tell about it. We could stay here until we are as old as Methuselah without knowing about each one of these particular divisions. There are 150 or more of them.

The Clerk read as follows:

Battlement National Forest, Colo., $6,593.

Mr. McLAUGHLIN. Mr. Chairman, there are about 14 pages of this kind of matter in this bill. It seems to me we could dispense with the reading of it. Gentlemen might indicate the particular ones in which they are interested and to which they desire to object or about which they desire to inquire. I ask unanimous consent that that course be taken.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I should be compelled to object to that. I do not believe in passing bills without their having been read.

Mr. LAMB. We can not do that.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois objects. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Cabinet National Forest, Mont., $12,847.

Mr. MARTIN of Colorado. Mr. Chairman, I hope Members will not feel that a little discussion of this question for a few minutes as we go along is a waste of the time of the committee. I think sometimes the wrangles we get into over this question annually on these agricultural appropriation bills are not only unfortunate and unwise but decidedly misleading. I think sometimes the Representatives from the forest-reserve States make a mistake in getting drawn into hair-splitting wrangles about the size of the grazing fee, the amount of the appropriation for a particular forest, or the number or salary of the forest rangers, or something of that kind. I think it would be better for us if we kept silent on these minor questions. I have long since decided that it was a waste of time merely to attack the errors and abuses of the Forest Service, because errors and abuses are inherent in every institution and in every bureau of the Government, and in the course of time those things could be cured more or less; but I felt we should center our attack upon the institution itself, and I want you gentlemen to know that is what I principally object to, and at this time it is practically all to which I object. I regard the forest reserve as it is now established and its administration as an utterly un-American institution. You never could have built up an American commonwealth under such a system. The only reason that Colorado is to-day a State is because it is only one-fourth in forest reserves. If Colorado was three-fourths in forest reserves, it could not now be made a State and it never could be a State.

Mr. TURNBULL. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. MARTIN of Colorado. Yes.

Mr. TURNBULL. What I desire to know is—I do not pretend to know anything about the matter—whether the gentlemen in the West want these appropriations. If not, I am in favor of striking them out.

Mr. MARTIN of Colorado. The gentleman would put us in a rather delicate situation if these appropriations were stricken out. I have foreseen since I began the study of this question the very thing mentioned by my colleague a few moments ago, to wit, an increase of the charge for the use of the national forests, and the very thing that is being put into effect by this bill, to wit, a reduction in the amount of the appropriations. I have foreseen that thing, and I have studied the question with a view to the proposition that Representatives from those States might get their wires crossed on it; that if Representatives from those States were down here advocating reductions and opposing increases in appropriations for the national forests, that when increases were made in charges for the use of the forests the Representatives would be blamed for it.

Mr. RUCKER of Colorado. I did not take any such position, and I suggest to the gentleman from Colorado that I took exactly his position; I said I wanted these appropriations made, but I said we could get along without these grazing fees.

Mr. MARTIN of Colorado. I understand that our positions are identical. Now, Mr. Chairman, the man who above all other men is responsible for this institution said from the start that it should not only be made self-sustaining, but a source of profit to the Federal Government; and when I saw that the Federal Government was putting into the forest reserves $3 for every dollar that was being taken out, and that $3 was being put in in the shape of salaries—and I once analyzed the expenditures in the Forest Service in this House, and I believe I showed that over 95 per cent of the entire cost of the administration of the forest reserves consisted in salaries—when I saw that great discrepancy between the receipts and the expenditures in the Forest Service I predicted to my people the time when appropriations would be cut down by Congress and the charges for the use of the reserves would be increased.

I used the argument in the very community where they are now clamoring against this proposed increase. I said, "You gentlemen do not want to get too enthusiastic about this institution because you are getting cheap ranges now. Congress is going to get tired of pouring money into the forest reserves after a while, and when they cut down these appropriations they are going to increase these charges to all the traffic will bear." But now, Mr. Chairman, take the conditions that we would have in the public-domain States if this institution is to be permanent. Why, here are 18 forest reserves provided for in this bill in the State of Colorado. Do you realize what an area that is? A great many of you gentlemen, especially from this eastern country, do not realize what it means in acreage or what it means in square miles when we say that one-fourth of the State of Colorado is in forest reserve. I want to say to you gentlemen that the congressional district which I represent is 50 per cent larger than the six New England States combined. Why, I do not even know the names of all the forest reserves in my district. They have gone out into the mountains there and they have reserved everything that has got the suspicion of scrub brush within 10 miles of it.

I think this hydro-electric case from California is one of the finest examples imaginable of the dog-in-the-manger policy that is being pursued by this institution. A man could not have imagined such a case as you had immediately before you yesterday and as you will have on next Calendar Wednesday when that map is again put down there where it was yesterday. Here is a business proposition. I know some of the men, as they live in my State. They have not only spent half a million dollars there, but they have told me they have spent $1,000,000. They own the entire right of way, as the gentleman from Texas said, from the water source down to where the power is to be developed. They have a ditch running down through that right of way, across this 3,800 feet of public domain, but now to develop electrical energy they must lay a pipe line so that they can get farther up the hillside and get a waterfall.

That land is just as barren of any vegetation as the seats in this Hall. That 3,800 feet of land is not worth 5 cents a township for any purpose on earth, and never will be as long as the sun shines and the water runs. It is nothing but a barren mountain side. It never was worth taking, and nobody would file on it, and so it happened to be lying there when the conservation policy came in, along with all the other land in that community not in private ownership.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. MARTIN of Colorado. I would like five minutes more.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Colorado asks unanimous consent for five minutes additional time. Is there objection?

Mr. LAMB. Mr. Chairman, I object.

The Clerk read as follows:

Cache National Forest, Utah and Idaho, $7,703.

Mr. MARTIN of Colorado. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

Mr. LAMB. I will ask my friend to please discuss the issues here involved and not to criticize this appropriation. If these gentlemen from the West want this matter settled and propose to demand that the public domain in these States be transferred to the respective States where these forest reserves are located, let them bring that subject before this House, and if they can not do it, then let them try secession—a remedy for certain ills that failed, as some of us know.

Mr. RUCKER of Colorado. I want to inform the gentleman from Virginia that I have such a bill, and I want to know whether you will vote for it or not.

Mr. LAMB. I will hear you patiently, and we will cross that bridge when we get to it.

Mr. CULLOP. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MARTIN of Colorado. Yes, sir.

Mr. CULLOP. I understood you to say a moment ago that about one-fourth of your State is embraced in the national forest reserves?

Mr. MARTIN of Colorado. Yes, sir.

Mr. CULLOP. And you also stated that if three-fourths of it was a national forest reserve it would never have become a State. What do you mean by that statement?

Mr. MARTIN of Colorado. I mean that there would not remain enough land and natural resources in that State that could be reduced to private ownership to form and support an American Commonwealth. It would simply remain a Federal dependency, a bureaucracy, ruled over by a department chief in the city of Washington, with every man living on that domain and using it living there under a lower form of tenancy than was ever known to the common law of England. He would be living upon and using the public domain under a mere permit or license, revocable without cause and without notice by the bureaucrats here in Washington. It is small wonder the reserves have some friends upon and near them. Has anyone on the forest reserves got any chance who is not in favor of them? Such a man must be in favor of the reserves or get off the earth.

Mr. CULLOP. Will the gentleman permit another question now?

Mr. MARTIN of Colorado. Yes, sir.

Mr. CULLOP. Does the keeping up of this policy prevent the settlement of these lands?

Mr. MARTIN of Colorado. Yes, sir; I will say to the gentleman there is not any question about that on earth. Is the present condition of that proposition in California preventing the development of a great industrial power plant there and the consequent development and benefit of the whole community? If it is, I want to say that the whole public domain is being retarded more or less in that way.

Mr. CULLOP. How many men do they keep on these national reserves?

Mr. MARTIN of Colorado. That would vary with the size of the reserves. There are several thousand employees in the Forest Service.

Mr. CULLOP. I would like to ask you one other question. Does the gentleman know the amount that has been appropriated by this bill to keep that army of public officials there?

Mr. MARTIN of Colorado. Yes, sir.

Mr. CULLOP. How much is it?

Mr. MARTIN of Colorado. Well, it is over $5,000,000.

Mr. CULLOP. Is all the property embraced on it worth the half of that?

Mr. LAMB. Oh, yes; it is worth many times more.

Mr. LEVER. The timber itself is worth $500,000,000.

Mr. MARTIN of Colorado. This is the point I make, Mr. Chairman, against forest reserves and against this institution: That if people can go upon those reserves under Government ownership, and not only make a living on them but pay the Government a rental for them, then they can afford to own them. [Applause.]

Is not that a self-evident proposition? Yet they would have you to understand that this is a sort of worthless domain which could not be gone on to and reduced to private ownership and developed and a civilization built up on it as is done elsewhere. Gentlemen, do you mean to tell me that the National Congress would stand for a policy that segregates and locks up vast areas capable of being settled and farmed and pastured, and so forth, and that the Government would be permitted to preserve such areas forever and forever under the conditions of Federal tenancy that I have described?

Mr. LAMB. More and more homesteaders are going in every year, Mr. Chairman, as I understand.

Mr. MARTIN of Colorado. If the gentleman from Virginia will go out there and try to reduce some of that forest land to private ownership—some of that land that is now being set apart and retained in the forest reserves—he will come back a sadder and a wiser man. His present knowledge of the subject is purely theoretical; it would then be practical.

Mr. HOWARD. Does the gentleman know about how many acres of land are embraced in each one of these forest reserves?

Mr. MARTIN of Colorado. There are 18 of these reserves in the State of Colorado, I believe, and there are about 16,000,000 acres of land in them, so that they would run to about a million acres to a reserve in that State. There are nearly or quite 200,000,000 acres in all 10 Federal forest reserves.

Mr. TURNBULL. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman allow me to ask him a question for information?

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Colorado yield to the gentleman from Virginia?

Mr. MARTIN of Colorado. Yes, sir.

Mr. TURNBULL. Is it necessary to have that army of employees there in order to protect the forest reserves?

Mr. MARTIN of Colorado. Does the gentleman mean to protect them from fires?

Mr. TURNBULL. From fires or anything else.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. MARTIN of Colorado. I will answer under the next item.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Coeur d'Alene National Forest, Idaho, $15,239.

Mr. MARTIN of Colorado. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Colorado [Mr. MARTIN] moves to strike out the last word.

Mr. MARTIN of Colorado. Now, the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. TURNBULL] asks me a question which I can not afford to let go unanswered, and that is, whether we want these reserves protected from fire. The only answer I can give to the gentleman is this—

Mr. TURNBULL. I will state to the gentleman that I do not know anything about these matters, and I ask merely for information.

Mr. MARTIN of Colorado. You can spend all the money you want to spend out there to protect those forest reserves from fire or anything else—

Mr. TURNBULL. My idea is that if there is nobody out there on those forest reserves, how can there be any fires on them except such as may be started by the people taking care of them?

Mr. MARTIN of Colorado. Well, there are people living on those forest lands, and living among them and traveling over them, and lightning also starts many fires. I can not be put in a position of asking you not to appropriate all the money you want to appropriate for this institution and then have the shortages charged up to me, and have the increases for use charged up to me for political and other purposes. I can not stand for that sort of a proposition.

I want you gentlemen to appropriate all the money you want to appropriate for these national forests, but I want to re-emphasize the proposition that if the people in the West can pay the Government a rental for those lands, as they are now situated, and can live upon them besides, they can afford to own them, and the lands are capable of ownership. In the private ownership of the people they can pay taxes for all the purposes of our community life and our civilization. We will take the taxes out of these lands and we will build roads, and we will build bridges, and we will build pipe lines, and we will build telephones, and we will build highways, and we will build all the adjuncts and conveniences of civilization. But above all, Mr. Chairman, we will build up American homes. We will build up American communities. [Applause.] Instead of having the primeval wastes in the mountain places of the West, with the forest ranger riding over them, monarch of all he surveys, with authority to throw you in jail as a trespasser if he catches you doing without license one of a hundred things upon them, we will have a free American civilization there. [Applause.]

But awhile ago I started to refer to the case of the Hydro-Electric Co. Gentlemen, we are agreed on one thing. That little spit of land that the Government happens to own across that right of way is the merest pretext to hold up these people and compel them to pay a perpetual tax to the Government. There is no merit, there is no equity, in the contention of the Government. If that little spit of land was in private ownership that company could condemn a right of way through there, pay for it what a court said it was reasonably worth, and go ahead about its business. But what is the proposition of the Government? It is important, because it is the conservation policy that now underlies the attitude of the Government toward the people with reference to the public domain and its whole administration. The position of the Government is this: "For a right to go through that little spit of worthless mountain side we will charge you what will be equivalent to a tax on the entire business and profit of your whole plant." That is what they propose to do.

Mr. RUCKER of Colorado. And indirectly to make a charge for the use of the water, to which the Government has no title whatever.

Mr. MARTIN of Colorado. The Government does not own the water in our nonnavigable streams. They admit that. They admit that the water in the nonnavigable streams of the West belongs to the States.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Colorado has expired.

Mr. MARTIN of Colorado. I will just ask for one more five minutes.

Mr. LEVER. I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman proceed for five minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from South Carolina asks unanimous consent that the gentleman from Colorado may be allowed to proceed for five minutes. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. MARTIN of Colorado. The proposition of the Government is this: "It is true we do not own the water in the stream, but we happen to own the land bordering the stream, land that is probably not worth farming. We happen to own the only desirable and available place along this stream anywhere to build a dam and reservoir and create power. Now, we will not let you buy this land. There is no price on it. You can not condemn or buy it. We will lease it to you for a period of years, and will not simply charge you a rental for that land, but we will impose a charge that will be equivalent to a tax upon the value of your plant and the proceeds of your entire business."

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. A royalty.

Mr. MARTIN of Colorado. That is the attitude of the Government in all these matters.

Mr. CANNON. If the gentleman will allow me, I trust the gentleman will not accuse the Government, because it may own a section here or a quarter section there, of blackmailing its own people.

Mr. RUCKER of Colorado. But it does.

Mr. MARTIN of Colorado. I want to say to the venerable ex-Speaker of the House that that is just exactly what I do charge the Government with, and the proof is right at hand, in the case of the Hydro-Electric Co. of California. It is the plainest case of a holdup that was ever exhibited to the eyes of the Representatives in Congress, and if there is anybody here who can disprove that showing the burden is on him. We do not have to prove anything in that case. We can just put the map before you and state the facts, and when we have done that we have made out a case that puts the burden of proof on your shoulders.

Mr. Chairman, I promised the gentleman in charge of this bill [Mr. LAMB] that I would not consume any more time now, and I will not. I may have a few things to say on the Hydro-Electric bill next Wednesday, or some other Calendar Wednesday, because, of course, I expect to see that little bill hold the boards on every Calendar Wednesday from now until Congress adjourns. That is just the feeling and the spirit there is about this matter. The gentleman from Texas [Mr. DIES] has already referred to the fact that that little bill has concerned all the crowned heads in the United States Government from the President down, and certainly a matter of that moment could not be expected to be disposed of in this Congress on Holy Wednesday in anything short of the next three months.

I suppose it will be a more celebrated case when we get through with it than the Weymouth Back River case, that took four Calendar Wednesdays to decide whether the Government should pay $10,000 or $15,000 of its share of an improvement that was being made solely for its own benefit.

But before the gavel falls I want, above all things, to deny the assertion that has been so often made that we of the West want this land for ourselves. I never exhausted a single Government right in my life, and I do not expect to; I do not own a foot of public domain, and do not expect to file on any. We in the public-lands States do not want these lands for ourselves; we want them for the people in your States; that is what we want the lands thrown open to settlement for. We want the people of Wisconsin, the people of Iowa, the people of Illinois, the people of Virginia, the people from the South, the North, and the East to come out and take these lands and make homes upon them.

Mr. LAMB. We are preserving this timber for all those people.

Mr. MARTIN of Colorado. Yes; you are preserving the timber for posterity.

Mr. LAMB. Those people and their posterity are the same thing.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Colorado has expired. The pro forma amendment is withdrawn, and the Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Colorado National Forest, Colo., $8,734.

Mr. SLOAN. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. I desire to say that living on a lower level of this continent and subject more or less to the elevations of the State of Colorado, my State, as well as the rest of the Mississippi Valley, I believe, do not agree that this Government shall surrender its right of control of the splendid forestry to any State simply because it happens to exist within the borders of Colorado or any other State.

I resent as strongly as I can the statement made by the gentlemen against the splendid young men sent from Virginia, from Iowa, and New England by this Government to take care of our national forestry that has been in part despoiled heretofore, and would be further despoiled by the people who want to take it because they happen to live there. They want to take this forestry and pasture and not render unto the Government what it is entitled to. I insist that that forestry belongs to this great Government of ours, and because it happens to be within the borders of Colorado they have no more claim to it than the citizens of Rhode Island or any other State.

Mr. RUCKER of Colorado. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SLOAN. I will.

Mr. RUCKER of Colorado. I want to say that there are no quarantine laws in Colorado against the gentleman from Nebraska or any citizen of his State. The citizens of his State can come there and occupy these lands.

Mr. MARTIN of Colorado. We want them to come and take them up.

Mr. SLOAN. The gentleman says there are no quarantine laws; but because the Government has selected bright, intelligent young men from the universities to go out and look after the forest reserves and save them so that we can preserve them from climatic and weather conditions, as well as fire and blight, to which they are subject, they brand the foresters and superintendents as carpetbaggers. They are American citizens; they are bright young men, the best products of our universities and schools, and because they come from other States they are more liable to protect the forests from a national standpoint than if they were interested in the immediate vicinity; and it ill becomes gentlemen who happen to have forest reserves within their States to say we want the appropriation, but we are going to scold you for granting it.

Conservation in the American reserves, including forestry, to our people is a matter of considerable importance. It is a matter of considerable importance to the people of the Missouri and Mississippi Valleys and, for that matter, to every State in the Union. I hope further to discuss it at a future day. This Government is taking care of itself and taking care of its future when it says that the greed of any State shall not have control of the forestry future of our western country. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The pro forma amendment is withdrawn.

The Clerk read as follows:

Gila National Forest, N. Mex., $24,165.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. My eloquent friend from Nebraska [Mr. SLOAN] just suggested that we should not get excited over the matter of forest reserves. I do not think we should, yet I think sometimes the gentlemen who live in States where there are no forest reserves become quite as much excited in regard to reserve policies as we do. My very good friend, the very able gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. Morsel], was very emphatic, as was my good friend from Nebraska. I think they both used the word because the people who live in the western country propose to use it. Gentlemen who live on great rivers and harbors, on which we have spent hundreds of millions of dollars, propose to use them, and they do not propose that anybody shall charge them for using them. Yet because, forsooth, the men who, in the face of difficulty, are trying to conquer the deserts and the mountains of the West are asking fair treatment we want to rob somebody of something that belongs to them or to their people.

Mr. Chairman, I have never defended any man who wanted to loot the public domain or slaughter the forests. The men whom I have spoken for are the men who have gone out and are trying to earn a livelihood and establish a home on the plains and in the mountains by hard, honest toll. They are the men who have suffered. Great grazing associations, great timber associations have not appealed to me for protection against any forest-reserve management that we have ever had. They have gotten along very well, I thank you.

I have objected to appropriations for forestry, that were larger than I believed they ought to be, not because I have any objection to spending of Government money in that western country, but because I know this, that if we appropriate three and four and five and six million annually, for this service, Congress is ultimately going to demand that a large portion of it shall be returned, and that being true, it is not strange that the Forestry Service should feel compelled to levy upon the industries upon and in the vicinity of the reserves, with a view of taxing them to secure revenues—industries that do not derive any benefit directly from the reserves. That is the tendency. We have a much better forest-reserve management now than we had a few years ago, and they are curing some things, but there are some things fundamentally incurable in any system of bureaucracy, as my friend from Colorado [Mr. MARTIN] has just stated. In my opinion, as I have stated here a number of times, the forest reserves in this country are for the present a necessary evil. They are not an unmixed good by any manner of means, but the probability is that it will be necessary, for a certain length of time at least, for the Federal Government to retain forest areas. In my opinion they will ultimately pass to the States, and they will pass to the States so logically that no one will ever think of objecting to it. You will finally get tired of spending these millions annually without any very considerable return. We speak of them as forest reserves. When you take into consideration the fact that the major portion of the income from these reserves to-day is not from the sale of timber, but from grazing—

Mr. McLAUGHLIN. Oh, that is not true.

Mr. LAMB. The sale of timber is a heap more than from grazing.

Mr. MONDELL. I have not looked at the record this year. It is true of the past that the grazing receipts were more than all other receipts.

Mr. LEVER. The timber receipts are larger this year.

Mr. MONDELL. Then, for the first year in the history of the forest reserves, that is true, and I stand corrected.

Mr. LAMB. The timber receipts were $1,000,000 and the grazing $490,000, and the balance $76,000.

Mr. MONDELL. The grazing receipts for quite a number of years were larger than all other receipts.

Mr. GUERNSEY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MONDELL. I have not the time. In the first place, Mr. Chairman, the reserves cover a great deal of territory which ought not to be included within them, and a great deal of the fault found with the reserves is because they were impropvidently and improperly extended.

Mr. LAMB. That is right. We will admit that.

Mr. MONDELL. If we could eliminate the territory that ought not to be in the reserves, a great many of the present complaints would not be heard of. I hope that eventually they will be so limited. Ultimately the reserves will, I believe, pass to the States, and in the meantime I do hope that gentlemen will realize that we are not trying to loot the public domain or the reserves, but that we simply desire fair treatment.

Mr. DIES. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last two words.

Mr. LAMB. Mr. Chairman, then I move that the committee rise.

Mr. DIES. Mr. Chairman, I do not think the gentleman has the floor; I think I have the floor.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Texas has the floor.

Mr. DIES. Mr. Chairman, I want to make a very little observation upon the ultraradicalism of the country at this particular time. I am not unaware, Mr. Chairman, we are solicitous to preserve the public domain after it has been dissipated, and that progressives and insurgents are manifesting unusual activity about the high cost of living. [Applause.] I would say, Mr. Chairman, as a common unostentatious country gentleman, that some reformation might be made in the high cost of living without going beyond the pale of ordinary common sense. For instance, we pay 50 cents a dozen for eggs—

Mr. MANN. Not now.

Mr. DIES. Or 30 cents now. I got 50 cents a dozen for my eggs last month. We pay now some 30 cents. I recommend to the insurgents of the Republican Party and the vociferous progressives in my own ranks this suggestion, that they give their hens a little more warm water and warm mash in the morning and provide them with closer quarters at the nighttime. I am not unmindful, Mr. Chairman, that the American people who live in the country have moved to the cities, nor am I unmindful that a million from foreign shores each year flock to our country and gravitate to the centers of population. It is inevitable under these conditions that the price of living should grow greater all the while. For myself, I measure my words when I speak them, I hope that eggs will go to a dollar a dozen and wheat to $2 a bushel, because I believe that it is better for this Republic that some of the people who live in the cities should move back to the fresh air of the country than that those who live in the country should gravitate to the impure and suffocating air of the city.

You know I have not much patience with your Pinchots and your Republican insurgents and your Bryan and Roosevelt progressives in this country. I rather respect the honest and intelligent patriot who wants to move along steady and conservative lines. I believe, Mr. Chairman, that there have been no new lessons in free government since the Constitution was written. I believe that Mr. Madison and Mr. Hamilton and Mr. Jefferson, who had before them all the fateful lessons of the democracy of ancient times, were wiser than we to-day, and I believe Mr. Lincoln, who refused to appeal from the decision of the Supreme Court to the mob, as he stated in his Quincy speech he refused to appeal, was wiser than Mr. Roosevelt, who proposes to make that appeal. [Applause.] And I believe that Mr. Jefferson in his declaration that all of the despotic democracies of ancient times as exemplified in their elective despotism were wiser than Mr. Bryan when he seeks to overrule that declaration. Then I think, Mr. Chairman, that we might not become so hasty, we might not become so ultraconservative. Do you know that we go too far and too fast? The great forests of this country were made for the people who inhabit the country, and all because we wake up and find ourselves robbed of a major portion of them is no reason why we should be insensible and unsensible of the remaining portion of them.

The Clerk read as follows:

Inyo National Forest, California and Nevada, $8,839.

Mr. RAKER. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out, on page 37, lines 3 and 4, the following words: "Eight thousand eight hundred and thirty-nine dollars," and substitute therefor the sum of "nine thousand five hundred and three dollars."

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 37, lines 3 and 4, strike out the words "eight thousand eight hundred and thirty-nine dollars," and insert in lieu thereof "nine thousand five hundred and three dollars."

Mr. RAKER. Mr. Chairman, this amendment brings back the appropriation for this particular reserve to the same amount that it was in 1911. I want the committee now to mark the language I read from this letter. I made the statement a while ago that there was something like $35,000 taken from the western forests. There are 154. I will read:

In order to provide for protection and administration for lands acquired under the Weeks law, without increasing the total appropriation for the Forest Service, a deduction of $300 was made in the estimate for general expenses on each of the national forests.

Does that sound like there was a deduction? Does not that come mighty close to my statement? Three times 154 ought to be easily figured out. Why did you cut this out from the western national forests? It makes the handsome little sum of $46,200.

I am not going to make any complaint except this, that I believe in this particular forest it ought to remain the same as last year, and I hope the committee will permit it to remain.

Mr. LAMB. Mr. Chairman, I ask for a vote.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from California [Mr. RAKER].

The question was taken, and the amendment was rejected.

The Clerk read as follows:

Kootenai National Forest, Mont., $30,846.

Mr. DIES. I move to strike out the last word, for the purpose of making an observation to the House upon the progressive movement along the lines that are indicated in the amendment, and along other lines.

Mr. Chairman, I wish to bring to the attention of Congress and the country the recently expressed views of three gentlemen, each of whom is actively engaged in political propaganda and prominently in the public eye. From an examination of the political principles of these three statesmen I am led with irresistible force to the conclusion that here are three minds with a single thought, three hearts that beat as one. I refer, Mr. Chairman, to Mr. Theodore Roosevelt, Mr. W. J. Bryan, and Mr. Victor Berger. I believe these gentlemen are among the foremost enemies of free government in America to-day. They are dangerous in proportion to their intellectual strength, which, in my judgment, constitutes Mr. Roosevelt more dangerous than Mr. Bryan, and the latter less dangerous than Victor Berger.

Mr. Roosevelt recently delivered a speech at Columbus, Ohio, which he styles a charter of Democracy. Mr. Bryan hastens to place the stamp of his approval upon the worst part of the Roosevelt address. He says:

Ex-President Roosevelt's Columbus speech will stand out as the strongest he has yet delivered. The proposition to submit to the people judicial decisions on constitutional questions is of Democratic origin and is sound.

In order to come directly to an understanding of Mr. Bryan's views it is necessary to know what Mr. Roosevelt said at Columbus. Let us see what utterance it is of Roosevelt which Mr. Bryan accepts as sound Democratic doctrine. From the Columbus speech I take the following:

Lincoln actually applied in successful fashion the principle of the recall in the Dred Scott case. He denounced the Supreme Court for that iniquitous decision in language much stronger than I have ever used in criticizing any court and appealed to the people to recall the decision—the word recall in this connection was not then known, but the phrase exactly describes what he advocated. He was successful, the people took his view, and the decision was practically recalled. It became a dead letter without the need of any constitutional amendment. In any contest to-day where the people stand for justice and the courts do not, the man who supports the courts against the people is untrue to the memory of Lincoln, and shows that he is the spiritual heir not of the men who followed and supported Lincoln but of the Cotton Whigs who supported Chief Justice Taney and denounced Lincoln for attacking the courts and the Constitution.

In order to make it perfectly clear, Mr. Chairman, that Roosevelt advocates and Bryan approves an appeal from decisions of the Supreme Court of the United States, I quote from the Columbus utterance:

The position which these eminent lawyers take and applaud is of necessity a condemnation of Lincoln's whole life; for his great public career began and was throughout conditioned by his insistence in the Dred Scott case upon the fact that the American people were the masters and not the servants of even the highest court in the land, and were thereby the final interpreters of the Constitution. If the courts have the final say so on all legislative acts, and if no appeal can lie from them to the people, then they are the irresponsible masters of the people.

And again:

When a judge decides a constitutional question, when he decides what the people as a whole can or can not do, the people should have a right to recall that decision if they think it is wrong.

Mr. Chairman, I can not depart even momentarily from these statements without exposing their falsity of fact. It is but just to the sacred name of Lincoln to say that that great man never for a day in his life stood for the principles which Mr. Roosevelt announced. Mr. Lincoln came upon the theater of politics at a time when slavery was a burning question. At the height of its fury, upon the very eve of the impending conflict, the Supreme Court rendered a decision in the Dred Scott case which met a storm of applause in the South and a storm of condemnation at the North. But even in those disturbed times, when the country was in a flame of passion, Mr. Lincoln did not go to the Roosevelt extent. On the contrary, Mr. Lincoln stated that he did not propose to appeal from the decision of the court to the mob, and that he stood by the Constitution with unabated devotion. There is no more exalted example in all history of a man's devotion to the Constitution of his country than that exemplified in the person of Abraham Lincoln. Though utterly opposed to human slavery, he was yet so devoted to the Constitution that he favored a congressional fugitive-slave law to give force and effect to the barren rights of the slaveholding States under the Constitution. It is a shame, Mr. Chairman, for men like Roosevelt and Bryan to prostitute the sacred name and immortal memory of Lincoln to the uses of their seditious and socialistic heresies.

At Quincy, Ill., in 1858, Mr. Lincoln said in reference to the Dred Scott decision:

We do not propose that when Dred Scott has been decided to be a slave by the court we, as a mob, will decide him to be free. We do not propose that when any other one, or one thousand, shall be decided by that court to be slaves we will in any violent way disturb the rights of property thus settled; but we do, nevertheless, oppose that decision as a political rule, which shall be binding on the voter to vote for nobody who thinks wrong, which shall be binding on the Members of Congress or the President to favor no measure that does not actually concur with the principles of that decision. We do not propose to be bound by it as a political rule in that way, because we think it lays the foundation for spreading that evil into the States themselves. We propose so resisting it as to have it reversed if we can and a new judicial rule established upon this subject. I will add this: That if there be any man who does not believe that slavery is wrong in the three aspects which I have mentioned, or in any one of them, that man is misplaced and ought to leave us, while, on the other hand, if there be any man in the Republican Party who is impatient over the necessity springing from its actual presence, and is impatient of the constitutional guarantees thrown around it, and would act in disregard of these, he, too, is misplaced, standing with us. He will find his place somewhere else, for we have a due regard, so far as we are capable of understanding them, for all these things.

And again:

I suppose most of us (I know it of myself) believe that the people of the Southern States are entitled to a congressional fugitive-slave law; that is a right fixed in the Constitution. But it can not be made available to them without congressional legislation. In the judge's language, it is a "barren right," which needs legislation before it can become efficient and valuable to the person to whom it is guaranteed. And as the right is constitutional, I agree that the legislation shall be granted to it, and that not that we like the institution of slavery. We profess to have no taste for running and catching negroes—at least I profess no taste for that job at all. Why, then, do I yield to a fugitive-slave law? Because I do not understand that the Constitution, which guarantees that right, can be supported without it.

Mr. Chairman, I must break the unity of my discourse at this juncture in order to bring upon the stage my third actor, the Hon. VICTOR BERGER, Socialist Representative from Milwaukee. My three actors, who perform in such admirable unison, should be presented in joint appearance for the presentation of their respective views. Mr. BERGER, I may say, yields to no man, living or dead, in his desire to disrupt the Constitution and destroy the liberties of the people under a representative democracy. In his desire for a reenactment of chaos and old night, Mr. BERGER is as earnest, if not as vociferous, as the lion tamer who roars from the peaks of Sagamore Hill.

BERGER recently introduced a civil pension bill, and, fearful lest his summary transfer of the earnings of one man to the uses of another might encounter opposition in the courts, he inserted in his bill as the last section the following:

SEC. 11. That in accord with paragraph 2, section 2, Article III, of the Constitution, and of the precedent established by the act passed over the President's veto March 27, 1868, the exercise of jurisdiction by any of the Federal courts upon the validity of this act is hereby expressly forbidden.

In order that the country may know precisely what Mr. BERGER is driving at, I may say that the act of March 27, 1868, to which he refers, was a repeal of the appellate jurisdiction of the Supreme Court of the United States in certain cases. The particular case which gave rise to the passage of the act was that of Ex parte McCardle. The facts of that case, together with the principle involved, will not only illuminate BERGER's doctrine but will also aid in understanding the principles of Roosevelt and Bryan. McCardle was arrested in the State of Mississippi for a political offense during reconstruction days. He sued out a writ of habeas corpus, but was remanded to the custody of the military authorities. He appealed his case to the Supreme Court of the United States. Congress, in the then inflamed condition of the public mind, fearful that the Supreme Court would liberate McCardle, proceeded to take away from the court, by enactment, appellate jurisdiction of the case. The President promptly vetoed the bill, and Congress on the same day, with precipitate haste, passed the bill over the President's veto. Poor McCardle was a part of the vanquished and fallen minority. He sought to regain his liberty by an appeal to an impartial tribunal, but in the madness and fury of the times the representatives of the conquering majority recalled the jurisdiction of the Supreme Court of the United States and left McCardle to languish in custody.

Messrs. Roosevelt and Bryan believe in the unrestrained rule of the majority. But that is not the principles of the Democratic Party. It is not to be found among the doctrines of the Republican Party. Nowhere, sir, but in the principles of the Socialist Party can warrant be found for that damnable doctrine, which has careered mankind from liberty to despotism in every age of the world.

Mr. Chairman, I believe in majority rule, but like Washington, Jefferson, Jackson, and Lincoln, I know that majority rule, unrestrained by constitutional checks and limitations, is the most hateful, the most frightful, and the most appalling despotism which has ever oppressed the children of men. I am glad BERGER cited the McCardle case as an illustration of his purpose in seeking to strike down the courts. The people of my dear native land were the beaten and prostrate minority at the close of the Civil War. That great struggle unloosed all the fury and passion of civil combat. Many of our people believed that the victorious North would wreak unrestrained vengeance upon her fallen and helpless foe. So believing, many of our people expatriated themselves to foreign lands.

The reconstruction was, at best, a heartbreaking affair, but what would it have been, Mr. Chairman, but for the umbrage of the Supreme Court of the United States? Let us see. In the State of Missouri they wrote into their constitution that no person should vote, hold office, teach, preach, or engage in business who had sympathized with or in any way countenanced or aided those engaged in the rebellion. This law was made by the majority, in the hour of passion, in order to further crush the vanquished minority.

A preacher by the name of Cummings, who had sympathized with the South in the struggle, went right on preaching the gospel after the law was passed. He was arrested and convicted. He appealed his case to the Supreme Court of the United States, and that great bulwark of our liberties decided that the Missouri law was in violation of the Federal Constitution, which forbids ex post facto laws and bills of attainder.

Congress passed a law just after the war depriving lawyers of the right to practice their profession who had aided the South in the Rebellion. Judge Garland, who afterwards became Attorney General of the United States, had been identified with the southern cause. He challenged the power of Congress to take away his right to practice law. He laid his case before the Supreme Court of the United States, and that tribunal decided that the act of Congress was in violation of the Constitution. In the reconstruction period an effort was made to rob the school fund of Texas of a large amount of money represented in the bonds of the United States. Those who had secured physical possession of the property of the Texas school funds contended that Texas, having seceded from the Union, had thus incapacitated herself from recovering the fund. The Supreme Court decided the case in favor of Texas, and compelled a restoration of the school funds.

The Civil War set free millions of slaves and they were precipitately clothed with suffrage. Their former masters and the white people of the South were disfranchised in large numbers on account of participation in the War of Secession. The South lay prostrate, and white supremacy seemed destined to be supplanted by negro domination. The shattered remnants of southern manhood set about to restore the South to the rule of the white race. They did this in the face of an angry and victorious majority, and but for a written Constitution and an independent Supreme Court the southern cause would have been hopeless.

These, sir, are the plainly spoken truths of history. They are written in the decisions of the Supreme Court. No man can controvert them.

Mr. Chairman, passion has subsided. White supremacy in the South is as secure and unshakeable as the eternal hills, and our brothers at the North rejoice with us that it is so. They would not now have it different if they could.

To-morrow, sir, a helpless minority may be found in the North, the East, or the West. That helpless minority may consist of a section, a class, or a creed. It may be the members of organized labor, or the followers of an unpopular religious belief. But whatever it is, and wherever it may be found, it can rest secure in its rights so long as we possess a written Constitution and an independent judiciary to enforce it.

Those who are with the majority to-day may find themselves in a hopeless minority to-morrow, and in either situation they must feel their liberties more secure if safeguarded by checks and restraints from the passions and excitement of the hour.

Does any man doubt what the result would have been if an appeal to the people had been taken from the decisions of the Supreme Court sustaining the rights of the citizens of the Southern States just after the war? If those who now cry out for popular rule could have swept aside the Constitution and the Supreme Court in those dark days, what would have been the fate of the South? The consequences, sir, would have been an eternal blot upon the pages of our history.

Those who run before the crowd demanding that the "people rule" either mean nothing or they mean the majority should be allowed to rule without constitutional restraint.

They mean, if they mean anything except cheap demagogic cant, that the minority have no rights which the majority ought to be compelled by the written terms of a constitution to respect. Mr. Chairman, the people made the Constitution. They can unmake it. The people have ruled the United States since the execution of the Constitution, and they will continue to rule it to the crack of doom. They do not always rule it to please me, and I do not believe they always rule it in their own interests, but that they do actually rule it no statesman or thinker worthy the name will dare to deny.

If we are to turn away from the Republic of the Constitution and follow the false gods of Socialism, it matters little whether we do it under the flag of Roosevelt, calling himself a Republican; Bryan, calling himself a Democrat; or under BERGER, who sails the crazy ship of Socialism under its own true colors. But before we abandon our representative democracy, under the written Constitution of Washington, Hamilton, Jefferson, and Madison, let us take a closer view of the principles of the Socialist Party.

The first national platform promulgated by the Socialist Party in this country was in 1892, and in that platform was announced as a national doctrine many of the principles now advocated by those who demagogue under the specious and deceptive slogan of "Let the people rule."

In that first Socialist platform I find the following political demands:

First. The people to have the right to propose laws and to vote upon all measures of importance according to the referendum principle.
Second. All public officers to be subject to recall by their respective constituencies.

Third. Abolition of the Presidency, Vice Presidency, and the Senate of the United States.

An executive board to be established, whose members are to be elected, and may at any time be recalled by the House of Representatives as the only legislative body.

Such were the views of Socialism 20 years ago. That party has grown to be a great national force, with more than ten hundred thousand voters in its ranks, the control of many cities, and a representative in the National Congress. That representative is the Hon. VICTOR BERGER. Mr. BERGER understands the principles of Socialism better than any man in America. He is a Socialist author of national fame. I shall let him speak for Socialism through the bills he has introduced since he came to Congress. No fairer test can be conceived. These are the laws which Socialism would write upon the statute books if that party were in power.

On April 27, 1911, Mr. BERGER introduced a resolution (H. J. Res. 79) providing for an amendment of the Constitution to abolish the veto power of the President, and abolishing the Supreme Court and the Senate of the United States. This resolution proposed to constitute the House of Representatives the sole legislative power, whose enactments should be the supreme law without the right of the President to veto or any court to construe, subject only to referendum to the people upon petition of 5 per cent of the voters of three-fourths of the States.

On April 19, 1911, Mr. BERGER introduced House joint resolution 71, providing that—

The Congress shall have power, by a majority vote of both Houses, to call a convention for the purpose of revising or amending the Constitution.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. DIES. Mr. Chairman, for the first time in my life I ask unanimous consent to proceed for five minutes.

Mr. MANN. Reserving the right to object, will the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. LAMB] move to rise?

Mr. RUBEY. Mr. Chairman, I suggest that the committee rise and take a recess until 7.30 p. m., at which time the gentleman from Texas [Mr. DIES] be given all the time he wants.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will state to the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. RUBEY] that a motion to recess is not in order at this time.

Mr. RAKER. Mr. Chairman, I make a point of order on the suggestion of the gentleman. To-night there is a birthday party to be held in honor of the Speaker, Mr. CHAMP CLARK, and I want to attend. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The motion to recess is not in order. The gentleman from Texas [Mr. DIES] asks unanimous consent to continue for five minutes. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. DIES. Mr. Chairman, on January 16, 1912, Mr. BERGER introduced House joint resolution 213, providing for female suffrage.

On January 9, 1912, Mr. BERGER introduced House bill 17476, providing that the Government should establish in the city of Washington stores for the sale at cost of staple commodities to all employees of the Federal Government.

On January 31, 1912, Mr. BERGER introduced House bill 19126, providing for the Government ownership of all railroad, telegraph, telephone, and express properties in the United States. This bill proposes to condemn the physical properties of these corporations and confiscate their intangible assets. The bill also provides that Government bonds shall be issued to pay for the property not confiscated, and that in case the owners refuse to surrender the property the Government shall take it by force.

On December 6, 1911, Mr. BERGER introduced House bill 14079, providing for Government ownership and operation of all industries in the United States where such industries produced 40 per cent or more of the total in that line of industry. This bill also provided for the issuance of Government bonds to pay for such properties as were not confiscated by the terms of the bill.

On April 25, 1911, Mr. BERGER introduced House concurrent resolution 6, and May 30, 1911, he introduced House bill 10863, and as these two measures were introduced for the same purpose they should be treated as one proposition. Their purpose was to save from the clutches of the law the McNamara brothers and others who might thereafter find themselves similarly in the toils of the law. The McNamara brothers had dynamited the house of a man they did not like, and in the explosion 21 innocent workmen had been murdered. Mr. BERGER's bills proposed such amendment of the law as would protect these murderers, who afterwards confessed their crimes, from speedy punishment.

As illustrative of the principles of Socialism and of Mr. BERGER's bills to shield the McNamara brothers, I want to quote from an article in the Appeal to Reason, the organ of the Socialist Party. It was written by Eugene Debs, the Socialist candidate for President. It appeared before the "kidnaped workers" confessed to murder, when the campaign was on in the State of California. It sheds a flood of light upon the so-called campaign for "the restoration of popular government."

The quotation is in these words:

The fight at the polls this fall will center around the adoption of the initiative, referendum, and recall amendments to the Constitution. Under the provision of the recall amendment the judges of the Supreme Court of California can be retired. These are men who will decide the fate of the kidnaped workers. Don't you see what it means, comrades, to have in the hands of an intelligent, militant working class the political power to recall the present capitalist judges and put on the bench our own men? Was there ever such an opportunity for effective work? No; not since Socialism first raised its crimson banner on the shores of Morgan's country. The election for governor and State officers of California does not occur till 1914; but with the recall at our command we can put our own men in office without waiting for a regular election.

Space forbids me to describe all the BERGER bills, but as illustrating the Socialistic interpretation of the doctrine of "equal rights to all and special privileges to none" when applied to a Socialist in office, I call attention to House bill 11382, introduced by Mr. BERGER June 8, 1911. That measure, to use its own words, was—

A bill to provide an automobile for the official use of the Committee on the District of Columbia.

I need not add that Mr. BERGER was a member of that committee at the time he introduced the bill.

Mr. Roosevelt professes not to be a Socialist, and yet he has borrowed his creed from the Socialist Party. Nowhere, sir, in the platforms of the Republican or the Democratic Party can be found the doctrine which Roosevelt proclaims and Bryan approves. Mr. Bryan is much truer to the principles of socialism than Roosevelt. Bryan has openly declared for the Government ownership of railroads and has openly embraced many of the principles of socialism. Roosevelt, on the contrary, contorts the socialistic terminology, plagiarizes its principles, and proclaims them as his very own. Roosevelt seeks to walk in the path the Cæsars trod. Mr. Bryan will be content with a million new subscribers for his newspaper. Roosevelt wants to emulate the bad example of Díaz, of Mexico, and break down the constitutional barriers against presidential succession.

Mr. Bryan gives aid and comfort to Roosevelt as against the Democratic Party, which seeks to reincarnate the deathless principles of Washington, Jefferson, Madison, Jackson, and Houston. Those principles of democracy are written in the Constitution, and for them Mr. Bryan offers no word of encouragement.

Mr. Chairman, I want to turn aside from socialism and present a view of representative democracy under the Constitution. We had as well face the issue squarely. The representative Government established by the founders is on trial for its life. Socialism, whether plagiarized by Roosevelt, rebranded by Bryan, or unadulterated by BERGER, is at last and in the final analysis before the American people as a substitute for our form of government. In this conflict which shall determine the destiny of the world's remaining Republic, I gladly step into the ranks of those who shall defend the faith of the fathers.

Those great minds that conceived the Constitution were profoundly learned in the history of the world. They were familiar with the attempts that mankind had made in every age to maintain free government. They knew that these efforts had all proven failures. They knew why they had failed. Profiting by the mistakes of the past, our fathers erected this structure under the Constitution. It is not perfect. It was not perfect at the time it was erected. No perfect thing can ever proceed from the hand of imperfect man. But I do say, and every page of history sustains me, that this Government under the Constitution is far and away the best that the world has ever known. It guarantees more liberty, affords more opportunity, safeguards more rights, and admits of more progress than any Government, ancient or modern, which the children of men have ever devised. The fathers had before them in their work of formation the history of pure democracy as tried by the ancients. They perfectly knew this history. They had read with attentive mind the pathetic story of the Grecian Republic, the Republic of Rome, the Italian and Dutch Republics. All had failed.

Our fathers, careful to steer the American Republic around the rocks upon which other free governments had gone to chaos and despotism, after long, patient, and profound effort, brought forth this wonderful fabric. Our Republic has been the star of hope to the oppressed nations of the earth and the guide and pattern of all modern efforts to establish free governments.

There is not, Mr. Chairman, a single principle proposed by socialism which was not given a trial in some one of the ancient democracies and proven a hopeless and utter failure. And there has been no modern examples of republican governments from which those who propose the destruction of our Republic can draw a single lesson. The founders had it all before them.

Mr. Roosevelt and Mr. BERGER have discovered nothing new in their doctrine of the recall. Its practice and prostitution form a familiar page in the history of the pure democracies of ancient times. With that ancient device Aristides the Just was driven from power, and history informs us that there were those who gave no better excuse for their votes than that they were tired of hearing him called "the just."

I know, Mr. Chairman, that these ancient nostrums, so long ago exploded and forgotten, are just as worthless as they were in the days of their trial and failure. They are dragged forth to-day by men who seek to convert them into political assets in furtherance of their own mad ambition.

Against these worn-out cure-alls and the office seekers who seek to drag them from their dishonored tombs and set them up as a substitute for our great fabric I set the warning of Madison, called the father of the Constitution:

A people, therefore, who are so happy as to possess the inestimable blessings of a free and defined constitution can not be too watchful against the introduction nor too critical in tracing the consequences of new principles and new constructions that may remove the landmarks of power.

I do not believe with Mr. Roosevelt that popular rule will result from striking down an independent judiciary. Nor do I believe with Mr. Bryan that popular government will be made more popular by stripping the Executive of his constitutional powers. No more do I believe with Mr. BERGER that all power should be lodged in the hands of the lower House of Congress. But I do believe, Mr. Chairman—and all that there is in history confirms my belief—that the authors of the Constitution were wise and truthful in the statement that—

The accumulation of all powers, legislative, executive, and judiciary, in the same hands, whether of one, a few, or many, and whether hereditary, self-appointed, or elective, may justly be pronounced the very definition of tyranny.

I understand perfectly well, Mr. Chairman, that it is vain and unprofitable to attempt to correct the follies of Roosevelt with the authority of mere men. To his imperious mind, the generalship of Washington was provincial, Jefferson was a demagogue, Madison was a bookworm, and Andrew Jackson an upstart. But Mr. Bryan professes faith in the wisdom of Madison and Jefferson, though he follows not their counsels, and to him I commend their teachings. Mr. Madison, in discussing pure democracy as distinguished from representative government, which he helped to establish under the Constitution, said:

In a democracy where a multitude of people exercise in person the legislative functions, and are continually exposed by their incapacity for regular deliberation and concerted measures to the ambitious intrigues of their executive magistrates, tyranny may well be apprehended on some favorable emergency to start up in the same quarter.

At the time Mr. Madison penned these words he believed himself a progressive. He supposed that the reactionaries were those who wanted to turn back to the exploded theories of a pure democracy. But if Mr. Madison were alive to-day and were to give voice to these views he would be branded by Roosevelt as a Cotton Whig, and by Bryan and BERGER as "unworthy to represent a democratic constituency."

An elective despotism—

Said Mr. Jefferson—

was not the government we fought for, but one which should not only be founded on free principles, but in which the powers of government should be so divided and balanced among several bodies of magistracy as that no one could transcend their legal limits without being effectually checked and restrained by the others. For this reason that convention which passed the ordinance of government, laid its foundation on this basis, that the legislative, executive, and judiciary departments should be separate and distinct, so that no person should exercise the powers of more than one of them at the same time.

But the principles of the author of the Declaration of Independence will no longer fit the views of Roosevelt, Bryan, and BERGER, and his reference to an "elective despotism" places him at once under suspicion as being controlled by predatory interests.

In the view of Mr. Roosevelt, mankind fall into two classes, those who follow him and those who are unrighteous. With Mr. Bryan, those who are not his followers are of necessity the followers of Wall Street. And with BERGER, in the same sort, it is a case of being a Socialist or being against the human family.

The mind is confused with a sense of humor and disgust when it contemplates the Rooseveltian conception of popular rule. He wants a short ballot, so short, in fact, that he himself will constitute both head and tail of it. The effect of his doctrine is that he will trust the people to elect him if they will trust him to appoint the balance of the ticket. Bryan says that Roosevelt, "in taking this position, is on solid ground."

But do these great reformers trust the people?

Recently the country rang with a mixture of praise and condemnation of the Sherwood pension bill. But neither Roosevelt or Bryan would sufficiently trust the people to express an opinion upon the question.

Mr. Bryan is eternally admonishing other men to "trust the people," and yet he does not trust them sufficiently to inform them who he favors for President. Mr. Roosevelt does not trust the people sufficiently to tell them what his views are on the tariff question.

The question of popular rule is vitally intermixed with the immigration question. Millions of the ignorant and undesirable of Europe are swarming to our shores. Neither Roosevelt nor Bryan are willing to trust the people with their views upon this alarming situation.

Mr. Bryan has only praise for Roosevelt and only condemnation for Democratic leaders like CLARK, Harmon, and UNDERWOOD. This is probably due to the fact that Roosevelt is a candidate for everything in sight, excepting only the Democratic nomination.

Mr. Roosevelt readily vouches for the patriotism of Mr. Bryan, although he has not a word of cheer for his friend, the man he selected as his successor. This also is probably due to the fact that Mr. Bryan is not, at least, seeking the Republican nomination.

In every age of the world, Mr. Chairman, the enemies of real progress have been divisible into two classes. In the first are those who refuse to take a step forward. In modern times this class has come to be known as "standpatters." In the second class are those who believe or pretend to believe that if a cause can walk it can run, and if it can run it can fly. They are the mustang ponies in the caravan of progress, who kick while others are pulling and try to run away the moment the load starts.

Mr. Chairman, it is proposed that the socialistic tendencies of BERGER should be substituted for the democracy of Jefferson and Hamilton and Madison and Washington. Mr. Chairman, the battle is on. I do not care whether you call yourself a Republican or a Democrat. I do not care whether you sail under the socialistic banner of Roosevelt, who proposes to destroy an independent judiciary, or whether you sail under the socialistic banner of Bryan, who proposes a surrender of the old Democratic principles. Still, it is true that, face to face and man to man in this Republic, we stand upon the proposition to-day, Shall we surrender a representative democracy under the Constitution for the socialism of Roosevelt, Bryan, and BERGER?

Mr. Chairman, in view of the fact that our fathers, when they made the Constitution, had before them all of the examples of failure of free government in ancient times, and in view of the fact that Mr. Roosevelt, Mr. Bryan, and Mr. BERGER have discovered no new examples in modern times, I shall gladly take my place in the ranks of the sober defenders of the Constitution of our country against the Roosevelts and against the Bryans and against the Bergers and against the McNamaras, who rise to strike down the law and the limitations and restrictions provided in the Constitution of this United States of America. [Applause.]

I neither propose to hold back like the stolid ox nor lunge against the traces like a grass-fed mustang. I am for the steady pull that spells movement, rather than those fitful jerks which result only in broken harness.

I know, Mr. Chairman, that there are vexing problems confronting the Congress and the Nation. I know that it will require sustained public opinion and courageous statesmanship to solve these problems. I am as certain as I live that every wise reform can be worked out under a representative democracy and the written Constitution of the founders. And to these sound and enduring principles of truth I appeal from the madness and folly of the hour and from the false and foolish leaders who would steer the ship of state upon the shifting and treacherous sands of socialism. [Applause.]

Mr. LAMB. Mr. Chairman, I move that the committee do now rise.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. BORLAND, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that committee had had under consideration the bill (H. R. 18960) making appropriations for the Department of Agriculture for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1913, and had come to no resolution thereon.

EARLIMART, TULARE COUNTY, CAL.

To the Hon. WILLIAM E. BORAH,
Chairman Committee on Education and Labor,
United States Senate, Washington, D. C.

HONORABLE SIR: We, the undersigned homesteaders of the vicinity of Earlimart, hereby send greeting:

We have read with interest of your sincere endeavors in Congress in behalf of the homesteaders of the West to relieve them of the harsh exactions of the present homestead laws. For your efforts in our behalf we desire to express our gratitude and to say that we unanimously indorse the sentiment which you recently presented in your remarks to the Senate.

The territory which we occupy is dry and hot through the summer, and to make our soil productive of a living we are compelled to develop irrigating wells at a cost making them almost prohibitive to most of the people seeking the homesteads, or we are compelled to leave the homestead at certain periods to earn by wages the necessary funds to sustain our families.

We, therefore, desire to urge upon you the importance of the movement which you have instigated, and assure you that the homesteader indorses to his fullest ability your course in this matter. We sincerely hope that you may be successful with this measure in the House of Representatives as you have been in the Senate.

Thanking you most heartily for your kindly endeavors, and awaiting your command, we are,

Respectfully, yours,

W. F. BOONE.
E. M. LE CLAIR.
MARTIN BRANNAN.
VICTOR KAPPELLER.
ALEXANDER DEIRE.

D. W. SHELL.
G. WINTER.
E. A. SNOW.

Mr. BRISTOW. I ask that the bill may go on the calendar.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will be placed on the calendar with the adverse report of the committee.

Mr. BROWN, from the Committee on Indian Affairs, to which was referred the bill (S. 5060) to provide for the disposal of the unallotted land on the Omaha Indian Reservation, in the State of Nebraska, reported it with amendments and submitted a report (No. 459) thereon.

He also, from the same committee, to which was referred the bill (S. 4985) to provide for the purchase of a site and for the erection of a public building thereon at Klamath Falls, Oreg., reported it with an amendment and submitted a report (No. 463) thereon.

Mr. DU PONT, from the Committee on Military Affairs, to which was referred the bill (S. 5658) granting to the El Paso & Southwestern Railroad Co., a corporation organized and existing under the laws of the Territory and State of Arizona, a right of way through the Fort Huachuca Military Reservation, in the State of Arizona, and authorizing said corporation and its successors or assigns to construct and operate a railway through said Fort Huachuca Military Reservation, and for other purposes, reported it with amendments and submitted a report (No. 457) thereon.

Mr. DU PONT. I am directed by the Committee on Military Affairs, to which was referred the bill (H. R. 16306) to provide for the use of the American National Red Cross in aid of the land and naval forces in time of actual or threatened war, to report it with amendments, and I submit a report (No. 458) thereon.

An identical bill has passed the Senate and been sent to the House, and on behalf of the committee I enter a motion to reconsider the votes by which Senate bill 4238 was passed.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. DU PONT. I move that the House of Representatives be requested to return the bill to the Senate.

The motion was agreed to.

ARMY APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Mr. President, I desire to inter-rogate the Senator from Delaware for a moment, if he will permit me. I should like to know whether the military appropriation bill (H. R. 18956) has been received from the House of Representatives.

Mr. DU PONT. It has been received and is now being considered by the Committee on Military Affairs.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. It is now being considered by the Committee on Military Affairs?

Mr. DU PONT. Yes.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Will it be possible for the Senator from Delaware, who is chairman of the committee, to indicate about when the bill will be reported to the Senate?

Mr. DU PONT. I am afraid I could not do so definitely. The committee has decided to have some hearings on the bill, and that will necessarily take a little time. I suppose it will certainly be a fortnight before it will be reported.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Mr. President, one question further. A great many people of my State are very much concerned about the proposal to abolish Fort Brady at Sault Ste. Marie and Fort Wayne, Mich. That is a part of the military appropriation bill, as I understand it, and I have many protests against it, and some telegrams which I should like to have the privilege of reading, from prominent people at Sault Ste. Marie and in that vicinity, remonstrating against the abolishment of Fort Brady.

I desire the Senator from Delaware, the chairman of the committee, to know that I want to be heard upon the question of the abolishment of that fort and the fort at Detroit, Fort Wayne, before any final action has been taken by the committee.

Mr. DU PONT. I will say to the Senator from Michigan that I feel confident the committee will give him full opportunity to express his views on the question. The committee has not reached any conclusion or even considered that particular part of the bill.

As I understand the matter, the Secretary of War made certain recommendations, in response to an inquiry from the House, as to the military posts which could be abandoned in the future, whereupon the House provided in the Army appropriation bill that no expenditures should be made at such posts. But I think it will be a long time before a great number of them are discontinued, it being evident that before they can be abandoned other quarters must be constructed to take their place.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. I am very greatly obliged to the Senator from Delaware for this frank statement, and I want to make an equally frank one, that before the military property of the Government of the United States on our border is to be sacrificed and abandoned something besides the recommendation of the Secretary of War will be necessary to accomplish it.

Mr. ROOT. Mr. President, as this subject is up, I shall take the opportunity to say, and I invite the attention of the chairman and the members of the Committee on Military Affairs to what I say, that that bill as it came from the House and was referred to the committee is full of provisions that ought not to be there; full of provisions that ought not to be in any appropriation bill, provisions which reverse the settled military policy of the United States, provisions which, if they are ever to be adopted, ought to be adopted as the result of the deliberate consideration of Congress upon substantive measures standing by themselves, instead of being forced through under the whip and spur of the necessity of an appropriation bill. They are provisions which were born of controversy and are not the result of the deliberate judgment of anyone as to what ought to be done for the benefit of the military establishment of the United States.

I want to be heard before any action is taken upon that bill in deliberate and detailed opposition to having legislation of the most important and radical character regarding the military establishment forced upon Congress in any such way as is proposed in the bill.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Mr. President—

Mr. WARREN. Will the Senator from Michigan yield to me for a moment?

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Certainly.

Mr. WARREN. Mr. President, I want to take only a moment, for I appreciate that there is other business waiting. I am glad to hear from the efficient ex-Secretary of War on this occasion. I want to say that if we undertake to follow to a logical conclusion what has been sent to us from another place in the annual Army appropriation bill for 1913, there will soon be only two committees in Congress, and they will be the Committee on Appropriations and the Ways and Means Committee, for I do not know of any possible legislation affecting the Army that has not been loaded on or attempted to be loaded on the annual Army supply bill. If we follow this plan of all legislation being included in appropriation measures, what is there left for the other regular committees to consider?

Notwithstanding, Mr. President, that a part of this legislation-bearing appropriation bill reduces the Cavalry to two-thirds the limit that has heretofore prevailed, it is immediately followed by a bill for a Cavalry post—for three regiments more of Cavalry—and the inconsistency of this ought to be brought to a level of reasonable condition of consistency before we pass any such bills.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Mr. President, I can not permit the opportunity to pass without expressing my great joy over the accession of the distinguished Senator from New York [Mr. Root] to the ranks of those who are not yet quite ready to abandon all the fortifications of our coast. What he says about the Army appropriation bill will find a ready response in this Chamber, and I rejoice that he has given notice that he also wants to look into it further and proposes to have something to say about it before it is enacted into law.

I hold in my hand a telegram just received from the governor of our State and addressed to me, which says:

Hon. WILLIAM ALDEN SMITH,
United States Senate, Washington, D. C.:

I know you will do all in your power to prevent the abandonment of Fort Brady, at Sault Ste. Marie. It is a model post, has highest value as a sanitarium for recuperation after tropical service, and guards a Government work on the border that has cost $30,000,000.

CHASE S. OSBORN.

I also have telegrams from the mayor of Sault Ste. Marie and prominent citizens in that section of the State, who would regard it as wholly unjustifiable on the part of this Government to abolish these forts, the most conspicuous one on our border, at points where millions and millions of dollars have been expended in public works of the United States, where necessary to the people of our country.

Mr. McCUMBER. Mr. President—

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Michigan yield to the Senator from North Dakota?

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. I am not quite through; but having expressed these few observations regarding the unwisdom of the bill before the Military Committee, I only suggest that if I am obliged to be absent from the Senate when this matter comes up I should like a full hearing before that legislation is disposed of.

Mr. DU PONT. Mr. President, I should like to say to the Senator from New York [Mr. Root] that I am sure the Military Committee will welcome any exposition of his views which are founded on his experience as Secretary of War, an experience which is of the most distinguished character, and that I fully agree with him as to the inexpediency and as to the impropriety of incorporating radical military legislation in an Army appropriation bill.

Mr. McCUMBER. Mr. President, I ask for the regular order of business.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senate is on the regular order of business, which is the presentation of reports of committees.

CONTINGENT EXPENSES OF THE SENATE.

Mr. WARREN. I am directed by the Committee on Appropriations to report a joint resolution, and, as it is very short and the matter is urgent, I ask unanimous consent for its present consideration.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will read the joint resolution.

The joint resolution (S. J. Res. 83) making appropriations to meet certain contingent expenses of the Senate was read the first time by its title and the second time at length, as follows:

Resolved, etc., That the following sums be appropriated, out of any moneys in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, for the contingent expenses of the Senate of the United States:

For folding speeches and pamphlets, at a rate not exceeding $1 per thousand, $4,000.

For miscellaneous items, exclusive of labor, $40,000.

For expenses of inquiries and investigations ordered by the Senate, including compensation to stenographers to committees at such rates as may be fixed by the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate, but not exceeding $1.25 per printed page, $25,000.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the present consideration of the joint resolution?

Mr. REED. I ask that the joint resolution go over.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Objection is made to the present consideration of the joint resolution.

Mr. WARREN. Mr. President, I ask the attention of the Senator from Missouri for a moment. I have no objection to the joint resolution going to the calendar, but I wish to say that I shall be compelled to call it up soon, unless it be the idea of the Senator to allow some of the clerks and employees of the Senate to go unpaid. The matter is one that is urgent, because the contingent fund of the Senate is nearly exhausted and there are constant drains upon it for the expenses of the Senate. I will not take the time from the Senator from North Dakota [Mr. McCUMBER], who, I understand, desires to proceed with a special order, but I wish to say that I shall call up the joint resolution at the first opportunity.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, I do not want to be put in the position of simply objecting to a measure without reason. I want to examine it. I notice that there is an item there permitting the payment of $1.25 a page for printing. I do not know—

Mr. WARREN. No; the Senator is mistaken. It is not exceeding $1.25 per printed page to stenographers, which is the established rate under which we have worked for a long time.

Mr. REED. A dollar and a quarter a page?

Mr. WARREN. Not exceeding a dollar and a quarter per printed page to stenographers.

Mr. REED. For a transcript?

Mr. WARREN. It is for all the duties they are called upon to perform, the shorthand reporting, the preparation of the copy for the printers, and so forth.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, it is simply because I do not understand—and no man can understand from a mere reading of the joint resolution—whether these expenses are reasonable or not, that I ask to have it go over, without any desire at all to stop reasonably speedy action.

Mr. WARREN. I will be very glad to have the Senator examine the joint resolution, and shall seek to call it up at the first opportunity after the special orders of the day.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The joint resolution will be placed on the calendar.

Mr. WARREN subsequently said: Mr. President, I think there is no further objection to the joint resolution I reported from the Committee on Appropriations this morning, and I ask unanimous consent for its present consideration.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the joint resolution.

Mr. WARREN. The joint resolution was read this morning.

The VICE PRESIDENT. It was read this morning.

The joint resolution was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

MANEUVERING CAMP AT ANNISTON, ALA.

Mr. JOHNSTON of Alabama. I am directed by the Committee on Military Affairs, to which was referred the joint resolution (H. J. Res. 178) creating a commission to investigate and report on the advisability, of the establishment of a permanent maneuvering grounds, camp of inspection, rifle and artillery ranges for troops of the United States at or near the city of Anniston, county of Calhoun, State of Alabama, and to likewise report as to certain lands in and around the city of Anniston, county of Calhoun, State of Alabama, proposed to be donated to the United States for said purposes, to report it without amendment, and I submit a report (No. 461) thereon. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the joint resolution.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the present consideration of the joint resolution?

Mr. ROOT. Mr. President, I do not think we ought to act upon legislation of this description while sweeping measures affecting the military establishment are in the hands of the Committee on Military Affairs. I perceive that there is a tendency toward seesaw here, cutting out here and putting on there, a pretense of economy here and extravagant expenditure there, to please somebody or other. I think we ought to take a full and comprehensive view of the subject and not act by piecemeal. I therefore ask that the joint resolution go over.

Mr. JOHNSTON of Alabama. Mr. President, I only want to say to the Senator from New York that this joint resolution merely provides for the appointment of a board of officers for the purpose of reporting on this project. There is no money involved in it, and the question of establishing the maneuvering station at that place will be considered hereafter.

Mr. ROOT. Well, I would prefer to examine the joint resolution further.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, just one word. I ask the attention of the Senator from Alabama. Perhaps the matter is in correct form, but is it a House joint resolution?

Mr. JOHNSTON of Alabama. It is a House joint resolution.

Mr. GALLINGER. I notice it authorizes and directs the President to do a certain thing. I think, perhaps, that is not very happy language, and I wish the Senator would look into it.

Mr. JOHNSTON of Alabama. I will.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The joint resolution will be placed on the calendar.

REPORT ON VOCATIONAL EDUCATION.

Mr. SMOOT, from the Committee on Printing, to which was referred Senate resolution No. 243, submitted by Mr. BURNHAM on the 4th instant, reported it without amendment, and it was considered by unanimous consent and agreed to, as follows:

Resolved, That there be printed for the use of the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry 3,000 additional copies, with covers, of Senate Report No. 405, Sixty-second Congress, second session, on the subject of vocational education.

AMENDMENTS TO APPROPRIATION BILLS.

Mr. WETMORE submitted an amendment proposing to appropriate $30,000 for the improvement of the Harbor of Refuge, Block Island, R. I., intended to be proposed by him to the river and harbor appropriation bill, which was referred to the Committee on Commerce and ordered to be printed.

Mr. BAILEY submitted an amendment proposing to convey to the city of Brownsville and any charitable association of the State of Texas for park and hospital purposes such parts of the Fort Brown Military Reservation, in that State, not to exceed 50 acres, etc., intended to be proposed by him to the Army appropriation bill, which was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs and ordered to be printed.

THE STEEL SCHEDULE.

Mr. WATSON submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the bill (H. R. 18642) to amend an act entitled "An act to provide revenue, equalize duties, and encourage the industries of the United States, and for other purposes," approved August 5, 1909, which was referred to the Committee on Finance and ordered to be printed.

Mr. NELSON submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the bill (H. WITHDRAWAL OF PAPERS—OMNIBUS CLAIMS BILL.

On motion of Mr. GALLINGER, it was Ordered, That the papers accompanying S. 2440, Sixty-first Congress, entitled "A bill for the allowance of certain claims reported by the Court of Claims under the provisions of the acts approved March 3, 1883, and March 3, 1887, and commonly known as the Bowman and Tucker Acts," be withdrawn from the files of the Senate, no adverse report having been made thereon.

WITHDRAWAL OF PAPERS—WILLIAM DONNELLY.

On motion of Mr. POMERENE, it was Ordered, That the papers in the case of William Donnelly, S. 1146, Sixty-second Congress, first session, be withdrawn from the files of the Senate, no adverse report having been made thereon.

MISSISSIPPI RIVER LEVEES.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I submit a concurrent resolution, and I should like to have unanimous consent for its present consideration.

The Secretary read the concurrent resolution (S. Con. Res. 18), as follows:

Resolved by the Senate (the House of Representatives concurring), That the Secretary of War be requested to make a supplemental or additional report or estimate concerning the work of levee construction in the improvement of the navigability of the Mississippi River on the east bank thereof from Vicksburg to Bayou Sara for use in connection with S. 4353, being a bill to aid in construction of levees and embankments on the east side of the Mississippi River.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the present consideration of the concurrent resolution?

Mr. NELSON. Mr. President, it is customary to have resolutions of that kind go to the Committee on Commerce before any action by the Senate, and I think the resolution ought to take the usual course and go to the Committee on Commerce.

Mr. WILLIAMS. That would be the regular course, Mr. President; but I have asked unanimous consent for this reason, and I ask the attention of the Senator from Minnesota to it. It was through him, in fact, that I secured the information which required the introduction of the concurrent resolution. The Committee on Commerce made a request of the War Department to send them certain information in connection with the bill referred to, and the War Department replied that under the statutes of the United States they could not, after a report was once made up, make any supplemental or additional report unless requested to do so by concurrent resolution. The sole object of the concurrent resolution is to secure from the War Department the information which it possesses for the use of the Committee on Commerce in the consideration of this bill and other bills before it. I ask the Senator from Minnesota to permit the consideration of the concurrent resolution.

Mr. NELSON. I have no objection, and I shall not delay the passage of the concurrent resolution. I have simply called the attention of the Senate to the fact that such resolutions always go to the Committee on Commerce; but, in view of the information that we have already obtained from the War Department, as stated by the Senator from Mississippi, I have no objection to action on the concurrent resolution now.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, I will ask the Senator from Mississippi if I am correct in the impression that the bill the Senator has just introduced is a bill where damages are claimed—

Mr. WILLIAMS. That has nothing to do with this resolution.

Mr. GALLINGER. Precisely not; but I want to get at a matter which I will try to reach in a moment—damages are claimed which, it is asserted, resulted from the building of levees along the banks of the Mississippi River. That is the point.

Mr. WILLIAMS. There is such a bill as that which I have introduced.

Mr. GALLINGER. The Senator introduced such a bill. The Government has made appropriations to build levees, and now the citizens come in and claim that damages resulted to their property, and they are asking the Government to pay them for these damages.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. President, that question will come up, I hope, some day for consideration in the proper way. This concurrent resolution has nothing to do with that bill. This concurrent resolution has something to do with another bill—

Mr. GALLINGER. This concurrent resolution, as I understand, is a proposition to get information of the War Department that will induce us to build more levees. Is not that correct?

Mr. WILLIAMS. I want information from the War Department as to the present status of the levees constructed along this line, and the opinion of the War Department as to whether there should be construction of levees along this line, and this information the War Department said it could not give under the statute without a concurrent resolution, and therefore I introduced the concurrent resolution.

Mr. GALLINGER. I shall not object to the present consideration of the concurrent resolution, but I want to emphasize the fact that we are spending millions of dollars to protect and promote the commerce of certain streams, incidentally protecting private property at the same time, and there have been already millions of dollars of claims filed against the Government. Still we are building more levees. I think the Government should be protected in some way from being mulcted in damages for what it has done in this respect to protect navigation and commerce. I do not object to the resolution at all.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I have not wanted to argue that question now, and yet I am somewhat loath to allow what the Senator from New Hampshire has said to pass without reply. It is a matter of judgment for the Congress of the United States whether it shall build levees to promote the navigability of a stream, but if the Congress of the United States decides that it shall do so and if, as a result of its decision and its work, citizens have their property immediately destroyed, then it seems to me that it is very meet and proper for Congress to consider their claims, and that the Treasury of the Nation should respond to damages committed by the Nation. But that has nothing to do with the matter now before the Senate.

Mr. GALLINGER. I admit that, but these two measures come in juxtaposition. I am of the opinion that private property has been greatly enhanced in value by the building of dikes and—

Mr. WILLIAMS. It has been, but the private property affected in this instance has been greatly reduced in value. The properties do not belong to the same party, and the question is whether one citizen is expected to pay the damages that accrue to another through a benefit to him.

Mr. GALLINGER. I think the Government ought to look into this.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the present consideration of the resolution? The Chair hears none. The question is on agreeing to the concurrent resolution.

The concurrent resolution was agreed to.

THREE-YEAR HOMESTEAD BILL.

Mr. BORAH. I ask to have printed in the RECORD several editorials upon what is known as the three-year homestead bill. The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection? The Chair hears none.

The editorials are as follows:

[From the Portland Oregonian.]

LET POOR MEN HAVE HOMESTEADS.

While the railroads and all the commercial bodies of Oregon are uniting their energies to draw settlers to Oregon, the homestead and reclamation laws have the effect of scaring them away. The homestead law is generally understood to have been designed to give a poor man an opportunity to acquire a home and a farm, but its terms are so interpreted that only a capitalist on a small scale can avail himself of its privileges. The same statement is true in greater degree of the reclamation law.

A review of the practical working of these laws will show how their terms and the method of enforcement discourage, instead of encouraging, settlement. While the new railroads were building up the Deschutes Canyon into Central Oregon a considerable number of the laborers filed on homesteads in the surrounding country. They could have had at best but a few hundred dollars each. The first necessity was some temporary habitation, a few tools with which to build it, and some farming implements. Then a patch of land must be cleared, plowed, seeded, and fenced, for which a team is necessary.

By this time the settler's funds are probably about exhausted and he has no means, as yet, of making a living off his claim. He must earn money, but if he goes away to work on the railroad, in a logging camp, on a farm, or in a city, his claim is likely to be "jumped." Should he take this risk and escape the claim jumper, a special agent may happen to appear on the scene and make a note of his absence. Thus he must choose between risking the loss of his claim, with all the money and labor he has put in it, and remaining on his claim to starve. The consequence is that about four in five of the railroad laborers who took up claims in Central Oregon have abandoned them.

These are the handicaps suffered by a man without family. If he has wife and children, there are others. In a dry-land farming district, where the legal homestead is 320 acres, his nearest neighbor will be at least half a mile distant, and neighbors will be few and widely scattered. His wife is condemned to that deadly isolation which has produced the high rate of insanity among farmers' wives. There is no school for his children, and he must see them grow up in ignorance.

The homesteader's only escape is to sell his labor for some months for cash, which he urgently needs. Allowed to absent himself from his claim for six months each year at such times as employment is most abundant, he could earn this money. He would most probably leave his claim in the fall, secure work for the winter, move his family to the nearest town and send his children to school there. At that season he could do nothing on his claim and there would be no object in exposing his family to the rigors of winter on the open prairie and to the solitude of frontier life. But he should be allowed to leave his claim in either summer or winter, provided his absence does not exceed six months in any year, for the best opportunities for work come in the summer.

In the spring of the second year the homesteader can return to his claim, put more land under cultivation, and during the summer make much progress toward producing from it a living for him and his family. In the fall of that year he can harvest his first crop and begin getting returns on his labor. With his earnings of the second winter he may make enough progress to dispense with any outside work, but he will probably make faster progress in getting all his land under cultivation if he is allowed to work elsewhere during the dull season on the farm.

It is estimated by men who are in the best position to know that a man who moves from the Middle West, brings his family and furniture to Oregon, and takes up a homestead needs about $2,000 to pull him through until his land yields a living for the family without any outside aid, such as working for wages. While Oregon welcomes such men, and the Government should encourage them to come, the homestead law was designed for men without such equipment of capital, and should be amended on the lines of the Borah bill, in order that men with little beyond their strong arms, an elementary knowledge of farming, and a purpose to make a home on the land may not be excluded from its advantages.

The conditions attaching to settlement on land irrigated by the Government are even more onerous, for, in addition to the handicaps already enumerated, the settler must make considerable cash payments to the Government for his water right. As these cash payments give him an equity in the land similar to that of a man who has made a first payment on a house in town and who is making monthly payments, the Government should give him a patent as soon as he has made three annual payments and complied with the homestead law. He will then be in a position to borrow the money necessary for completion of improvements and the Government will be amply secured for the remaining payments by holding a lien on the land, which is yearly growing in value.

Oregon welcomes men of capital, large or small, but it also welcomes men who will invest that which is the source of all capital—labor—in the reclamation of her unpeopled, fertile plains and valleys.

[From the Sacramento Union.]

HOMESTEAD LAW TOO SEVERE.

There may be some merit in the objection raised by Secretary of the Interior Fisher to the new homestead law as proposed by Senator BORAH, of Idaho, but that some radical change in the statute in the interest of the homesteader is badly needed can not be successfully denied. The bill now before Congress, providing for the acquisition of title at the end of three instead of five years and allowing the entryman leave of absence for six months in each year, appears to be a little too drastic. It would, as Secretary Fisher argues, cut the required residence down to 18 months. In theory, however, it appears to be right in that it contemplates relieving the settler from the restriction which has bankrupted so many ambitious and deserving persons and allowed others better equipped financially to take advantage of their pioneer efforts.

Any change in the homestead law that will facilitate the cultivation of Government land and its transfer to private ownership in small parcels—quarter sections or less—will be in the public interest. To-day the public land is not for the poor man, because it requires him practically without interruption to live on his claim during the entire time within which he proves his right to it. Thus he must have sufficient money when he goes to the land to maintain himself and family, purchase stock and implements, and defray sundry other expenses until completion of proof, or for five years. Only because of illness or for kindred reasons can he leave his location without running the risk of having it grabbed away from him by some interloper more familiar, perhaps, with the technicalities of the law.

But were the statute so changed as to allow him leave of absence for a considerable period each year, he could earn the money with which to develop his claim while proving upon it in compliance with the Government's requirements.

The best way to promote settlement and tillage of the vast tracts of public land as yet untouched is to open them to the poor, to those who are looking for opportunities to make themselves independent, to those trying to become proprietors themselves, even in a modest way, and endeavoring to escape from the proprietorship of others.

It may not be well to cut the time required for proving title down to three years, but it is important that provision be made for the leave of absence very much as Senator BORAH desires. The Senator knows conditions in Idaho, where ill-advised policies of conservation have hampered the development of the State and closed opportunities that could long ago have been made productive of great wealth and progress. He is not a monopolist and can not be accused of playing to persons designing unfair acquisition of Government land. His opinion, therefore, ought to be of weight.

California, and particularly northern California, is deeply interested in any legislation affecting the homestead law. There are large tracts in this section of the State now open to entry and others that undoubtedly will be thrown open within the next few years. And California has suffered from the excessively restrictive features of the Federal statute very much as Idaho, though perhaps not to such an extent.

[From the Portland (Oreg.) Journal.]

PRISONERS ON HOMESTEADS.

Secretary Fisher is setting his own quickly gained impressions on requirements for homestead titles against the full knowledge and convictions of Senator BORAH and other friends of the settler.

Senator BORAH says three years is long enough to keep a homesteader waiting for his title. Secretary Fisher has read five years into existing laws and stands pat. Senator BORAH, knowing the variety of homesteads and that what would be possible for one would be cruelty when applied to another, proposes leaves of absence, if necessary, for the man to earn subsistence and improvement money. Secretary Fisher tightens up and would allow but four or five winter months' absence at the outside.

Secretary Fisher would demand a specific amount of cultivation before the settler gets his patent. His first action was that all the 160 acres should be cultivated before patent, and this evidently sticks in his brain. He seems to be a prairie State man and imagines that a settler can take his team and plow onto his 160 acres and break it all up in short order. It is a safe proposition that west of the Cascade Range a settler who has got his road or horse trail made, his cabin and a small barn and chicken house and pipen built, 10 acres cleared and fenced, a small orchard set out, a good garden in bearing, a few acres in oats, alfalfa, clover or vetch—that man has given hostages to fortune and should have his patent, even if he has done that work within the three years' limit.

So in other cases. Conditions will greatly vary. But the evidence of bona fide settlement and intention, not the performance of specified work, should be the test.

The Nation wants to get people onto the land. Its purpose should not be hindered by its own officials.

[From the Portland (Oreg.) Journal.]

TYING UP THE SETTLER.

Secretary Fisher seems disposed to be a cruel stepmother to the homesteader. Senator BORAH's bill, allowing a three years' homestead period and granting six months' leave of absence in each year of the three to entrymen desiring it, shows knowledge of and sympathy with the settler who has undertaken the hard task of subdividing 160 acres of land and living on it with his family. Residence surely supposes cultivation, when such residence is spread over three years, and no honest homesteader would balk at having to give proof of substantial cultivation and improvement.

But now Secretary Fisher proposes to reaffirm the five years' qualification for title after entry, though he is willing to allow actual residence to be begun at any time during the first two years. But the proof of the subsequent three years' residence should be accompanied, the Secretary considers, with more exacting requirements as to cultivation than now demanded. What his mind is on the "more exacting" requirements appears from his admission that he would favor the demand of the cultivation of the entire 160 acres before the patent was allowed to issue.

Does the Secretary imagine that the work of cultivating the entire 160 acres of a homestead could be done in 5 years, or in 10 for that matter, in 19 homesteads out of 20? An empty boon would the homestead be on such terms.

What the Government has a right to ask of the settler is proof of continuous purpose to improve, shown by such acts as would be expected from a purchaser of the 160 who intended making it his residence.

Let the Secretary spend his next fall vacation on an Oregon homestead of raw land and see how much impression he can make in a month or two of actual work. He would return East with that fellow feeling for the settler that would make him wondrous kind.

Mr. McCUMBER. On page 16 I move to strike out all of lines 5 to 8, inclusive, in the case of Simon V. Seeley, the proposed beneficiary having died since the bill was reported to the Senate.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. McCUMBER. On page 17, I move to strike out all of lines 19 to 22, inclusive, in the case of David H. Robinson, the proposed beneficiary having died since the bill was reported.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. McCUMBER. On page 20, line 5, I move to strike out the word "twenty" and insert in lieu thereof the word "twenty-five." This is the case of Lucy E. Culp, and $25 is the amount agreed upon by the committee.

The VICE PRESIDENT. That amendment has already been agreed to.

Mr. McCUMBER. It has been?

The VICE PRESIDENT. An amendment was agreed to, when the bill was first considered, making it $24.

Mr. McCUMBER. I move to make it $25.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from North Dakota to the amendment.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is that all?

Mr. McCUMBER. That is all.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Are there other amendments to be offered as in Committee of the Whole?

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I desire to amend by striking out that portion of the bill which carries the pension of Frank A. Wardwell, but I have not the lines before me.

The VICE PRESIDENT. It is at the bottom of page 21, the Secretary advises the Chair.

The SECRETARY. Beginning on line 24, page 21.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. And lines 1 and 2 on the page following.

Mr. McCUMBER. Will the Senator from Georgia again state the amendment?

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will state the amendment.

The SECRETARY. On page 21, lines 24 and 25, and lines 1 and 2 on page 22, strike out the item relative to Frank A. Wardwell.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Mr. President, while my relations with the Pension Office which at one time existed did not commend to me special pensions, yet it was not my purpose a few days ago, when I called attention to the fact that this bill really was not read, to take any part in the discussion of these special pensions, and it is not now my purpose to go elaborately into them or to resist them to the extent they could be resisted.

My lack of being predisposed to special pensions is due to the fact that it seems to me it must be utterly impossible for Congress to give proper consideration to special pensions, and the way in which this bill was being passed when I called attention to it, illustrated the utter impossibility of any real consideration of these measures by the Senate. The bill was not even being read once; a name to a page was read, and we called it read to the Senate.

Mr. President, the report of the Pensions Commissioner shows that the last Congress passed 9,649 special pension bills.

The last session of the last Congress passed 3,586 special pension bills. How difficult it must have been for the Senate and the House to have found the time in that short session to give careful or even tolerably careful consideration to 3,586 different claims. Yet the Senate passed them and the House passed them, presumably knowing what they were doing. How difficult it must have been even for the committee in a few months time to have examined carefully 3,586 claims. One Congress passed 9,649 claims. How utterly impossible, at least, how difficult and how laborious, must have been the work placed upon the committee to really examine such a number of claims.

Now, we have begun this session. We do not know how many are to be offered to us. They just come and come and come. It is the system that does not impress me favorably, the system of taking certain special men and granting special pensions to them when it must be almost impossible to investigate their different claims. The committee has no special service to go out and criticize or examine the accuracy of the ex parte statements furnished the committee. Those of us who have practiced law realize how utterly unreliable ex parte affidavits are, and yet the committee, if it had time to investigate each one of these claims, must be limited to the ex parte affidavit.

Let me go a little further. We have 22,323 special pension bills now in life, according to the report of the Pensions Commissioner the 1st of last July, costing the Government $6,601,357 a year, and nearly half of them were passed by the last Congress. That is the status of our special pension legislation.

My objection generally to this kind of legislation is that at least there is a danger that a few favored ones shall receive the increase at the expense of the many who have no hearing.

I move to strike out the particular pension that I name, and I ask that the report of the committee and the testimony with reference to that pension be read. I ask the chairman to have the testimony which was before the committee brought into the Senate, as I shall ask to have the testimony in a few other cases read. I want to illustrate, if I can, by making a comparison between the particular parties to whom pensions are given under special pension bills and the great rank and file of the soldiers who fought the war. I wish to show how these special men are being given an advantage over the rank and file of the real soldiers.

Mr. McCUMBER. Mr. President, I do not know whether the Senator from Georgia is acquainted with the method by which all the cases are examined and what is the regular procedure in the Senate Committee on Pensions.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I beg to state, if the Senator will allow me, that I am not.

Mr. McCUMBER. I desire to explain it to the Senator.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I appreciate the Senator's doing so, because I am not acquainted with it. As I said, I got into this discussion without any premeditated purpose of getting into it; it was almost accidental.

Mr. McCUMBER. There are a great many pension bills that are introduced. A great many are not considered, of course, during the session in which they are introduced. It has been my custom heretofore to notify those Senators who introduced private pension bills that I desired them to make a list of the bills, and in that list to give them to me in the order in which they wished to have them considered, calling attention to the fact that in the consideration of those cases we desire to reach those of the most exigent character first and those that demand immediate relief. That is the object of the general letter which I send out at the beginning of each session.

Mr. President, we have not only the examiners, who are a part of the clerks accorded to this committee, but in addition there is sent up from the Bureau of Pensions an expert in the examination of this character of pensions. This expert works the year around upon these cases, with what additional help we can give him during the sessions with the clerical force that is given to the Committee on Pensions. But he is at work all of the time, and he works under certain rules that have been adhered to for the most part by the Senate Committee on Pensions as to the circumstances in which pensions will be allowed and also the amount that will be allowed under given cases.

In addition to this, immediately upon a pension bill being referred to my committee we send down to the Bureau of Pensions and obtain every record in the bureau concerning the soldier, any matters that are on file in previous applications for pensions, including the examinations of physicians and their reports from the time he first made his application for a pension, after the close of the war or during the war, until the present time. So we get quite a complete history of that case. We have everything that the Bureau of Pensions would have, and we have an expert from the Bureau of Pensions, who passes upon those cases the same as he would pass upon other cases under the general law, the amounts of which are determined by the Pension Bureau.

In addition to that, we also immediately send down to the War Department and get every record we can find in the War Department concerning the service of the particular person. Having obtained those they are examined very carefully. As I said, considerable time is taken in the examination of the records from these two departments.

After that is accomplished, we then require additional evidence for the most part as to the condition of the soldier at the time—his financial and his physical condition. If any Senator knows the party personally he also gives his testimony concerning him. If anyone wants a hearing who has introduced a bill it is given him. In a great many and perhaps in most cases where a bill is introduced, the Member of the House introducing the bill or the Member of the Senate who introduced the bill has a personal acquaintance with the soldier.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Will the Senator permit me to ask him a question?

Mr. McCUMBER. Let me finish this statement, if the Senator will allow me.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Certainly.

Mr. McCUMBER. We have not, of course, all the testimony taken down concerning each individual case. Some case I may know of personally, myself, and know the conditions. When any Senator states the actual condition of a claimant for whom he introduced a bill we accept, of course, his statement, which is often in writing, as to that condition, and upon that we base our report.

I think it quite proper at this time, Mr. President, to state the general rules that govern the committee, first, in the allowance of pensions and, second, in the amount which will be allowed to each claimant.

The Senator possibly may be surprised because we do not often make any adverse reports. The reason why we do not make adverse reports is that it is generally the desire of the party introducing bills, if we can not report them favorably, to simply let them lie without taking any further steps in the matter, which, of course, so far as the claimant is concerned, is equivalent to an adverse report upon it; in other words, they are not brought before the Senate again.

My throat is rather bad, and I know the Senator will excuse me if I will ask the Secretary to read a little statement which I prepared as to the method of dealing with these cases, the amounts allowed, and the evidence that governs us in the allowance. Taking this little statement which I have prepared in connection with the rules, which every Senator can obtain on application to the committee, the general rules which operate practically as our constitution in the matter of the allowance of private pension claims, one can get a thorough idea. I merely wish to say in addition and in explanation to the Senator's question that the reports themselves can not contain all of the evidence, and we very briefly state the general features of the case in the report; but the amounts are fixed under certain rules that we consider properly governed by the testimony in the case.

I ask the Secretary to read the prepared statement.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. GALLINGER in the chair). Without objection, the Secretary will read as requested.

The Secretary read as follows:

GENERAL RULES OBSERVED BY THE SENATE COMMITTEE ON PENSIONS IN ARRIVING AT CONCLUSIONS IN GRANTING PENSIONS BY SPECIAL ACTS AND IN DETERMINING THE AMOUNT WHICH SHOULD BE ALLOWED IN EACH CASE.

"First. The beneficiary must exhaust all rights under the general pension laws through the regular channels of the Pension Bureau before the committee will take up a bill for his relief.

"Second. In each case evidence must be filed with the bill or in the Pension Office, showing that the amount allowed under the general pension laws is not sufficient to give the beneficiary the ordinary necessities of life, and that the beneficiary has no other source of income or property which would allow him to secure those necessities independent of pension.

"Third. In each case medical evidence must be submitted, showing that the beneficiary is so disabled, from causes other than vicious habits, as to preclude the possibility of his earning a support by manual labor.

IN THE CASE OF SOLDIERS.

"In cases where the foregoing requirements have been complied with, and it has been shown that the soldier had a reasonably long and faithful service, and that he is now disabled and suffering from disabilities of an extreme nature, though not requiring aid and attendance of another person, the general custom of the committee is to recommend an increase to $20 or $24 per month, depending to a large extent upon length of service and nature of disabilities.

"In case the soldier had a long service and is now destitute and suffering from disabilities of an extreme nature, such as to preclude the possibility of his earning anything for his support, such as partial blindness, partial paralysis, or being crippled by other diseases not due to service, and requiring occasional aid and attendance of another person, an increase to $30 is usually recommended.

"In case the soldier is pensioned under general laws at $12 to $17 per month for wounds or disease contracted in the service, and it is shown that his disabilities have greatly increased, partly from service disabilities and partly from other causes, an increase to $30 per month or $36 per month is recommended, and in some extreme cases an increase to $40 is recommended.

"In case the soldier is pensioned under the general law at $24 to $30 per month, showing that he is totally disabled for manual labor by reason of wounds or disease contracted in the service, and he has since become totally helpless so as to require constant aid and attendance of another person and has no other means of support than his pension, a rate ranging from $40 to $50 is sometimes recommended, the $50 rate being given only in the most extreme cases.

"In making these recommendations the service of the soldier is always considered, as well as the nature of the disability, a higher rate usually being given for a disability causing constant suffering and pain than would be given in case where the beneficiary experienced no physical pain.

"The fact that the soldier has an aged or invalid wife or helpless child dependent upon him is always considered as reason for a higher rating.

"In case where the soldier is not receiving any pension at the Pension Bureau through his inability to furnish necessary positive proof of incurrence of disability in service, but strong presumptive proof is furnished, a rating never in excess of the general law rating is recommended.

"In case of Spanish War and Regular Army service it must be shown beyond reasonable doubt that disability is due in part, at least, to service, and in such cases ratings not to exceed the general-law rating for such disabilities are recommended.

"In all cases the complete records of the Pension Office are called for by the committee and carefully gone through, and a report is obtained from the War Department as to service.

A FEW SAMPLE CASES.

[From S. 4314, Calendar No. 191, Report No. 164.]

"On page 2 of the report (S. 34), Trueman Hall: The soldier served almost continuously from June 6, 1861, to November 8, 1865. He was pensioned for gunshot wound of left side received in action. He also had disease of the eyes as result of measles contracted in the Army. He is 69 years of age, generally broken down in health from many diseases incident to old age, and is wholly incapable of performing labor, and has a dependent wife upon him. Your committee recommend $30.

"David Williams (S. 112): The soldier enlisted August 30, 1861, and served about two years. He was wounded in the right hip in action with the enemy, for which he was granted a pension. He is 71 years of age, badly disabled from disease incident to old age, and has no property of any kind. He, of course, is able to get about, and is not as badly disabled as the soldier in the preceding case, hence your committee recommend $24.

"On page 29 (S. 1699), Seth Goldthwait: The soldier served from December, 1863, to August, 1865. He is paralyzed and helpless and in destitute circumstances. He has lost the use of both legs and is unable to stand or walk, and is in every respect a helpless cripple. He is unable to prove his disabilities are due to service, and the highest pension he can get under existing law is $12. Owing to his absolutely helpless condition and his destitution your committee recommend $50.

"On page 13 (S. 571) Hannah J. Matter: In this case the widow was first married to a soldier named Dunton in 1849. She was the wife of the soldier during the entire war and until July, 1898, when he died. She married another soldier, Henry Matter, April 18, 1900. Under existing laws she is not entitled to any pension, her last marriage having taken place subsequent to June 27, 1890. She is the widow of two soldiers, and under existing laws she is not entitled to any pension. She was the wife of one soldier all through his service, and that soldier was badly injured by reason of service. In this case your committee feel justified in giving her the general law rating of $12."

Mr. McCUMBER. The Senator from Georgia will understand that I included a few of those cases. While I did not, of course, understand that anyone could follow them and fully differentiate them while they were being read, at least if anyone will take up the record after they are printed in the record, he will be able to see some of the general distinctions that we make. I presented them because they seemed to be cases taken at random which would fit the several different allowances we made. In addition to this let me—

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I should like to ask the Senator a question just there. Does the Senator not think that the cases he illustrates with are stronger than the average cases in this particular bill before us?

Mr. McCUMBER. No; they are merely the average cases that we have for the amounts. Of course one case of a class may be stronger than another case.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Does the Senator not think that they are very much stronger than the case I have just moved to strike out?

Mr. McCUMBER. I think not. If the Senator wants to know the facts, the Senator has picked out a case in which I happen to know all the facts about a pensioner. I am very familiar with the particular one to which he calls attention, and I can give the statement as I know it.

Now, I want to call the Senator's attention to another fact, so that he will see we try to guard against either excessive allowances or against partiality in allowances. I think I have incurred much hostility sometimes not only from members of the committee, but from Senators in general, because of my determination to have no precedent established that would return to plague us in the future, so that all cases that are practically the same in condition, in service, in surroundings, and so forth, would receive substantially the same amount. Of course the Senator can easily understand where we give $24 in one case and $26 in another case, that sometimes the twilight zone between the two is not always so clear as we would like to have it; there is no actual line of demarcation; and yet we have to use our best judgment. Further than that, to guard against any injustice, after our expert and the clerks of the committee have prepared briefs in the cases, they are divided among the members constituting the committee, giving to the Member from a particular State all of the cases of applicants from his State and generally those from adjoining States. Before we pass upon them, each Member is himself requested to carefully look over the reports, and with our rules before him and the information which he has before him, he is to determine whether or not any case seems to him unfair, unjust, or inequitable. If he asks that the allowance be cut down he reports immediately to the entire committee, or if he desires that it be raised, he reports to the committee, and the committee then considers it. Ordinarily, if it is a question of increasing the rate, I ask that the case be again referred or be left out of the report for another week so that I may personally re-examine the case. In this way I think we get quite thorough information.

The Senator from Georgia asks in this case that the papers be produced upon which the allowance was granted. The Senator has already understood me to say—

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Before the Senator passes to a discussion of this particular case, will the Senator allow me to ask him a question?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from North Dakota yield to the Senator from Georgia?

Mr. McCUMBER. Certainly.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. It is not possible, is it, for the committee, as a whole, to give any examination to each one of these cases?

Mr. McCUMBER. How is that?

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. The committee, as a whole, does not undertake to examine each one of these cases, does it?

Mr. McCUMBER. The several Senators on the committee examine the cases in addition to the expert and my own clerks. Then, if a question arises, the whole committee pass upon it; otherwise, if it is not questioned, the report as it is prepared by the expert and the clerks in the Committee on Pensions is adopted.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. You refer to the Senator, as a rule, the bills from his own State?

Mr. McCUMBER. And from adjoining States.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Would it not be rather difficult for a Senator to turn down an application from his own State?

Mr. McCUMBER. O, Mr. President, I think not, and I will tell the Senator why Senators who have served upon the committee for any great length of time especially understand the necessity of following a rule which shall treat all alike. I have found very little desire on the part of any member of the committee to press any particular case from his own State to the extent of asking a higher rate of pension than we have been in the habit of granting to applicants from other States. So the one reason for referring a particular pension claim to a Senator from the State where the applicant resides is that he is more likely to know the individual, and, if he does not know him, the Member of the House of Representatives at least who introduced the bill may have a personal acquaintance with him, and we have the benefit of their knowledge.

I will say to the Senator from Georgia, in answer to his request for additional papers, that some of these bills have been five or six weeks or two months on the calendar—I do not know just how long, but the calendar will show. We do not retain the records which we receive from the two executive departments, but as soon as we are through with those records in making up the reports, they are returned to the respective departments, and the records which came from the Commissioner of Pensions and those which came from the War Department have been returned in this case, as they have been in all such cases.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Mr. President, it is not the record of the Pension Office or of the War Department that I am asking for, but it is any special evidence in this case which differentiates it from the general rule upon which the committee rely. I understand that all this evidence has been turned over to the officers of the Senate, and is to be found in an adjoining office. I think that that evidence with reference to these pensions could properly be brought into the Senate; and I wish to have the report of the committee as to this particular pensioner read. Then I desire to have read, or to read myself, the special evidence that was furnished to the committee in this case.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will read as requested.

Mr. McCUMBER. I will state to the Senator that this is a case within my own peculiar knowledge, and where I myself have knowledge of a case I give it orally to the clerks who are to draw the report in addition to whatever other evidence they may have.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. But there is also evidence on file here in this case, and there is evidence filed in several other cases to which I desire to call attention, it being my purpose to call attention to the particular cases and to show, I think, that they do not fall within the rules laid down by the committee in granting pensions, but are cases that under the committee's own rules ought to be stricken from this bill. My motions to strike out these particular cases will be based upon the contention that they do not in any sense occupy a position which justifies their being differentiated from the great mass of pensioners who are not being considered.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will read the report of the committee in the case under consideration.

The Secretary read as follows:

S. 3335. Frank A. Wardwell, the applicant, served in the United States Navy as seaman on the Vandalia, Ohio, and other vessels continuously from December 2, 1864, to January 22, 1868, when he was honorably discharged. The pension he now draws is $12 per month under the service act of February 6, 1907. He formerly drew $6 per month under the act of June 27, 1890. It appears, however, from the evidence in his case that he is upward of 68 years old and that he is broken down from falling sight and hearing, rheumatism, and other infirmities incident to increasing years and is no longer able to perform manual labor for his support. It also appears that he is in need of relief and worthy and deserving of increase of pension. He is a good citizen, and the committee are of opinion that the facts in his case warrant increase of pension to $30 per month.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Now, Mr. President, I ask that the evidence turned in in this case to the Secretary's office be read, and I also ask that the other evidence in these cases be brought in, so that I can have it all ready with reference to the other special cases.

I want to say to the Senate that it is not my purpose to continue this line of discussion to the final obstruction of other business. Of course, I understand perfectly well that, if I desired to do so, the special legislation could be stopped or procedure blocked, but I do not intend to follow any such course. I only desire to indicate my conviction that these special pensions are not proper matters for legislation, because they are of a nature that it is impossible to really legislate about, that we simply take what some clerk says about them. The committee itself as a committee can not possibly examine them, and it is utterly impossible for Congress to examine each case, and that, therefore, instead of having special pension bills passed, a uniform rule should be applied to all soldiers.

I wish to indicate later on in this discussion what I think is the injustice of the present rule, discriminating, as it does, against the real soldier, the man who really fought the battles of the war, who went in at the first call and fought through the war, and who to-day in many instances receives only $12 a month, while men who practically fought not at all get $30.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will read as requested.

The Secretary read as follows:

GRAND FORKS, N. DAK., August 8, 1911.

To whom it may concern:

This is to certify that on the 16th of June, 1911, I examined Mr. F. A. Wardwell, of Pembina, N. Dak.

He came to me complaining of falling vision. On examination of his eyes I found incipient cataracts in both eyes, but the right very much worse than the left.

His vision is so poor that it is very hard for him to do much for himself, and it will get worse as the cataracts progress.

CHARLES S. MARSDEN.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Now, I should like to have read the letters written by the applicant himself, with reference to his pension, which were a part of the record in the case. I wish to use them as an indication of the clearness of his mental vision.

Mr. McCUMBER. I will read, Mr. President, all of the letter, so far as it relates to this matter. The letter is a personal letter on other matters.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I ask the Senator was not that letter filed with the Senate as part of the record in this case?

Mr. McCUMBER. I shall have to decline the invitation of the Senator to file private letters addressed to me.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I wish to ask the Senator if the letter has not already been filed, and is it not in the office of the Secretary of the Senate as part of the record in this case?

Mr. McCUMBER. No; it was never intended for the record in this case, although it might be with the letters in the case. I shall read the letter.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. One moment, Mr. President. The Senator has not answered my question. My question was, Were not the letters, one or more, from this applicant filed in the office of one of the officers of the Senate as part of the record in this case?

Mr. McCUMBER. Oh, a letter might have gone in.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Do they not now come from there?

Mr. McCUMBER. A letter might have gone in, but I will again say to the Senator that it was not a part of the record of the case. This is the letter. I will read it:

AUGUST 12, 1911.

DEAR SENATOR: I am inclosing certificate from Dr. Marsden, to go with the bill for increase of pension, which you so kindly offered to put through in my case, if possible.

That is all there is in the letter at all concerning this case—
With best wishes,

F. A. WARDWELL.

There is not another thing concerning this case in the letter.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I ask the Senator—

Mr. McCUMBER. The letter is typewritten, but I do not know, of course, who wrote it on a typewriter.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Does not the letter also disclose the fact that the applicant is the owner of a newspaper?

Mr. McCUMBER. What is that?

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Is not the letter written on the letterhead of a newspaper owned by the applicant?

Mr. McCUMBER. The letterhead says, "The Pioneer Express, Wardwell & Thompson, publishers."

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Is it not true, I wish to ask the Senator, that the applicant is the owner or one of the owners of that paper and does publish it?

Mr. McCUMBER. Yes. Mr. President, this man lives in Pembina, a little town of between 800 and 1,000 inhabitants. Mr. Wardwell, to my knowledge, has a part interest in a little paper in that little country town. If there is any paper in any one of those little country towns that is paying more than its expenses and an exceedingly meager amount besides, I do not know of it. I know that, on account of my State being wholly agricultural and there being no large cities in it, and on account of the very many small towns of 100 and 200 or more inhabitants scattered all over the State, each one thinking that it must have at least one weekly paper, we are overstocked in the paper line. The result is that this paper, from the information that I have personally obtained, has not even made living expenses in the last two or three years. I know Mr. Wardwell personally, and have known him for a great many years. He is now nearly 70 years of age and is very feeble. He had an honorable service and is almost blind.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Now, I want to ask the Senator a question—

Mr. McCUMBER. That is one of the cases.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Is it not true that the applicant never was in a battle in his life?

Mr. McCUMBER. Why, Mr. President, I do not know whether his company was in a battle or whether it was not in a battle.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Is it not true that he never was in a company, but that he was in the Navy?

Mr. McCUMBER. In the Navy; yes.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. And that he entered the service in December, 1864; that the Confederacy did not have a battleship or a ship of any kind after that; that there was not a naval fight after that; and that he never had been in a battle at all during his service?

Mr. McCUMBER. Let me ask the Senator when was Fort Fisher taken, inasmuch as he makes such broad statements?

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I can not give the exact date.

Mr. McCUMBER. It was captured January 15, 1865.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Was Mr. Wardwell in that battle?

Mr. McCUMBER. The Senator said there were no naval battles fought after Mr. Wardwell enlisted. We are not granting pensions simply because the soldier was in an actual battle. If that were true, we would probably cut down our pension appropriations very materially. We have not established a rule, in granting pensions, in the case of private pension bills any more than in the case of general pension legislation, that it is necessary to determine that the soldier was at the front in battle or that he was in a battalion that was guarding the rear, or what he was doing.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. What vessel was the soldier on—does the Senator remember?

Mr. McCUMBER. I do not know.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Does not the Senator know that the vessels on which this man served never reached Fort Fisher?

Mr. McCUMBER. I do not know what vessels he was on, and hence I do not know whether they reached Fort Fisher.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. And the Senator's committee does not know whether he really rendered any service as a soldier at all or whether he simply served on a vessel as a sailor?

Mr. McCUMBER. The department registers him as a member of the Navy for a number of years. I can not pick out from the millions of soldiers those who were in battle and those who were not. The Government has not seen fit to make a dividing line as to whether a soldier did great service because he happened to be in front or whether he happened to be somewhere else with the Army doing his duty. If he was doing his duty as a soldier in another section, he gave an opportunity for other persons to do the battle work. That is not the question, and we have not divided in the Senate Committee on Pensions on that question, and probably never will so long as the present policy is continued.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. So far as the Senator knows, the vessel on which this gentleman acted as a sailor was never in any way engaged in the war or never in any military service. That is true, is it not?

Mr. McCUMBER. I know only from the records the war vessels on which he served. If I desired to do so, and I do not desire to do so, because we are not granting pensions on that basis, but if I was taking the view of the Senator from Georgia, that would be a condition precedent, and I then would have to go into and examine the facts. But we do not grant pensions because a soldier was actually in battle or that a vessel on which a man served was actually engaged in battle at any particular time. We are simply proposing to grant the pension because he gave honorable service for a certain length of time and is now in a condition of destitution, the claimant in this case being nearly blind, and we are granting, as we usually grant under those conditions, $30 a month.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. You do not think it is a matter of importance whether he was simply a sailor on a vessel when there was not any vessels for it to fight and when it had no connection with war, except to sail around with supplies?

Mr. McCUMBER. If a man was in the Navy, enrolled as such during the Civil War, in active service on those vessels, and is recorded in the department, and is already receiving a pension under the regulations and requirements of the law, I do not go into an investigation, unless it appears directly in the papers themselves as to what the particular services were.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the motion made by the Senator from Georgia to strike out.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Mr. President, I desire to press my motion to strike out, and I wish to illustrate by the use of this pension case the want of wisdom in these special pensions. I am making no fight against pensions to men who fought in the Army. I have not picked for the purpose of objection the name of a man who really took his gun and went out and fought. I have picked here the name of a gentleman who, so far as we know, never even smelled gunpowder hunting birds. He never tramped with the soldiers at any time. He was nothing but a sailor on board a vessel when there was not any vessel to fight and when no fighting was done, so far as this record shows. He comfortably served as a sailor, just like the boys who are serving as sailors now. He was old enough to have enlisted and to have served at the front. He did not do that.

Now let us see what the report says about it.

The report says in his case that—

He is upward of 68 years old.

The Senators do not regard 68 as very old; not helpless.

And that he is broken down from failing sight and hearing, rheumatism, and other infirmities incident to increasing years, and is no longer able to perform manual labor for his support.

Does it say he ever did manual labor? It was not his business to perform manual labor. The Senator from North Dakota does not perform manual labor. This gentleman is the owner and editor of a newspaper. It is true it is in a small town, and the income from the newspaper may not be large. The fact that he is not capable of making a support from manual labor, when manual labor is not his occupation, does not affect his capacity at all. Here is a man 68 years old, who is a newspaper man, who owns his own newspaper or an interest in it, who is already getting $12 a month, who never fought at all, who never was in the war. He was on the list of sailors, but his vessel does not seem to have been in the war at all. He is singled out for an increase to $30 a month. He did not enlist in the Navy until December, 1864. The war was over in April, 1865. He was on the vessel as a sailor only for about three months before the war was over, and he is to be increased from $12 to $30 a month. He owns some property. He is already receiving $144 a year from the Government, though he served but three months while the war was going on, and then was not in front of the guns.

Mr. President, in justice to the men who really fought, I want to put into the RECORD certain figures. There are, Mr. President, 29,281 men who fought three years who receive $12 a month. There are 7,470 men who fought over four years who receive $12 a month. They were the boys who volunteered at first and went to the front. They get only $12 a month. There are 7,470 men who fought, altogether, 29,880 years who get $1,075,680, and 121,181 who only fought the same length of time who get $20,494,076.

I desire to protest against the plan of distribution of the pension money. I desire to protest in the name of the men who did the fighting against the distribution of the money to the men who did not do the fighting.

I have here a table of figures prepared by Mr. Henry S. Wells, private, company K, Twenty-seventh New York. It discloses the fact that we have on the pension roll 121,181 men who were in the service only 90 days, and those men with only 29,880 years of service, to all of them, receive $20,494,076 in pensions, while 7,470 men with the same years of service are given $1,075,680 in pensions. Here are 7,470 men who served more than 4 years in actual service who get $12 a month each, and this special pension bill proposes to place a man who does not seem to have actually done any service at all at the rate of $30 a month—$18 more than the men who really served, who volunteered and went to the front.

It does not appear why this man entered the Navy. It does not appear whether he received a bounty to enter the Navy. It does not appear whether he went into the Navy as a substitute.

The principle for which I desire to contend is this: The trouble with our present pension system is inequality of distribution. It is the utter lack of regard for actual service.

The Senator from North Dakota said that my view about the length of service being an element for consideration was not accepted by the committee—so I understood him—and probably would not be. Then, are we making the distribution fairly and properly? Are we having regard for the real elements that ought to be considered in the matter of pensions? If we are to pay a larger pension to a man who enlisted and was in the service only 60 days and perhaps never got into a battle at all and never actually did any service—if we are to pay him more for some reason than a man who volunteered at the first of the war and fought four solid years, can the system be sustained? Can it be tolerated?

I desire to submit to the Senate and through the RECORD to the country a view I have about pension distribution with reference to the soldiers of the Civil War. When it comes to the soldiers who were in the Spanish-American War, I do not think they ought to have the consideration given the soldiers of the Civil War. The Spanish-American War did not amount to much down in Cuba, and the boys who enlisted in it enlisted for a frolic. But the case of the men who really volunteered in the Civil War and went to the front and fought, and went to fight other men as brave and courageous as themselves is different from that of those who engaged in the Spanish-American excursion.

I shall express my views with regard to the Spanish-American soldiers freely, because there are just as many boys in Georgia who tried to get into that excursion as there were in any other State, and I am opposed to building up any Spanish-American pension list as the Civil War pension list has been built up. But as to the Civil War, we ought to do this: We ought to ascertain how much our total revenue will be and carefully determine what part of that revenue we can afford to give to the soldiers of the Civil War as pensions. We ought to give them all we can afford to give them out of our income. Having determined what we can give them, suppose we say we can give them $150,000,000 a year out of our income. We should then consider the question of distribution. We have already paid $4,000,000,000 in pensions to the soldiers of the Civil War.

Now, if we can give $150,000,000 a year to pensions, then the next proposition should be, how it shall be distributed. I would say take the list of men who were not citizens of the United States and are now citizens of the United States, who get about a million dollars a year, which goes abroad, men who are not citizens of the United States and who never fought for their country, but were soldiers of fortune, and I would lop off this million, not in the interest of the Treasury, but in the interest of the boys who really followed the flag as a duty to their country.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President—

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Georgia yield to the Senator from New Hampshire?

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Certainly.

Mr. GALLINGER. In the interest of accuracy I would ask the Senator if he has the amount paid in pensions to the soldiers of the Civil War? I think the Senator said $4,000,000,000. I think that is a very much larger amount than the true amount.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. It includes also the expenses of the Pension Office.

Mr. GALLINGER. Oh.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. It is $3,950,000,000, and added to the expenses of administration it makes a little over $4,000,000,000.

Mr. McCUMBER. Does this not also include all pensions—

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Not as I understand.

Mr. BRYAN. It is seventeen thousand dollars less than four billions, according to the report of the Commissioner of Pensions.

Mr. GALLINGER. Does the Senator say that that amount was paid as pensions to the soldiers of the Civil War?

Mr. BRYAN. Yes, sir.

Mr. GALLINGER. It does not correspond with some figures I have access to, but perhaps the Senator is right.

Mr. BRYAN. I think so. I do not think there ought to be any dispute about it. It is in the report of the Commissioner of Pensions.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I was speaking from memory. I have it here before me. I did not read it. The actual pensions for the Civil War paid out up to June 30, 1911, amounted to $3,985,719,836.93. The cost of administration carries it beyond four billions.

Mr. GALLINGER. Is that from the report of the Commissioner of Pensions, I will ask the Senator from Georgia?

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Yes; this is the Civil War pension list.

Mr. GALLINGER. I will say, frankly, that I knew it was a very large amount, but if these figures are correct—

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I simply take them from the report of the Commissioner of Pensions.

Mr. GALLINGER. Of course, that must be accurate, and I confess it is a much larger amount than I supposed.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. When I stated $4,000,000,000 of payments, it was under the statement of June 30, 1911. Since then the actual payment of pensions has carried the amount actually paid to Civil War pensioners to over $4,000,000,000.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Will the Senator from Georgia suspend for a moment? The hour of 2 o'clock having arrived, the Chair lays before the Senate the unfinished business, which will be stated.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I will not only suspend, but suspend until to-morrow, if the Chair please.

The SECRETARY. A bill (S. 3812) to regulate public utilities in the District of Columbia and to confer upon the Commissioners of the District of Columbia the duties and powers of a public-utilities commission.

Mr. McCUMBER. I will ask if it is agreeable to the Senator from New Hampshire, in charge of the unfinished business, to lay it temporarily aside.

Mr. GALLINGER. I can not consistently do that. I have been allowing the bill to be laid aside for several weeks. There are two Senators present who, I think, desire to address themselves to the bill or to particular amendments, and they wish to be present when the bill is considered. I notified them that to-day the bill would be up, and I hope the consideration of the bill will be proceeded with. I am sorry that I can not accommodate the Senator from North Dakota.

Mr. McCUMBER. I do not know how long those speeches will take, but if I have time I desire to say that I will again call up this same matter this day after the arguments are finished upon the unfinished business, and that on each legislative day I shall try to secure action upon the pension bills.

I wish to call the attention of the Senator from New Hampshire to the fact that we had to strike out of this same bill some five or six names of persons who have died since the bill has been reported, and taking that into consideration, with the great number of deaths that have occurred after the papers were examined, the death rate is very rapid. Having reported the bill, I simply desire to have it acted upon as soon as possible.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, I need not be warned as to the necessity of legislation in the granting of pensions in these private cases. It was my privilege to serve as chairman of the committee, a committee that does a great deal of hard work without much appreciation, and I have knowledge of the fact that these soldiers are dying at a very rapid rate. Whatever we do for them is to be at best for only a few years, and I want to err on the side of generosity rather than on the side of technicality. I will assist the Senator with the utmost of my ability to get his bill considered, and I hope he may succeed in securing relief for many of the old pensioners who I know are in dire distress. There may be cases that are not perhaps worthy in every respect; I presume that is true. I think mistakes have been made in private pension legislation. In fact, I know such was the case in some instances when I happened to be chairman of the committee.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Mr. President, I do not think under the rules that this matter can come up again to-day. I understand that the hour of 2 o'clock having arrived, the pension bill is not in order again until to-morrow.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair understood the remark of the Senator from North Dakota to be that if the unfinished business were disposed of at a reasonable hour to-day, he would then ask the Senate to again consider the pension bill.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. But it requires action again by the Senate to take it up.

The VICE PRESIDENT. It does.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I should like to suggest to the Senator that he refrain from making that effort. He well understands that I could delay this bill indefinitely, that if I insisted upon considering each one of the pensions, if I asked for a division of the subject under the rules I would have the right to insist that each one of the pensions be taken up separately.

Now, if the Senator allows this matter to go over until to-morrow without pressing it further this afternoon, I will probably have a few other pension claims that I will call attention to, and I will be able to pursue the course that I think my duty requires me to pursue without obstructing the Senate. If the Senator does not allow me that opportunity I can make the time for myself in a way that I would not like to make it. I do not purpose simply to obstruct legislation. When I have completed what I think I ought to do and the Senate votes, I will say to the Senator from North Dakota that I shall not undertake any dilatory tactics about the bill.

Mr. McCUMBER. Mr. President, I appreciate the fact that any Senator upon almost any bill, and especially upon a bill of this kind which is composed of so many items, if he feels so inclined may delay it to a great extent. I have not for one moment thought that the Senator from Georgia had such an idea in his mind.

At the request of the Senator from Georgia this matter has been delayed somewhere in the neighborhood of four or five weeks that he might say what he desired upon the bill or upon general pension legislation before we finally dispose of the matter. I have been very careful, I thought, to accord him every privilege and to conform to his desires in the matter; and after the Senator had begun his speech I thought that I was doing him a favor if I would try and hurry the matter on and bring it to the front, so that the Senator could complete it and not have to string it over several days. Therefore it was my expectation that if we could get at it again to-day the Senator from Georgia would be specially desirous of also proceeding with it to-day and finishing his remarks.

Now, I have no desire at all to press the bill to-day. If the Senator desires, and so expresses it, that he would prefer for any reason that this case should go over until to-morrow, that request is granted, and granted cheerfully, not through any threat that the Senator would delay it, because I do not think he intends to do that, but simply because I think the Senator wants to be fair in the matter and he wants to get through with it himself as soon as he can.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I did not mean my statement as a threat. I simply meant to let the Senator understand that I knew I could force the time if necessary, but I did not wish to force it.

It is true the Senator has been most courteous to me in the matter. The Senator misunderstood me when he thought I had any special speech I wished to make on the subject. I have none. I only desire to bring out fully by the consideration of some of these claims the view I have with reference to the matter.

Mr. McCUMBER. It will be understood, then, that I will not bring it up to-day, but if we have a session to-morrow I will ask that we proceed with it immediately after the conclusion of the morning business.

PUBLIC-UTILITIES COMMISSION.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (S. 3812) to regulate public utilities in the District of Columbia, and to confer upon the Commissioners of the District of Columbia the duties and powers of a public-utilities commission.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The pending question is the amendment offered by the Senator from California [Mr. WORKS]. The reading of the amendment, the Chair recalls, was dispensed with by unanimous consent. Does the Senator from California so recall it?

Mr. WORKS. It was not. I made the statement that I would ask unanimous consent that it might be dispensed with, but that has not yet been done. I now ask that the formal reading of the amendment be dispensed with, at least for the present.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, that order will be followed.

Mr. WORKS. Mr. President, I regard this as one of the most important pieces of legislation affecting the District of Columbia that will come before this session of Congress. It is a kind of legislation in which I have taken great interest. I desire to see the District of Columbia have a practical and efficient utility law. I do not believe that the pending bill if enacted will give the District such a law.

The bill has been reported from the Committee on the District of Columbia, of which I am a member. It so happened that I did not have the opportunity when the bill was before the committee to express my views upon it. For that no one was particularly or at all to blame. I suggested that I desired to offer some amendments to the bill in the general committee, when it was for that reason referred to a subcommittee to take up the matter. That subcommittee held its session and made its report without my having any notice of the fact. Therefore I had no opportunity to present my views at that time.

It further happened that when the bill came before the full committee I was then engaged in service upon another committee and was not present even at that time.

I was informed that the pending bill was prepared by the corporation counsel of the District of Columbia under the supervision and direction of the District Commissioners. In order to ascertain what I desired to know about the bill I took it up with some particularity with the corporation counsel and with the engineer member of the District Commissioners.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President—

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from California yield to the Senator from New Hampshire?

Mr. WORKS. Certainly.

Mr. GALLINGER. I do not propose to interfere with the Senator's speech more than is absolutely necessary, but did I understand the Senator from California to say that he was not present at the meeting of the committee when the report upon this bill was ordered? The Senator's memory is very defective.

Mr. WORKS. It is not defective. I was not present.

Mr. GALLINGER. The Senator was there.

Mr. WORKS. I was not. I beg the Senator's pardon; and I had no opportunity to be heard. Now, I am not casting any blame upon anybody, Mr. President, on that account. I only refer to the fact that I had no opportunity to express my views upon it, and that I am therefore called upon to do so upon the floor of the Senate.

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. Mr. President—

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from California yield to the Senator from Virginia?

Mr. WORKS. Certainly.

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. I ask the Senator from California if he was not present on more than one occasion, certainly on one, when this bill was under discussion in the District Committee?

Mr. WORKS. Yes; I said that I was present and suggested that I desired to offer some amendments, and upon that being done it was referred to the subcommittee. The Senator from Virginia is right about that.

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. I will ask the Senator another question. Did he not on one occasion say that he had a substitute, but would not press it before the committee?

Mr. WORKS. Not at all.

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. The Senator may be right, but it is strange that I should have such a contrary recollection.

Mr. WORKS. That may be so.

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. My recollection is that the Senator stated he had a substitute, but that he would not press it.

Mr. WORKS. No; the Senator is entirely mistaken. I made no such statement as that.

But, Mr. President, suppose I had; that certainly would not preclude me from offering a substitute upon the floor of the Senate. I have done so, and I am prepared to present that substitute for the consideration of the Senate.

When interrupted I was about to say that I took this matter up with the corporation counsel for the purpose of ascertaining whether this was in fact his bill or not, and I procured the statement from him that it was not the bill that was prepared by him, but that it had been changed in very material respects.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President—

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from California yield to the Senator from New Hampshire?

Mr. WORKS. Certainly.

Mr. GALLINGER. The Senator does not do me justice when he says that I said that this was a bill prepared by the corporation counsel.

Mr. WORKS. Mr. President, I did not make the statement as the Senator from New Hampshire states it.

Mr. GALLINGER. I stated specifically on the floor of the Senate that this bill was prepared in consultation with the corporation counsel; that I had given weeks and months myself to its consideration; and that the corporation counsel had been asked to make a tentative draft, which he did. The corporation counsel, I will say further, was consulted, I feel very sure, as to every change that was made in the bill subsequent to that first draft that we made and he did not object to them.

Mr. WORKS. I did not make the statement that the Senator from New Hampshire attributes to me, that he made the statement to me that the bill was prepared by the corporation counsel. I was so informed. I ascertained, as I was about to say, that this bill was not prepared by the corporation counsel in the form in which it came before the committee; that it was changed in some very material respects, I think, in vital particulars.

The fact about it was, as I understand it, that a bill was prepared by the corporation counsel in conjunction with the District Committee, and prepared with a great deal of care; that one of the bills was presented in the House and the other was given into the hands of a Senator to be introduced in the Senate. I am offering here as a substitute to the pending bill the bill prepared by the corporation counsel with the full approval of the District Commissioners and presented to the House.

I desire now, Mr. President, to point out as clearly as I may be able to do the differences between the pending bill and the substitute that I have offered.

My first disposition with respect to it was to offer certain amendments to the bill, but I found that they were so numerous and so important that I conceived it would be better to present an entirely new bill to the Senate for its consideration, and I have done so, taking the bill that was introduced in the House, with very slight changes on my part.

Now, referring to section 3 of the bill, that section provides in the substitute that I am presenting to the Senate—

That every public utility doing business in the District of Columbia having tracks, conduits, subways, poles, wires, switchboards, exchanges, works, or other equipment shall, for a reasonable compensation, permit the use of the same by any other public utility whenever public convenience and necessity require such use.

That section is amended in this way: As amended or as introduced here it provides that it shall "permit the temporary use of the same or a permanent use for a distance not exceeding 2,500 feet," which the Senate will see is a very important change in the bill. In the first place it provides for only a temporary use of the track of another railroad company and reduces the length of the use to 2,500 feet where it is permanent.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President—

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from California yield to the Senator from New Hampshire?

Mr. WORKS. Certainly.

Mr. GALLINGER. The provision as it is in the bill was prepared in the presence of the corporation counsel and agreed to by him.

Mr. WORKS. It does not matter, Mr. President, whether it was or not; the question is here for the Senate to determine what the form of the bill shall be.

There is a further proviso inserted in this section of the bill:

Provided, however, That the tracks, lines, or conduits or other facilities of any existing street railway, electric lighting company, telegraph or telephone company shall not be used or occupied by any other company or public utility unless by contract duly made between the parties interested and approved by the commission, except as hereinbefore provided.

The hereinafter provision is that if they shall fail to agree, that then action may be taken by the District Commissioners; but the District is driven to wait until the corporations have endeavored to arrive at some conclusion and enter into a contract before the commissioners can act, all of which, I think, is a very material change in the bill as it was prepared by the corporation counsel.

Then I come to section 6 that was contained in the bill that was prepared by the corporation counsel and which I offer here as a substitute:

Sec. 6. That the commission shall ascertain, as soon and as nearly as practicable, the amount of money expended in the construction and equipment of every public utility, including the amount of money expended to procure any right of way; also the amount of money it would require to secure the right of way, reconstruct any roadbed, track, depots, cars, conduits, subways, poles, wires, switchboards, exchanges, offices, works, storage plants, power plants, machinery, and any other property or instrument not included in the foregoing enumeration used in or useful to the business of such public utility, and to replace all the physical properties belonging to the public utility. It shall ascertain the outstanding stock, bonds, debentures, and indebtedness, and the amount, respectively, thereof, the date when issued, to whom issued, to whom sold, the price paid in cash, property, or labor therefor, what disposition was made of the proceeds, by whom the indebtedness is held, so far as ascertainable, the amount purporting to be due thereon, the floating indebtedness of the public utility, the credits due the public utility, other property on hand belonging to it, the judicial or other sales of said public utility, its property or franchises, and the amounts purporting to have been paid, and in what manner paid therefor, and the taxes paid thereon. The commission shall also ascertain the gross and net income of the public utility from all sources in detail, the amounts paid for salaries to officers and the wages paid to its employees, and the maximum hours of continuous service required of each class. Whenever the information required by this section is obtained it shall be printed in the annual report of the commission. In making such investigation the commission may avail itself of any information in possession of any department of the Government of the United States or of the Commissioners of the District of Columbia.

Mr. President, that section as it was in the original bill has been entirely eliminated, and I regard it as one of the most important sections in the bill. In lieu of that and a section which also appears in the bill which I offer as a substitute is a simple provision that the commissioners shall ascertain and determine the value of the plants. Everyone knows who has had anything to do with the question of fixing rates, if we take that alone as a matter to be considered, that there are various things to be taken into account in determining what rates shall be fixed besides the mere question as to the present value of the plant.

But there is something more involved, in this matter of the regulation of railroad companies, than the mere question of rates. There is the question as to the issuance of bonds and stock, and as to the wages that are being paid to the employees. All of those matters ought to be controlled by a bill of this kind, and all power that should be given to the utilities commission for the purpose of determining those questions is absolutely eliminated from the bill.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President—

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from California yield to the Senator from New Hampshire?

Mr. WORKS. I do.

Mr. GALLINGER. As the Senator has read section 6, which he proposes to have inserted in the bill, I think it but fair that the Senator should read section 6 as it is in the bill, and not say in a general way that it only provides for the valuation of property offhand.

Mr. WORKS. I so stated it.

Mr. GALLINGER. Will the Senator read the entire section?

Mr. WORKS. Certainly I will.

Mr. GALLINGER. I think it ought to go in his speech.

Mr. WORKS (reading):

Sec. 6. That the commission shall, whenever it may deem it desirable to do so—

That is one weakness in the bill to which I desire to call attention. It is not a direct and positive requirement that this thing shall be done, but leaves it to the discretion of the commission as to whether it shall be done or not—

Sec. 6. That the commission shall, whenever it may deem it desirable to do so, investigate and ascertain the fair value of the property of any public utility subject to the provisions of this act and used by it for the convenience of the public. For the purpose of such investigation—

Now, bear in mind, the only purpose for which this investigation can be made is that of ascertaining the present value of property, which, I say, is entirely inadequate.

For the purpose of such investigation the commission is authorized to employ such engineers, experts, and other assistants as may be necessary. Such investigations shall be prosecuted with care and thoroughness, and the results thereof reported to the District Committees in Congress.

Every such public utility shall furnish to the commission from time to time, and as the commission may require, maps, profiles, contracts, reports of engineers and other documents, records, and papers, or copies of any and all of the same in aid of such investigation, and to determine the value of the property of such public utility used for the public service; and every such public utility is required to cooperate with the commission in the work of the valuation of its property in such further particulars and to such extent as the commission may reasonably direct. The commission shall thereafter, in like manner, keep itself informed of all extensions and improvements or other changes in the condition of the property of the said public utilities and ascertain the fair value thereof, and from time to time, as may be required for the regulation of public utilities under the provisions of this act, revise and correct its valuation of the property of such public utilities. To enable the commission to make such changes and corrections in its valuation, every public utility subject to the provisions of this act is hereby required to report currently to the commission changes in its property, and to file with the commission copies of all contracts for changes and improvements at the time same are executed.

Whenever the commission shall have completed the valuation of property of any such public utility and before such valuation shall become final, the commission shall give notice in the manner prescribed in this act for the service of copy of an order upon such public utility, to the company or companies owning or operating such property, stating the valuation placed upon the several lines of roads or classes of property of the said company used by it for the convenience of the public, and shall allow the company or companies a reasonable time in which to file a protest of same with the commission. If no protest is filed within such time such valuation shall become final. If notice of contest is filed by any such public utility, the commission shall fix a time for hearing of the same, and shall proceed as promptly as may be possible to hear and consider any matter relative and material thereto which may be presented in support of said protest. If after hearing any contest of such valuation under the provisions of this act the commission is of the opinion that the tentative valuation is incorrect, it shall make such changes as shall make the same a fair valuation of such property and shall issue an order to make such corrected valuation final. All final valuations by the commission shall be prima facie evidence of the value of said property in proceedings had in pursuance of this act.

Mr. President, it will be seen that the criticism I passed upon that portion of the bill is sustained by reading the section to which the Senator has referred. It simply limits the power of the commission to the value of the property at the time. It absolutely excludes any power on the part of the commission to inquire into the issue of bonds, the amount of stock that is issued, or any of the other things that are included in the section that I first read and which is in the substitute.

With respect to that particular matter, I want to call the attention of the Senate to an extract from the decision of the Supreme Court of the United States bearing upon the question as to what should be taken into account in determining what rate should be allowed a street railroad or other corporation. I refer to the case of Smyth v. Ames (169 U. S., 466 and 546):

We hold, however, that the basis of all calculations as to the reasonableness of rates to be charged by a corporation maintaining a highway under legislative sanction must be the fair value of the property being used by it for the convenience of the public. And in order to ascertain that value the original cost of construction, the amount expended in permanent improvements, the amount and market value of its bonds and stock, the present as compared with the original cost of construction, the probable earning capacity of the property under particular rates prescribed by statute, and the sum required to meet operating expenses are all matters for consideration, and are to be given such weight as may be just and right in each case. (Smyth v. Ames, 169 U. S., pp. 466, 546.)

Under this bill, if it becomes a law, there is no power given to inquire into any of these things. Every element that goes into the question of the determination of the rates that are to be charged is absolutely eliminated from the bill.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President—

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from California yield to the Senator from New Hampshire?

Mr. WORKS. Certainly.

Mr. GALLINGER. Does not the Senator think that under this decision, which was, I think, delivered by Mr. Justice Harlan, all those things would be taken into account by the commission?

Mr. WORKS. There is no provision for it, and, in fact, the Senator struck it out of his bill. I took it from that that it was at least understood by him that it ought not to be in.

Mr. GALLINGER. The Senator did not strike it out with any such purpose at all. Instead of that provision, the committee, in its wisdom, took the statute of Maryland, which is the last statute upon this subject, I believe, which seems to be fair, and which is working splendidly in that State, and substituted the provision of that statute. That is what the committee did.

Mr. WORKS. I do not know whether it is the Maryland statute in that form or not, but if it is, Mr. President, I am prepared to say that there is no comparison between the two statutes—one of them being the statute of Wisconsin and the other the statute of Maryland—because the Wisconsin statute, so far as it relates to that particular question, is a practical and efficient law and the other is not. I see no reason why the Senate of the United States should accept for the District of Columbia a law which is inefficient and impracticable in place of one that is efficient and can furnish the means of determining the questions that ought to be determined.

Proceeding further with the quotation—

We do not say that there may not be other matters to be regarded in estimating the value of the property. What the company is entitled to ask is a fair return upon the value of that which it employs for the public convenience. On the other hand, what the public is entitled to demand is that no more be exacted from it for the use of a public highway than the services rendered by it are reasonably worth.

I desire in this connection to call attention to something that was said in his annual address by President James F. Oyster, of the Washington Chamber of Commerce. In commenting upon the law that it was supposed was going to be enacted by Congress relating to the subject of public utilities, he said:

When the street railways of a city, or the gas company, or the telephone company undertook a plan of reorganization, the public utilities commission would "be on the job." It would investigate carefully and fairly whether the capitalization represented actual present values or merely ambitions, hopes, and water.

Under this bill which we are asked to pass no such inquiry as that can be made—

It would not grant its approval to the plans of the promoters until it had examined the properties, placed upon them a conservative valuation, investigated thoroughly the necessity for the issuance of stock or bonds, and determined that the proposition squared with proper business standards, did not impose upon the investor, and did not violate the rights of the public.

With such safeguards, there would be no difficulty in determining later on whether the utility in question was making such profits as to warrant a reduction in rates to the consumer, improvement in the quality of the product or extension of the service. The utilities commission would be able to pronounce with authority whether universal transfers, for example, would mean practical confiscation of corporate property or merest equity to the consumer; and the commission (unlike the newspapers) would actually be able to enforce its decision. The law should, I think, explicitly provide that the commission must endeavor to maintain the lowest rates that the courts would sustain.

The commission should be charged with the duty of investigating and making public the cost of construction and equipment of every public utility, the cost of replacement, the amount and character of indebtedness and by whom held, the income and expenditures in detail, and that most important matter in connection with accidents—the maximum hours of continuous service. The commission would place a value upon the properties of every public utility. Each would render uniform accounts as prescribed by the commission, these to be annually examined and audited by the experts of the commission. "Control over capitalization," it is generally admitted by experts, "can not be made effective unless it is combined with public supervision over the accounting of such corporations."

That is the idea of the president of the Chamber of Commerce of this District as to what should be covered by a bill of this kind, but the pending bill does not authorize any such investigation as is mentioned in this address.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President—

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from California yield to the Senator from New Hampshire?

Mr. WORKS. Certainly.

Mr. GALLINGER. It is but fair to say that the Chamber of Commerce of Washington has indorsed this bill by resolution.

Mr. WORKS. I am coming to that. So has the District commission, but at the same time expressing its preference very decidedly for the bill that I have offered as a substitute.

As I said awhile ago, the matter to be covered by a bill of this kind is not merely the question of determining rates that are to be charged by corporations of this character. There are a great many other very important things over which a commission of this kind should have control, and I undertake to say that the pending bill in its present form absolutely denies to this commission the power and right to make an investigation for any purpose except that of fixing rates. Does the Senate want that sort of legislation limited in that way? Do you suppose the people of the District of Columbia will be satisfied with that kind of legislation?

Going along now to section 17, which is the section that has been commented upon here to some extent, relating to the subject of depreciation, as the pending bill stood at the time I presented the substitute bill this provision had been inserted in the bill that was prepared, as I have said, by the corporation counsel. The section provided:

SEC. 17. That every public utility shall carry a proper and adequate depreciation account.

Right at that point I propose to add the following words—

Mr. CRAWFORD. Mr. President—

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from California yield to the Senator from South Dakota?

Mr. WORKS. Certainly.

Mr. CRAWFORD. I suggest the absence of a quorum. It seems to me more Senators ought to be present to hear the discussion.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from South Dakota suggests the absence of a quorum. The Secretary will call the roll.

The Secretary called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Bacon	Curtis	Nelson	Smith, Ga.
Bankhead	Dillingham	Nixon	Smith, Mich.
Borah	du Pont	O'Gorman	Smith, S. C.
Bourne	Foster	Oliver	Smoot
Brandeggee	Gallinger	Overman	Stephenson
Bristow	Gardner	Page	Swanson
Brown	Johnston, Ala.	Paynter	Thornton
Burnham	Jones	Perkins	Warren
Burton	Lea	Pomerene	Watson
Clark, Wyo.	Lippitt	Rayner	Works
Crawford	McCumber	Root
Cullom	Martin, Va.	Shively
Cummins	Martine, N. J.	Simmons

Mr. LEA. I desire to state that the senior Senator from Tennessee [Mr. TAYLOR] is necessarily absent.

Mr. SMOOT. I wish to announce that my colleague [Mr. SUTHERLAND] is necessarily absent from the city.

Mr. JONES. I desire to state that my colleague [Mr. POINDEXTER] is absent on account of the sickness of his mother. I will let this announcement stand for the day.

Mr. WATSON. I desire to announce the absence of my colleague [Mr. CHILTON] on account of personal illness.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Forty-nine Senators have answered to the roll call. A quorum of the Senate is present. The Senator from California.

Mr. WORKS. Mr. President, I was calling attention to section 17 of the substitute that I have offered, which, with some differences, is section 15 of the pending bill. This section provides:

That every public utility shall carry a proper and adequate depreciation account.

Right here, at this point, this clause was inserted in the pending bill:

Whenever the commission, after investigation, shall determine that such depreciation account can be reasonably required.

Which, in my estimation, weakened the bill very materially; but since that time, by amendment offered, I believe, by the author of the bill, this section has been entirely eliminated from the bill. It may be remembered by Senators who are here that the Senator from Iowa [Mr. CUMMINS] objected to this section of the bill on the ground that it provided that the amount found as depreciation should be placed in a fund to be used for the purpose of making additions and extensions to the roads. I entirely agreed with the Senator from Iowa upon that proposition, because the ratepayer should not be called upon to pay an amount that would be sufficient to add to or extend the plant of the corporation. That should be done by the corporation itself and charged up to capital; but the rates must take care of the depreciation. It is an important matter to be considered in this question of the fixing of rates, because the rate should be so fixed as to pay the operating expenses, meet the depreciation in the plant, and return to the corporation a reasonable amount upon the value of its property furnished for the use of the public. For that reason, in preparing the substitute, I made this change:

All moneys in this fund may be expended in keeping the property of such public utility in repair and good serviceable condition for the use to which it is devoted.

As the pending bill stands, with that section stricken out, there is absolutely no requirement upon the part of the corporation to keep any account of its depreciation. There is no means provided by which the commissioners can determine anything about the matter of depreciation, and often it is absolutely impossible for them to so examine the plant as to determine that question. Why that section should be eliminated from a bill that is intended to give the District a public utility commission I do not understand. I regard it as a very important provision of the bill, and think it should remain there.

Senators may observe, if they take the time to read and compare the bill and the proposed substitute, that running all through the pending bill it has been changed from the original bill, prepared as I have stated, by inserting the word "reasonable." In some cases that is perfectly proper, but there are other cases where the word "reasonable" is used in just about the sense that we have complained of lately with respect to a decision of the Supreme Court of the United States. In my judgment, that word should not be used in the law itself in many places where it has been inserted.

There is another change in the bill. My proposed substitute contains a section, section 39, which reads:

SEC. 39. That upon its own initiative or upon reasonable complaint made against any public utility, that any of the rates, tolls, charges, time and conditions of payment, or schedules, or services, or any joint rate or rates, schedules, or services, are in any respect unjustly discriminatory, etc.

A similar section is in the pending bill, but for some reason there was stricken out of it the words "time and conditions of payment." That may be under some circumstances a very important matter, because the "time and conditions of payment" may themselves be such that it is proper that the utility commission should inquire into them and see that they are not unjust or burdensome to the public who are using the roads. I do not see why that change should have been made.

In section 55 the clause that I am about to read was stricken out in committee upon the report, as I remember, of the subcommittee on that subject. Subsequently, as I shall show directly, an amendment was made upon the floor of the Senate at the suggestion of the author of the bill partially restoring this clause. This is the clause that was stricken out:

It shall be unlawful for any street railroad corporation, gas corporation, electrical corporation, telephone corporation, telegraph corporation, or other public-utility corporation, directly or indirectly, to acquire the stocks or bonds of any other corporation incorporated for or engaged in the same or similar business as it is, unless authorized by existing law or as it may be authorized in writing to do so by the commission, and every contract, transfer, agreement for transfer, or assignment of any such stocks or bonds without such statutory or written authority shall be void and of no effect.

That provision was contained in the bill as it came from the hands of the corporation counsel; but it was stricken out in the Senate Committee on the District of Columbia. I shall, after a little, refer to the report giving the reasons why that was done.

Mr. OLIVER. Mr. President—

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from California yield to the Senator from Pennsylvania?

Mr. WORKS. Certainly.

Mr. OLIVER. I will state, Mr. President, that that provision was stricken out because it is already a part of the organic law of the District of Columbia. The members of the committee were just as ready and anxious as is the Senator from California to continue that provision; but it is already provided for by law and is entirely unnecessary in the framing of this measure.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President—

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from California yield to the Senator from New Hampshire?

Mr. WORKS. Certainly.

Mr. GALLINGER. The Senator from Pennsylvania is right, so far as the District Code is concerned. I will ask the Secretary to read the substitute section I offered a few days ago, which was agreed to by the Senate.

Mr. WORKS. I will say to the Senator that I have that section here, and I am going to read it in just a moment.

Mr. GALLINGER. Very well.

Mr. WORKS. I said awhile ago that an amendment had been made since that time, and I will read it.

Mr. GALLINGER. If the Senator is going to read it, the Secretary need not do so.

Mr. WORKS. I will take that up in a moment. Replying to what was said by the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. OLIVER], I had expected to take this up a little later, but, in view of what he says, I call attention now to the report of the committee bearing upon that particular question. They strike out this particular part of the bill and it is noted at the bottom of page 1 of the report:

The Code of Law for the District of Columbia provides as follows: "It shall not be lawful for any company to use any of their funds in the purchase of any stock in any other corporation."

Mark the language. The law to which the Senator from Pennsylvania refers does not forbid the holding of the stock or the bonds of any other corporation at all. It simply provides that the corporation shall not expend its funds for the purpose of buying any such stock or bonds, which is entirely inadequate, as the Senate must see. So that, evidently, the fact that there was another law existing upon that subject did not justify the striking out of the specific language with respect to that important feature of the bill.

Now I call attention to the amendment referred to by the Senator from New Hampshire that was inserted here upon the floor of the Senate after that provision had been stricken out by the committee and so reported to the Senate.

It shall be unlawful for any street railroad corporation, gas corporation, electrical corporation, telephone corporation, telegraph corporation, or other public-utility corporation, directly or indirectly, to acquire the stock of any other corporation unless authorized by existing law, and every contract, transfer, agreement for transfer, or assignment of any such stock without such statutory authority shall be void and of no effect.

It may be remembered by the Senate that an amendment to that amendment was offered by the Senator from Texas [Mr. BAILEY] covering the ownership of stock; but I want to call the attention of the Senate to the fact that this amendment does not cover the bonds of the corporation at all. It simply provides that one corporation shall not hold or own the stock of another corporation, but it may own all of its bonds under the provisions of this proposed law. There is no prohibition against that at all; it applies only to the stock. Now, everybody knows that one corporation may absolutely control and dominate another by the ownership of its bonds, and that phase of it is not covered by this amendment.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President—

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from California yield to the Senator from New Hampshire?

Mr. WORKS. Certainly.

Mr. GALLINGER. Of course, the holders of the bonds would have no voting power, and I do not see how they could dominate a corporation because they own its bonds.

Mr. WORKS. Well, the Senator from New Hampshire may not see how that would be done, but my experience is that if one corporation is able to own and control the bonds of another corporation, it has a pretty tolerably strong grip upon the management and control of the corporation itself. Of course, it is not able to vote, but it is able to control votes by the very fact that it has in its hands practically the destiny of the corporation.

Section 59 of the proposed substitute is entirely omitted from the pending bill. That section reads:

SEC. 59. That if it be alleged and established in an action brought in any court for the collection of any charge for gas or electricity that a price has been demanded in excess of that fixed by the commission or by statute no recovery shall be had therein, but the fact that such excessive charges have been made shall be a complete defense to such action.

Of course that is not a very important matter, but I do not see any particular reason why that provision, made for the benefit of the patrons of these corporations, should be stricken out, because it might have considerable influence in the prevention of overcharges.

There is another section in which the words "time and conditions of payment thereof" were included in the bill which I offer as a substitute that have been stricken out in the pending bill:

SEC. 64. That all rates, tolls, charges, time and condition of payment thereof, schedules, and joint rates fixed by the commission shall be in force and shall be prima facie reasonable until finally found otherwise in an action brought for that purpose.

I am not able to see why that amendment should be made in the interest of the corporations. There is a short provision inserted in section 66 that to me is somewhat objectionable. It relates to the subject of appeals. I am not going to read the whole section, but it provides that an appeal may be taken in matters decided by the commission within 90 days. That is the bill as originally prepared and as I now offer it. These words are added in the pending bill:

Unless the time for appeal has been enlarged by order of the commission.

This matter of allowing an extension of time is often an evil, and if 90 days is given for an appeal in a case of this kind it seems to me amply sufficient.

Now, I come to section 64 of the substitute, the corresponding section so far as it goes being section 71 of the pending bill. That section provides:

SEC. 71. That no public utility shall hereafter issue any stocks, stock certificates, bonds, mortgages, or any other evidences of indebtedness payable in more than one year from date, until it shall have first obtained the certificate of the commission showing authority for such issue from the commission.

Other changes made in this section are not very important, but there is stricken out of it all that I am now about to read, which provides the means by which the commission may determine these very things that they are called upon to determine. The substitute bill that I have offered provides, following immediately after what I have already read:

The proceedings for obtaining a certificate of such authority from said commission and the conditions of its being granted by said commission shall be as follows:

(a) In case the stocks, certificates of stock, bonds, mortgages, or other evidences of indebtedness are to be issued for money only, the public utility shall file with the commission a statement, signed and verified by its president and secretary, setting forth: First, the amount and character of the proposed stocks, certificates of stock, bonds, mortgages, or other evidences of indebtedness; second, the purposes for which they are to be issued; third, the terms on which they are to be issued; and, fourth, the total assets and liabilities of the public utility in such detail as the commission may require. The commission may also require the public utility to furnish any further statements of fact or evidence that it may deem pertinent to the inquiry. The commission shall thereupon determine if such proposed issue be necessary to the proper conduct of the business of such public utility, and if it shall find said proposed issue necessary, and not prejudicial to the public interest, it shall prescribe the amount at par value and the terms of such issue, and it may thereupon make a certificate to said public utility stating the amount, character, purposes, and terms on which such stocks, certificates of stock, bonds, mortgages, or other evidences of indebtedness may be issued.

(b) That in case the stocks, certificates of stock, bonds, mortgages, or other evidences of indebtedness are to be issued partly or wholly for property or services or other consideration than money, the said public utility shall file with the commission a statement, signed and verified by its president and secretary, setting forth: First, the amount and character of the stocks, certificates of stock, bonds, mortgages, or other evidences of indebtedness proposed to be issued; second, the purposes for which they are to be issued; third, the description and estimated value of the property or services for which it is to be used; fourth, the terms on which it is to be issued or exchanged; fifth, the amount of money, if any, to be received for the same in addition to such property, services, or other consideration; and, sixth, the total assets and liabilities of the public utility in such detail as the commission may require. The commission may also require the public utility to furnish any further statements of fact or evidence that it may deem pertinent to the inquiry. The commission shall, if it deem such proposed issue necessary to the proper conduct of the business of such public utility, and not prejudicial to the public interest, determine, according to its best judgment, the true value of the property, services, or other consideration for which it is proposed to issue such stocks, certificates of stock, bonds, mortgages, or other evidences of indebtedness. The commission may thereupon issue a certificate to the said public utility setting forth the amount, character, purposes, and terms of such proposed issue on the part of the public utility, and further, particularly, the true value of the property or services, as found by the commission, for which, in whole or in part, such issue is proposed to be made, and a description in detail of such property and services: Provided, That no such stock or certificates of stock, for whatsoever issued, shall be disposed of at less than par value, and no other evidence of indebtedness, for whatsoever issued, be disposed of at less than 90 per cent of its par value. Any such stocks, certificates of stock, bonds, mortgages, or any other evidences of indebtedness issued by such public utility for and in return for property or services which shall be valued in excess of that found by the commission shall be void.

That portion of the section provides a means by which the commission may determine whether it shall certify that the corporation may issue the stock or bonds that it asked for. Leaving that out of the section, as has been done by the pending bill, there are absolutely no means provided by which the commission may determine that question.

Mr. GALLINGER. The Senator is not happy in his language. The Senator says it is left out in the bill. The provision the Senator read is in the bill reported by the Committee on the District of Columbia, and the additional verbiage is the verbiage of the Senator taken from another statute. It never appeared in this bill, and hence was not left out of this bill.

Mr. WORKS. When I referred to the fact that it was left out of the bill I meant, as I have explained more than once, that it was left out of the bill that was prepared by the corporation counsel.

Mr. GALLINGER. It was left out upon the statement of the corporation counsel, that it was unnecessary, and that the commission would have that authority anyway.

Mr. WORKS. As the Senator from New Hampshire has several times said that the corporation counsel consented to this and consented to that and that he and a member of the District Commission were present and consented to these things, I think I am free to say that the corporation counsel told me in express terms that he was not satisfied with the omissions in the bill, and that a member of the District Commission, who was present at that time, told me exactly the same thing; that there were a number of things he protested against—

Mr. GALLINGER. The chairman has not any recollection of anything of that kind happening at any time.

Mr. WORKS. I should not have mentioned it if it had not been for the fact that the Senator from New Hampshire stated several times since I commenced this argument what was the attitude of the corporation counsel and the District Commission with respect to the bill.

Mr. GALLINGER. I have stated it with absolute accuracy. I was present at meeting after meeting with the corporation counsel, and I know precisely what happened.

Mr. WORKS. My information on that subject comes from the two gentlemen mentioned. I am not vouching for the accuracy of their statement as against that of the Senator, of course. I do know, however, what they said to me.

Now, going down a little further, sections 76, 77, 78, 79, and 80 of the bill prepared by the corporation counsel have been eliminated from the bill as it is now before the Senate. Those sections provide:

Sec. 76. That no public utility shall declare any stock, bond, or scrip dividend or divide the proceeds of the sale of any stock, bond, or scrip among its stockholders.

That is, to my mind, a very important provision, a provision that forbids a corporation to use its stock or bonds in the way of dividends, and why that was left out I do not understand. It is a provision that should be there, and which should be enforced.

Sec. 77. That no public utility shall issue any stocks, certificates of stock, bonds, or other evidences of indebtedness secured on its property in the District of Columbia for the purpose of any reorganization or consolidation in excess of the total amount of the stocks, certificates of stock, bonds, or other evidences of indebtedness then outstanding against the public utilities so reorganizing or consolidating, and no such public utility shall purchase the property of any other public utility for the purpose of effecting a consolidation until the commission shall have determined and set forth in writing that said consolidation will be in the public interest, nor until the commission shall have approved in writing the terms upon which said consolidation shall be made.

Does anybody doubt that that is a proper and reasonable provision in the matter of the control of these corporations, that they should not be allowed to reorganize or issue their stock or bonds in excess of the valuation of the property they own?

Sec. 78. That no public utility shall apply the proceeds of any such stock, certificates of stock, bonds, or other evidences of indebtedness to any other purpose or issue the same on any less favorable terms than that specified in the certificate issued by the commission.

Sec. 79. That all stocks, certificates of stock, bonds, and other evidences of indebtedness issued contrary to the provisions of this act shall be void.

Sec. 80. That any public utility, or any agent, director, or officer thereof, who shall, directly or indirectly, issue or cause to be issued any stocks, certificates of stock, bonds, or other evidences of indebtedness contrary to the provisions of this act, or who shall apply the proceeds from the sale thereof to any purposes other than that specified in the certificate of the commission, shall forfeit and pay into the Treasury of the United States, to the credit of the funds of the District of Columbia, not less than $500 nor more than $10,000 for each offense.

All these sections have been eliminated. To my mind they are exceedingly important provisions in the interest of the District of Columbia and should remain in the bill.

Section 91, as it appeared in the bill prepared by the corporation counsel, is omitted from the pending bill. That section provided:

Sec. 91. That the commission shall have power, when deemed by it necessary to prevent injury to the business or interests of the public or the business or interests of any public utility of the District of Columbia, in case of any emergency, to be judged of by the commission, to temporarily alter, amend, or, with the consent of the public utility concerned, suspend any existing rates, schedules, and order relating to or affecting any public utility or part of any public utility within said District. Such rates so made by the commission shall apply to one or more of the public utilities in said District, or to any portion thereof, as may be directed by the commission, and shall take effect at such time and remain in force for such length of time as may be prescribed by the commission.

I, of course, do not know upon what theory that section was omitted. It seems to be a proper provision in the matter of rates within the control of the commission.

I come now to section 86. Section 95 of this substitute corresponds with section 86 of the pending bill. It is provided in the pending bill for the compensation of the corporation counsel or district attorney, and it is provided that he shall have the right to select and employ such special counsel as he may desire. In this proposed substitute I have stricken out that provision. I do not believe that the corporation counsel should be allowed to select special counsel. This Government has spent millions of dollars for special counsel employed by the Attorney General. I do not believe in anything of that sort. This Government should supply the Attorney General with all the help he needs and pay them proper salaries. The worst kind of evil comes from employing special counsel. I am opposed to it, and for that reason I have changed not only the provision in the pending bill, but a like provision contained in the substitute I offer.

Mr. GALLINGER. On that point, Mr. President, if the Senator will allow me, this is a bill for the District of Columbia. It is not a governmental bill. It is not a bill or a law like the interstate commerce law, and the provision is that those who are charged with the conduct of legal matters in the District shall have jurisdiction over this question.

I do not see, either, how, when the Senator complains about special counsel employed by the Department of Justice, he is going to improve the matter if he allows the Department of Justice to provide special counsel. An appropriation of money is made for the purpose of carrying out this law in good faith, and the corporation counsel is given jurisdiction over the legal proceedings, and he necessarily will want help, and provision is made that he shall employ such assistants as he finds it necessary to employ. That is all there is to it.

Mr. WORKS. I object to that portion of the bill on general principles; I do not care whether it relates to the Attorney General of the United States or the corporation counsel of the District of Columbia or any other prosecuting officer of the Government. I do not believe the door ought to be opened to special counsel without limit, to be employed at the instance of the officer whose duty it is to perform these duties. If he has not help enough, the District of Columbia in the one case or the National Government in the other should supply him with the necessary help. I do not know whether it is true, as the Senator from New Hampshire suggests, that he has not ample force now to do everything required to be done under this bill. He may not have. I do not know.

Mr. GALLINGER. It is the opinion of the commissioners and of the corporation counsel that he has not ample force for that purpose.

Mr. WORKS. I presume that is true. If he needs help it should be provided and not result in the employment of special counsel.

Now I come to the last section of this substitute, which is to me something entirely new. It originated, I believe, with the Commissioners of the District of Columbia. They regard it as quite important. It is a sort of general provision giving the commissioners power and jurisdiction at all times to look after and control the conduct and affairs of the corporations. It is something that, so far as I know, has never been carried into any bill of this kind. I submit it for the consideration of the Senate. It is section 106 of the substitute, which provides:

That it shall be the duty of the commission in fixing and determining rates, in directing extensions and improvements, and in general when making requirements under the provisions of this act that involve expenditures by or lessen the receipts of public utilities, and notwithstanding any other of the provisions of this act, having in mind the public interest, to require the utmost of the public utility that will not trench upon its constitutional right to earn a fair net return upon the fair value of its property used for the convenience of the public.

That provision is proper enough. The only question in my mind is whether with the provisions contained in the substitute the commission is not given the power asked for by this specific provision, but certainly it would not have that power by the provision of the pending bill. That is one reason why I complain of it.

Mr. President, reference has been made to the reports made upon this bill by the District Commissioners. For that reason I desire to call attention to those reports. There has been a report made upon both of these bills, one of them by the commissioners relating to the bill as it was introduced in the House, and one relating to the bill as it was introduced by the Senator from New Hampshire in the Senate.

I call attention first to the report which was made upon the pending bill. I am not going to read it all, but I desire to read some parts of it to show what the estimate of the commission is of the bill itself. They say:

The commissioners, after a careful study of the whole subject and after exhaustive researches by the corporation counsel, from whom they have received most valuable advice, are of the opinion that the bill under consideration will in a general way—

Now, mark that language—

The bill under consideration will in a general way satisfactorily solve the problems of the control of local public utilities.

That is just about equivalent to saying that the commissioners are willing to accept this bill if they can not get anything better.

They invite attention to the following remarks, however, as they may be suggestive to the committee of the advisability of a very few minor changes in the text of the bill.

Those "few very minor changes" constitute a very modest suggestion to the Senate that something may be done to perfect the bill.

A bill with a similar end in view was introduced in the House of Representatives on December 21, 1911 (H. R. 16565).

That is the bill I have offered here as a substitute.

The essential differences between the Senate and House bills are as follows:

(1) The Senate bill, section 6, adopts in a modified form the Maryland provision for valuation. The House bill, sections 6 and 7, adopts the Wisconsin provision. According to the Senate bill the "fair value" is to be ascertained. The House bill requires that there be ascertained, in addition to the fair value, the investment cost, and the cost of reproduction. Now the Supreme Court, in an opinion by Mr. Justice Harlan in the case of Smyth v. Ames, has declared that among other elements entering into the fair value, which it states is "the basis of all calculations as to the reasonableness of rates," are the original cost of construction and "the present as compared with the original cost of construction." In other words, it would seem that the Senate and House bills attain the same end in the matter, although by slightly different methods. The House bill has the advantage of being more specific. The Senate bill has the advantage of greater elasticity.

These two provisions in this bill do not reach the same result by any means. They are altogether different. The Maryland law that has been adopted in the pending bill gives no power or authority whatever to investigate the question as to the original cost; that is absolutely eliminated from the bill; and the power to do anything by which they may determine the actual value is lacking.

(2) With respect to stock and bond issues, controlled in sections 70, 71, 72, and 73 of Senate bill 3812, and in sections 73, 74, 75, 76, 77, 78, 79, 80, and 81 of House bill 16565, again it may be said that the House bill adopts the Wisconsin provision and is very specific. The Senate bill, though less specific as to the manner of control, appears to confer upon the commission ample power to exercise all control that the House bill contemplates.

The commission is mistaken with respect to that matter. There is no provision in the pending bill by which that can be done. I have pointed out to the Senate that the very provision in one of these sections which provides the means for ascertaining these things is stricken out and eliminated from the bill.

(3) House bill 16565, in the third paragraph of section 100, makes provision for universal transfers. Senate bill 3812 omits such a provision, but on the other hand a bill known as Senate bill 3813, introduced by Senator Gallinger simultaneously with his public-utilities bill, contains a provision for universal transfers.

That is not a matter of very much importance, because it is pending before the House now, through a bill which has already passed the Senate:

(4) Section 3 of House bill 16565 provides under certain conditions for the use by one public utility of certain specified properties belonging to another. Senate bill 3812 limits the permanent use of the specified properties to "a distance not exceeding 2,500 feet." Inasmuch as the properties mentioned in both bills are not all logically to be limited by such a linear dimension, the redrafting of the limitation in the Senate bill will doubtless seem necessary to the Senate committee. If it shall seem best to insert any limitation whatever, and if it be desired that such limitation refer only to the tracks of street railway companies, then it is suggested that no limit less than 3,000 feet be adopted.

(5) The last section of the House bill has no counterpart in Senate bill 3812. It appears to be the purpose of this section to direct the commission in unmistakable terms to utilize in the interest of the public all of the power conferred upon it, while at the same time protecting the public utilities from despoliation. This section appears to sum up very well the essential principle of regulation. Moreover, it may give some not unfair advantage to the commission if the reasonableness of any rate it may have fixed should become a subject of controversy before a court of law. It is not believed that any similar section has been embodied in any other public-utility law, but the commissioners can not see how the addition of it could otherwise than strengthen and improve the Senate bill.

The commissioners believe that a public-utilities commission would arrive at practically the same result for all interests concerned, whether the Senate or House bill were enacted into law, assuming that universal transfers were required in either case, and that any limitation upon the use of one company by another were stated at 3,000 feet or a greater distance.

The commissioners can see no reason why, in violation of the act of 1878, the expenses of the commission should be borne by the District alone. They recommend that the bill be amended so as to provide that appropriations for the use of the commission shall be on the half-and-half plan.

The commissioners most urgently request the enactment into law of Senate bill 3812, with such minor changes as the Senate committee may see fit to make.

They have suggested these changes. While they call them minor changes, they are changes that go to the very heart of this question and are vital and important to the enactment of the right sort of utility law.

Now, turning to the report that was made upon the House bill which is offered here as a substitute, the language of the commissioners in approving that bill is quite different. They say:

The commissioners, after a careful study of the whole subject and after exhaustive researches by the corporation counsel, from whom they have received most valuable advice, are of the opinion that the bill under consideration will in a general way satisfactorily solve the problem of the control of local public utilities.

There is no qualification to that report upon the bill. They approve it without qualification. In the other report they say that the bill is satisfactory in a general way, and then go on to point out in what respect it is defective.

Mr. President, I have undertaken as best I could to point out the differences between these two bills. I am quite sure that the Senator from New Hampshire is desirous of having the same kind of bill enacted that I am.

Mr. POMERENE. Mr. President—

The VICE PRESIDENT. Will the Senator from California yield to the Senator from Ohio?

Mr. WORKS. Certainly.

Mr. POMERENE. I did not hear all of the Senator's argument, and, with his permission, I should like to ask him a question. Do I understand the Senator to say that the Senate bill does not give to the commission any authority whatsoever or control of the stock or bond issues?

Mr. WORKS. Yes; it does in a general way, but there is eliminated from the bill as it was originally drafted the means by which that may be done.

Mr. POMERENE. Are there any provisions in the Senate bill limiting the purposes for which stock and bonds may be issued?

Mr. WORKS. No; I understand not.

Mr. POMERENE. Do I understand the Senator to say that the disposition of the proceeds of the sale of bonds and stock would be left entirely to the discretion of the board of directors of the public-utilities commission?

Mr. WORKS. It does so by omitting any provision giving control over it.

Mr. GALLINGER. Would not the Senator add that it is largely left to the discretion and authority of the commission rather than to the board of directors?

Mr. WORKS. That may be true in a sense, though there is no provision in the bill, as I understand it, by which the commission is given any power to determine that question or any means by which it can be done. The general authority given in the bill possibly may be sufficient for that purpose, but there are provisions which have been omitted from the bill as it was originally drawn that would give ample control over all these things.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Mr. President—

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from California yield to the Senator from Georgia?

Mr. WORKS. I do.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. The Senator speaks of the way in which the bill was originally drawn. Does he mean as originally submitted to the Senate?

Mr. WORKS. The inquiry of the Senators show that they must not have been here during a part of the time I have been discussing this measure.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I was called out, and that is the reason why I asked the question.

Mr. WORKS. The original bill, I will say to the Senator from Georgia, that I refer to is the bill that was prepared by the corporation counsel under the supervision and direction of the District Commissioners, and the bill that was introduced in the House.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, to be accurate—

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from California yield to the Senator from New Hampshire?

Mr. WORKS. I do.

Mr. GALLINGER. The Senator should say it was prepared upon the suggestion and request of the chairman of the District Committee.

Mr. WORKS. I think that may be so. I am quite sure, as I said awhile ago, that the Senator from New Hampshire is seeking just what I am with respect to this matter. I think it is true that he took the initiative with respect to the matter. But, as I understand it, the bill was prepared originally by the corporation counsel under the direction and the advice of the District Commissioners, and that is the bill I have offered here as a substitute. When I say the original bill I refer to that measure.

Mr. REED. Mr. President—

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from California yield to the Senator from Missouri?

Mr. WORKS. Certainly.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, I want to preface my remarks by apologizing because I have not been able to be here during the Senator's remarks. I want to ask the Senator what provision there is made in this bill, or in any other bill, for the payment by the public-service corporations of the city of revenues to the city.

Mr. WORKS. There is no provision made in this bill so far as I remember. I do not think that phase of it is covered at all.

Mr. REED. I should like to inquire of the Senator from New Hampshire, with the permission of the Senator from California, whether the public-service corporations of the city pay any portion of their income or revenues into the Public Treasury?

Mr. GALLINGER. The street railroads of the District pay 4 per cent of their gross receipts. The gas company pays 5 per cent of its gross receipts. The other corporations pay in about the same proportion.

Mr. REED. Do they also pay their taxes in addition?

Mr. GALLINGER. They pay taxes on their real estate and their personal property.

Mr. REED. So that I may understand, let me ask do they—

Mr. WORKS. The Senator from New Hampshire, I understand, does not mean to say that that is provided for in this bill.

Mr. GALLINGER. Not at all. That is the general law. It is not provided in this bill. It is not necessary.

Mr. WORKS. It is not necessary that it should be provided for here.

Mr. GALLINGER. No. The taxes paid by the public utilities of the District of Columbia, I think it has been universally conceded, are very liberal taxes. There is a report, made here recently upon a resolution that the Senator from Idaho [Mr. HEYBURN], I think, introduced, which gives the exact amount paid by each public utility.

Mr. REED. Will the Senator tell me approximately how much the street railway companies pay in gross to the city?

Mr. GALLINGER. In a general way I can do so, but I will send for the report and give it to the Senator very definitely. I think that one corporation pays, in addition to its ordinary taxes, something like $79,000 a year. It may be a little larger or a little less, but I can get the report and put it in the RECORD at this point.

Mr. REED. The Senator has sent for the report?

Mr. GALLINGER. I have sent for a report made upon a resolution that the Senate agreed to, which I think was introduced by the senior Senator from Idaho [Mr. HEYBURN], calling for that information. It was submitted here a few days ago and was printed. I will get it. It gives the exact amount of taxes paid by each public utility in the District. I think we can have it in a moment.

Mr. REED. One further inquiry. Of course, most of us are somewhat unfamiliar with these regulations in the District. You say they pay taxes upon their real estate and what other property? Are they taxed, as the ordinary concern is, upon all of their property, or simply upon real estate?

Mr. GALLINGER. That is the law, as I understand it.

Mr. REED. Do they pay any tax on their franchises?

Mr. GALLINGER. They pay no tax on the franchise, I apprehend.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, I will state my reason for the inquiry. I simply wanted to know whether these companies are contributing what they should contribute to the Public Treasury.

Mr. GALLINGER. I have been connected with the Committee on the District of Columbia, and I say it to my regret, for 21 years. This matter has been given very serious consideration by business men on that committee. The late Senator from Michigan, Mr. McMillan, took the matter up, and I think I am absolutely correct in saying that the present rate of taxation was fixed by Senator McMillan in a bill that was passed by the Senate. I have the report here, for which I sent.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, through the courtesy of the Senator I will receive this information in due course, and I will not take the time further.

Mr. GALLINGER. Right here I will say to the Senator that I will ask the Secretary to read it, because the print is very small.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, the Secretary will read as requested.

Mr. WORKS. If the Senators had given me five minutes more, I think I would have been ready to surrender the floor.

Mr. GALLINGER. Then I will ask that it be put into the RECORD, if that will satisfy the Senator.

Mr. WORKS. I have no objection to having it read, if that is the desire.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, it will be inserted in the RECORD.

The matter referred to is as follows:

Mr. REED. I apologize to the Senator from California. I thought he had concluded his remarks when I rose to ask a question.

Mr. WORKS. No apology is necessary.

Mr. OLIVER. Mr. President, before the Senator from California closes, I should like to have him give something of a statement with regard to the demand or the necessity for legislation of this kind, not that I am opposed to the legislation, because I am in favor of it, but I should like to be enlightened as to the hardships under which the inhabitants of the District suffer by reason of the abuse of power or exorbitant charges on the part of the public utilities of the District. If the Senator is informed on that subject I should like to have him give such information as he has in his possession before he closes his remarks.

Mr. WORKS. Mr. President, I want to say in the beginning that I do not regard this bill as being as radical or drastic as the Senator from Pennsylvania seems to think or as newspapers have tried to make it appear.

Mr. OLIVER. I did not allude to it in that way.

Mr. WORKS. I understood the Senator from Pennsylvania to refer to it in that way.

Mr. OLIVER. Oh, no; I meant—

Mr. WORKS. Then I beg the Senator's pardon.

Mr. OLIVER. I meant in regard to the necessity of any legislation on the subject. I simply ask for information.

Mr. WORKS. Mr. President, with respect to that matter, I am probably not as familiar with the conditions in Washington as the Senator himself. I have been content, so far as that feature of it is concerned, to rely upon the District Commissioners. They say that it is absolutely necessary and they need it badly in this District, and they have been insisting for a long time that some legislation of this kind should be enacted. Personally, I do not know what the necessities for it are, but I have acted upon the suggestion of the commissioners themselves; and the Senator from New Hampshire, I think, who has been very active in bringing about legislation of this kind, recognizes the necessity for some legislation on the subject. He may not be willing to go as far as I do. He may regard these provisions as unnecessary and drastic. I do not so regard them. But we may differ about questions of that kind. I think we do agree entirely that there should be some reasonable legislation along these lines. That is my only desire, Mr. President, so far as this bill is concerned. I have no personal interest in it one way or the other. I believe in this kind of legislation for the regulation of utility corporations. I think we should have regulations of that kind in the District of Columbia. My only purpose is to secure a bill that will accomplish that result in a reasonable and proper way.

Mr. OLIVER. Mr. President, I should like to take a few minutes of the time of the Senate.

In addressing my inquiry to the Senator from California, I did not intend to allude to either his substitute or the bill proposed by the committee as drastic in its nature, but I want to elicit some information as to the real necessity in the District of Columbia for legislation of this sort. I was a member of the subcommittee which passed upon the bill, and I am cordially in favor of it, but I am not strongly impressed with the absolute necessity for any legislation of this kind. It was with a view of ascertaining the necessity for it or the demand for it that I interrogated the Senator from California.

I know, Mr. President, that when the universal-transfer bill, which we passed here a short time ago and which is now pending in the House, becomes a law, any man can ride from any one part of the District to another for a nickel. I have in my house here in Washington a telephone service consisting of a line of four branches, for which I pay less than half the amount that I pay in Pittsburgh for a line with only three branches in my residence there. I also know of another instance. In the little town in which I live in the summer in Canada, where I have still smaller service, I pay 50 per cent more for it than I pay for the service here in Washington.

I do not believe that there is any strong, necessitous demand for legislation of this kind in the District such as there undoubtedly is in the different States. The inhabitants of many of our States have for years been oppressed by exorbitant railroad rates and by the discrimination in rates from one district or one town as against another. The necessity for such legislation in the States has existed and is being satisfied by legislation passed year after year. There is no such strong necessity for it in the District, but whatever evils may exist I think will be cured by the bill as proposed by the committee. If it is found from experience that the provisions need to be strengthened, they can be added to from time to time.

But there is danger, in passing legislation of this kind, of overdoing it, of discouraging men from investing their money in these public-utilities concerns. I do not believe that we ought rashly to rush into legislation which is calculated to retard progress in such affairs or to keep men of capital from putting their money and their time into these enterprises and prevent giving to them the benefit of their experience.

I think the bill, as reported by the committee, is fully as drastic and as severe as it ought to be made. If this should prove not to be the case, it can be amended from time to time, because the tendency of the times is not certainly toward leniency in such matters but toward strictness.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, I will occupy but a moment.

First, I will state for the benefit of the Senator from Missouri [Mr. REED], who properly asked a question about taxation, that one of the railroad corporations of this District pays $100,000 in taxes on the railroad property and $11,000 on personal estate, making $111,000; and the other corporation, known as the Washington Railway & Electric Co., which controls the small corporations that were consolidated with it a few years ago, pays taxation to the amount of $100,000 a year. It has been always considered that the taxes paid were as high as they ought to be, and I believe that they are.

Mr. President, I have believed that there ought to be a bill regulating the public utilities corporations of the District of Columbia, and in good faith and in all earnestness, and in all honor, I have undertaken to bring about that result. As early as June, 1911, I introduced a bill and followed it up by having consultations with the corporation counsel and the commissioners and others, giving a great deal of time to its consideration, weeks and weeks of time, indeed. An unfortunate circumstance called me to my home in July and I did not return during the remainder of that session.

At the beginning of this session it was taken up again, and a great many hours of earnest effort were put into the consideration of this bill. It is true that the bill is not precisely as the corporation counsel first drafted it, but the corporation counsel was consulted at ever stage and agreed substantially to the changes that were made.

It was not desirable to have everything in this bill. I submitted it to Commissioner Lane, of the Interstate Commerce Commission, with the suggestion that he should look it over, and his only comment was that it was too long; that there was too much in it; while if we had put in what the Senator from California has suggested to-day, in addition to what there is in the bill, it would have been interminably long. Commissioner Lane said that he had not time to give it the consideration he would like, but he looked upon it as a bill that accomplished precisely the result that was aimed at.

Now, Mr. President, that is all I care to say.

Mr. CUMMINS and Mr. REED addressed the Chair.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from New Hampshire yield the floor?

Mr. GALLINGER. I yield to the Senator from Missouri, who, I think, desires to interrogate me.

Mr. REED. Just a question as to the amount of revenues paid on the 4 per cent basis. The Senator gave us the amount of the taxes. I want to get the total revenue.

Mr. GALLINGER. I will give that to the Senator in a moment. We will take, for instance, the Capital Traction Co.

Mr. REED. I want to get the aggregate of all the railroads. Can the Senator give it separately or together?

Mr. GALLINGER. I have made a calculation here. It was somewhat hurried, but I think it is almost entirely accurate. It appears that the Capital Traction Co. pays a tax of $100,000 on the assessed value of the property. In addition to that it pays a tax on personal property amounting to something over $11,000. The other corporation, which practically controls all the other railroads of the city, pays a tax of $61,000 and about $39,000 personal tax, making in one instance a gross tax of $111,000 and in the other of $100,000.

Mr. REED. That includes the 4 per cent that they pay?

Mr. GALLINGER. Yes; it includes the 4 per cent.

Mr. REED. Can the Senator answer me one further question? What is their mileage, substantially?

Mr. GALLINGER. That appears in a hearing, but I have not it at hand at the present time. The Washington Railway & Electric Co., while its receipts are probably not more than one-half those of the Capital Traction Co., has a much greater mileage. I should say offhand that the mileage of that company is 250 miles, but I am not sure as to that.

While I am on my feet I think it is proper I should say—because it is forgotten even by Senators—that while in almost every city of the country a 5-cent fare is paid, and the commission in Massachusetts has made a recent report recommending that it shall be increased to 6 cents in certain cities of that State, here we get six tickets for 25 cents, and the difference between six tickets for 25 cents and a straight 5-cent fare to the people who use these railroads amounts to something over $700,000 a year, which goes to the benefit of the traveling public.

When I go to New York, Boston, Philadelphia, Baltimore, I pay my nickel fare. In Washington we pay 4½ cents; and, as I said, the difference between a nickel fare and six tickets for a quarter amounts in the aggregate on all the railroad lines in the District to between $700,000 and $800,000, which goes into the pockets of the public. That ought not to be lost sight of.

Mr. REED. Mr. President—

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from New Hampshire yield further?

Mr. GALLINGER. I yield.

Mr. REED. It is on another matter, but in regard to railroad rates. Is it not true that in business houses they are required to take their telephones upon what is known as measured service and pay a certain amount per call?

Mr. GALLINGER. I do not know. I will say to the Senator that that is an absolute requirement. They have that system in operation here as elsewhere, but I do not know that they are not permitted to take them upon the annual scheme. I am not confident as to that in business houses. The measured rates here are very low for telephone service.

Mr. REED. If I am not interrupting the Senator—

Mr. GALLINGER. No.

Mr. REED. I want to say in regard to this contribution to the public revenue by the street railway companies of Washington that it is about one-half of the amount contributed in the city in which I live, although that city proper has a much smaller population than Washington, and adding to that city Kansas City, Kans., which is commercially a part of it and to which the street railway company makes a contribution exactly similar to the one it makes in Kansas City, Mo., I think the contribution here is about one-third of the amount that is paid there.

Mr. GALLINGER. May I make a suggestion to the Senator? I do not know for a certainty that it is so, but because of the fact that the corporations in the District of Columbia are the creatures of legislation they are not permitted to extend their lines ad libitum if they are disposed to do it. We have denied the privilege of their going on a great many streets. I have been in cities, and the great city of St. Louis, in the Senator's own State, is an illustration where the city is gridironed with railroads. May it not be that in Kansas City there are more railroads and a much larger investment than in Washington? I do not know how it is. I merely suggest it as a possibility.

Mr. REED. Of course, if a railroad had to run more miles of track to carry the same population its net receipts would be less than if it carried that same population on a few miles of track.

Mr. GALLINGER. That would not necessarily follow. We have great sections of the city of Washington where, in my judgment, there ought to be railroads, and where the people have not the facilities for traveling.

Mr. REED. But they must either walk to the car line or walk to town.

Mr. GALLINGER. Yes; they get into town in some way.

Mr. REED. I might say in addition that the physical difficulties to be overcome in my city are such that the cost of operation as well as construction must be 50 per cent higher than here.

Mr. GALLINGER. I presume the Senator will admit that which I think is a fact, that in that enterprising city of Kansas City they have an overhead trolley system.

Mr. REED. That is true.

Mr. GALLINGER. And here we have an underground electric system, compelled by congressional action, which costs about three times as much to build and costs more for maintenance. That makes a great difference.

Mr. REED. I question whether it will offset the other difficulties or anything like it. There the companies pay 8 per cent of their gross revenues, and they have to overcome the physical difficulties, among other matters, of crossing the river.

Mr. GALLINGER. They get a 5-cent fare, of course.

Mr. REED. They get a 5-cent fare.

Mr. GALLINGER. The men who are managing these corporations in the District of Columbia have said to me over and over again, and they have said to committees of Congress, that if they can be permitted to charge a 5-cent fare they are prepared to do pretty much anything that Congress will ask of them.

Mr. REED. But I want to add that for many years they have given universal transfers in Kansas City, while in Washington they have not given such transfers, and universal transfers amount to more in my city in the way of a reduction than the difference between six tickets for a quarter and five tickets for a quarter.

Mr. GALLINGER. Well, we are hoping to get universal transfers in Washington. The Senate has acted upon the bill, and I trust the Senator from Missouri will use his good influence in the other body to see that they act upon it.

Mr. REED. I will use whatever influence I have at any time to try to keep charges for public service to a fair amount.

Mr. CUMMINS. Mr. President, before the Senator from New Hampshire concludes his observations, I should like to make a suggestion to him. It is utterly impossible for all of us to become familiar with the details of either of these bills. It has been suggested that the bill originated with the chairman of the committee and was perfected, or at least prepared, by the corporation counsel of the District. Since that time, after hearings before the committee, there have been changes made in the original draft. The Senator from California [Mr. WORKS], as I gather it, now proposes as a substitute for the bill reported by the committee practically the bill as it was originally drawn by the corporation counsel. He has pointed out from his standpoint the differences between the two bills,

I think it would be very helpful to the Senate, I know it would be to me, if the Senator from New Hampshire, from his point of view would direct the attention of the Senate to the essential differences—not the immaterial differences, but to the essential differences—between the bill which his committee has reported and the bill which the Senator from California now proposes as a substitute. I should like to vote intelligently upon the proposition now before the Senate, which is one of substitution; and if the Senator from New Hampshire will, clearly as he can and always does, point out the distinguishing features between these two bills, I should be very much obliged to him and I think all who are here would be.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, I do not think that ought to be required of the chairman of the committee. This bill has been before the Senate since the 9th day of June, 1911, in substantially the form in which it now is. Every Senator has had an opportunity to examine it. When this bill was reported to the Senate, agreed to by the Commissioners of the District of Columbia, agreed to by the corporation counsel, a certain gentleman in another body thought he would like to get up a bill. So he took this bill and took the commissioners' bill and inserted two or three paragraphs in it so that it would not be the same bill. It is upon those changes largely that the Senator from California has dwelt.

As I said a moment ago, Mr. President, this bill might have been made longer. There is not any limit to verbiage—to written verbiage and sometimes to spoken verbiage—but the committee thought that it ought to be condensed as much as possible, so long as it conferred adequate authority to accomplish the desired ends.

Mr. WORKS. Mr. President—

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from New Hampshire yield to the Senator from California?

Mr. GALLINGER. Certainly.

Mr. WORKS. I should like to ask the Senator whether he personally has any objection to the section providing for the examination and ascertainment of the amount of stock and bonds, the original cost of the plant of the corporations, and, making it a double question, whether he regards that as mere verbiage?

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, I have objection to the changes that the Senator from California has suggested because I think they are all unnecessary.

In that connection, I want to say that the Senator from California has had a long time to consider this bill. He met with the Committee on the District of Columbia several times; he knew what we were doing; and he did not offer any amendments before the committee.

Mr. WORKS. Mr. President—

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from New Hampshire yield to the Senator from California?

Mr. GALLINGER. I do.

Mr. WORKS. I have given most careful attention to this bill. I doubt if any other member of the committee, except the chairman, the author of the bill, has given anything like the attention to it that I have. I went over it carefully, as I have said, with the corporation counsel, who is supposed to be competent to determine what should go into the bill. I was not content with that, but I went over it very carefully with one of the Commissioners of the District of Columbia before taking action upon it. I suggested to the committee that I would like to propose some changes in the bill. It was then referred, as I said in the beginning, to a subcommittee. I had no opportunity to meet with that committee and had no notice of their meetings. Then it was returned to the full committee. I was out of the committee when it was acted upon, and I had no knowledge of what action had been taken until it was reported on the floor of the Senate. So I think the Senator from New Hampshire ought not to say that I have not given due and proper attention to this bill. I have, because I regard it as a very important piece of legislation, and I regret very much that Senators are not in their seats so that they might understand what are the differences between the two bills. They are very important differences; and I think Senators ought to have an opportunity to compare the two bills, taking the explanation that I have given here on the floor of the Senate, in order to vote intelligently upon this question.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, I will now occupy the floor for a moment. The Senator from California can not say that he has been treated unfairly or discourteously by the committee. That is not correct. He had every opportunity before the committee to offer his amendments, and it is rather an extraordinary matter for a member of a committee to sit mute during the consideration of a great measure, occupying weeks and months in its consideration, and then come before the Senate and say that he has got a better bill than the committee prepared and reported. It may be better and it may not be better. I will not take up all the differences that the Senator pointed out; but he found fault with our method of ascertaining the valuation of public utilities.

Mr. President, we took the Maryland statute, which is the latest statute on that subject. The Wisconsin statute is somewhat more elaborate and perhaps somewhat more specific in certain matters, and yet it was the consensus of opinion on the part of those who looked into the bill that the Maryland statute was adequate in every respect; and, it being the latest statute on the subject, it was incorporated into the bill. I took personal occasion to make inquiry of Maryland people concerning the workings of the statute, and they said that it worked with entire satisfaction.

Mr. WORKS. Mr. President—

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from New Hampshire yield to the Senator from California?

Mr. GALLINGER. I do.

Mr. WORKS. The Senator from New Hampshire has spoken now a number of times about a conference that was held with respect to this bill. I would like to ask who was present and took part in that conference at the time he says the commissioners consented to these changes being made?

Mr. GALLINGER. The commissioners were present, or the engineer commissioner, who represented them, was present.

Mr. WORKS. Was anybody present representing the utility corporations?

Mr. GALLINGER. Yes.

Mr. WORKS. What corporations?

Mr. GALLINGER. Well, Mr. President, I am not going to be interrogated by the Senator from California. I did consult the utility corporations. I think they are entitled to consideration. The Senator from California may hold a different view. The railroad corporations were consulted. Mr. Hamilton, on the part of the Capital Traction Co., was present; Mr. King was present a few moments on the part of the Washington Railway & Electric Co.; and Mr. Goldsborough was present on the part of the Washington Gas Light Co. They were invited there by me; they were consulted; and, to their credit be it said, Mr. President, they did not object to a public-utilities bill, saying that they wanted it to be an adequate bill, one that was workable and one that would accomplish the results that they knew the chairman of the committee, at least, had in view. They were consulted. The Maryland statute as to ascertaining values seemed to the committee to be adequate; but, in addition to that, there is a provision in this bill that if the commission has any doubt as to the elements of value they can go to the court and ascertain the opinion of the court on that subject.

Mr. REED. Will the Senator kindly give me the number of that section?

Mr. GALLINGER. It is section 62. It reads:

SEC. 62. That if at any time the commission shall be in doubt of the elements of value to be by them considered in arriving at the true valuation under the provisions of this act they are authorized and empowered to institute a proceeding in equity in the Supreme Court of the District of Columbia petitioning said court to instruct them as to the element or elements of value to be by them considered as aforesaid, and the particular utility under valuation at the time shall be made party defendant in said action.

That seemed to the committee to be an addition to the Maryland statute and a provision that will certainly enable the commission to exercise their duties not only faithfully but effectually, and so that was placed in the bill.

The concluding section of the substitute is what the Senator from California, I think, laid most stress upon. That section provides:

SEC. 106. That it shall be the duty of the commission in fixing and determining rates, in directing extensions and improvements, and in general when making requirements under the provisions of this act that involve expenditures by or lessen the receipts of public utilities, and notwithstanding any other of the provisions of this act, having in mind the public interest, to require the utmost of the public utility that will not trench upon its constitutional right to earn a fair net return upon the fair value of its property used for the convenience of the public.

Mr. President, that is not to be found in any public-utilities law that I have had occasion to examine—and I examined them all, I think; and I do not see that it is necessary at all for it to be in the bill. It is simply a direction to the commission to do its duty. The provisions of the bill are adequate—they are specific; the duty of the commission is expressed in clear and unmistakable language; they are given unlimited power; and why we should wind up by putting a section at the close of the bill, telling them that they should do their duty in that regard, surpasses my comprehension. I do not think it is necessary; and for that reason I have no disposition to have it incorporated in the bill that is now before the Senate.

The Senator from California has laid stress somewhat upon the provision relating to stocks and bonds; but I think that the provision I had inserted a few days ago is entirely adequate for that purpose and that the suggestion the Senator made as to the enlargement of it would not result in any real service to the public.

Mr. WORKS. Mr. President—

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from New Hampshire yield to the Senator from California?

Mr. GALLINGER. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. WORKS. The Senator from New Hampshire understands, I presume, that the amendment which has been submitted here relating to the subject of stocks does not cover the bonds at all.

Mr. GALLINGER. It does not cover the bonds because the committee did not think it was necessary to do that.

Mr. POMERENE. Mr. President—

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from New Hampshire yield to the Senator from Ohio?

Mr. GALLINGER. I do.

Mr. POMERENE. In the mind of the Senator from New Hampshire, what objection would there be to making the issue of bonds and stocks subject to the approval of the commission?

Mr. GALLINGER. I think that is in the bill, though I can not turn to the section at the present time.

Mr. POMERENE. I think it is true that there is some provision to the effect that the issue shall be generally subject to the approval of the commission.

Mr. GALLINGER. Yes.

Mr. WORKS. There is that provision in the pending bill. The objection I made to it was that that portion of the section providing the means by which the commission could determine whether the stock or bonds should be issued is entirely stricken out.

Mr. POMERENE. My thought was that there ought to be something in the bill limiting the purposes for which stock and bonds might be issued and the purposes to which the proceeds from the sale of the stock and bonds might be applied. To make myself clear, I have been informed that one of the public utility companies here in the city, within recent months perhaps, or at any rate within a short time, has not only declared cash dividends but issued stock and distributed the stock as a dividend when the stock is below par.

Mr. WORKS. If the Senator will yield to me, there are three or four sections in the substitute bill that has been offered here providing for just that condition of things, and those sections, as I have explained to the Senate, have all been omitted from the pending bill.

Mr. POMERENE. The Senator has just called attention to the fact which I had in mind. I want to ask the Senator from New Hampshire what, if any, objection there could be to limiting the purposes for which stock or bonds might be issued, and, secondly, limiting the purposes to which the proceeds of the sale of the stock and bonds might be applied in order to prevent the excessive issue of stock, or, in other words, watered stock?

Mr. GALLINGER. Well, Mr. President, I do not think that is necessary. The powers of the commission are very complete in the matter of increasing stock issues, and, after all, it is in the hands of Congress. I do not know of any occasion in recent years where a dividend of that kind has been paid by any public utility corporation. I think that some years ago there was a case of that kind, but I have an impression that the rates that are now being exacted for public utility service in this District are not such as to give public utility corporations much chance to declare dividends of that kind.

When I commenced, Mr. President, only a few years ago, to take up the question of the price of gas in the District of Columbia it was $1.25 in Washington and $1.50 in Georgetown. The price is now 85 cents in both cities; and I had hoped for a still further reduction in the near future, which I trust will come. They are not making inordinate profits, so far as I can ascertain, and I have made very diligent inquiry along those lines. The railroad companies have not made inordinate profits. If the Senator will take the hearings before the Committee on the District of Columbia on the universal-transfer bill, if Mr. Hamilton, who is one of the best known and most respected citizens in the District of Columbia, is to be believed, the Capital Traction Co. did not make any profits last year, except $4,000, I believe, and they are now required to dispense with all their trailers and buy a complete outfit of new cars, which is going to cost hundreds of thousands of dollars.

One or two of the lines of the Washington Railway & Electric Co. have been profitable, but they took over the control of 9 or 10 other lines, no one of which was paying its running expenses, and that corporation is certainly not making any inordinate profits. They are getting along fairly well, but I do not think we want to tie these corporations up and put them in a position where they can not give either adequate facilities or make adequate improvements. I am in favor of looking upon these corporations as being controlled by men who have some civic pride and some interest in this great city that we are all trying to develop and improve. I want to give them a little leeway, and I think they ought to have it.

I do not believe that the amendment the Senator suggests would improve the bill we are now considering; and, as I acted somewhat upon the advice of Commissioner Lane, who said to me that the only trouble was that the bill was too long and had too much verbiage in it, I have felt like abbreviating it rather than enlarging it. I hope that the vote will be taken directly upon the proposed substitute and then upon the bill.

Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey. May I ask the Senator a question?

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from New Hampshire yield to the Senator from New Jersey?

Mr. GALLINGER. Certainly.

Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey. I want to ask whether these franchises were granted in perpetuity or for a limited time?

Mr. GALLINGER. I think they were granted in perpetuity, subject to repeal by Congress.

Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey. I am opposed on principle to any franchises being granted in perpetuity, and it seems to me—

Mr. GALLINGER. We never have passed any bill since I have been connected with the Committee on the District of Columbia, which covers a period of 21 years, where we did not in the closing section provide that the bill could be altered, amended, or repealed by Congress.

Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey. Is that the case in this bill now proposed?

Mr. GALLINGER. Yes.

Mr. POMERENE. Mr. President, I have no desire whatever to discourage any of the public-service corporations, but when it comes to determining whether or not they are earning excessive profits, with all due respect to the testimony which was offered before the Committee on the District of Columbia, I think it may be safely concluded that we will know more on that subject after we shall have had an investigation by the public-utilities commission.

During the hearings which we held the president of one of these companies, when inquiry was made of him as to whether they could give transfers free of charge, reminded the committee that they were taking the wrong tack, and that instead of attempting to decrease the prices of transfers and of tickets they ought to be permitted to increase them.

Mr. President, I think, without meaning any reflection upon any of the officials who appeared before that committee, it can be safely stated that there are very few public utility corporations in this country that make excessive profits, if we are to accept their judgment. They are constantly watering their stock, and I think the stock of at least some of the public utility corporations in this District has been watered. The fact of the matter is that a goodly part of it is water.

In an editorial which was printed in one of the Washington papers a few months ago, the capitalization of the street railway companies was given, together with mileage and capitalization per mile. In the case of the Capital Traction Co., the capital stock issued was $16,000,000, the mileage of tracks was 28.588 miles, indicating that the capitalization per mile was $559,675. In the statements made before the District Committee the presidents of these companies were not able to give us very definite information as to what the cost of construction would be. One of the presidents, who said that the railway companies could not afford to give free transfers, was not able to tell us whether the cost per mile was $100,000 or $200,000. His company, the Washington Railway & Electric Co., is capitalized at $27,995,018; the mileage of that system was 83.26 miles, and the capitalization per mile was $336,260.

Is not the public interested in knowing whether there has been any watered stock? Ought we not to provide in this bill that hereafter there may not be other and larger issues of stock or of bonds unless the commission knows the purpose for which these issues are made and the purpose for which the proceeds which are derived from the sale of the stock and bonds are to be applied? Must we not have all of these facts in order that we may be able to ascertain what is a reasonable rate of fare, and what is not?

The Senator refers to the fact that in some New England towns there was an attempt to increase the fare over and above 5 cents. I want to say that if it were necessary for the street car companies, in order to keep the service and facilities in this District up to a high plane, to charge 6 cents or 7 cents, I would favor such a rate; but if it should be shown, after an investigation, that these corporations can earn a reasonable profit upon their investment, properly and reasonably capitalized, and charge only 4 cents for it, I am in favor of that. It does not do to say that it is necessary to charge 5 cents in order that these corporations may do business and do it at a reasonable profit. It has been otherwise demonstrated in the country.

In Detroit the fare is 3 cents. In Cleveland they charge 3 cents and have the right to increase or decrease the fare in order that there may be a reasonable return upon the investment. A part of the time they have charged for transfers 1 cent and a portion of the time that has been rebated; but the critics will say that they have not as good a system there as exists here in Washington; that it is the overhead system and not the underground system. I recognize the fact that the underground system requires a greater investment than the overhead system, but that does not justify us in coming to the conclusion that a 5-cent fare is a reasonable fare.

In the city of Columbus they sell seven tickets for a quarter, with a proviso in the franchise to the effect that when the gross receipts shall amount to one and three-quarter million dollars per annum they shall be compelled to sell eight tickets for a quarter, and if it had not been for the strike during the past year the people of the city of Columbus would be riding now with eight tickets for a quarter.

These are only incidents to the main question before the Senate, namely, that there should be vested in this commission some authority to determine the extent of the issues of the stock and of the bonds, to the end not only that the stockholders may have a fair return for their investment, but that the public shall not be required to pay more than they ought to pay for the accommodations which they receive. To that end, it seems to me that there should be some provision in this bill controlling the purposes for which stock and bonds may be issued.

Mr. WORKS. Mr. President—

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Ohio yield to the Senator from California?

Mr. POMERENE. Certainly.

Mr. WORKS. In view of that statement of the Senator from Ohio, I call his attention to sections 76 to 79 of the amendment that I have offered, which covers exactly what he insists should go in the bill. Those provisions are not contained in the bill now pending.

Mr. POMERENE. I had in mind the amendments which the Senator has proposed, and I was a little bit curious to know what objection there could be to the insertion of those provisions in the bill before the Senate. It seems to me that the excuse is rather lame when it is said that to insert them will increase the verbiage of the bill.

Mr. GALLINGER. I did not say only that. I said they were unnecessary, in my judgment, as the commission had the power.

Now, Mr. President, I hope a vote will be taken.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, I certainly do not want to obstruct the passage of a good measure, and I say frankly that in the press of other matters I have not given to this bill anything like thorough consideration. But there are one or two matters which have been sharply brought out by this debate which, I think, are the very keystones that ought to be put into any bill.

It is utterly useless to talk about a bill being too long or too short. If we are going to draw a bill, we can afford to use enough words to cover the subject; and this bill is long enough to cover the subject. The Lord, as well as the man who drew it, knows that. It is not the length of a law, it is the quality of a law which determines whether it is of any value or not.

By way of parentheses, I want to remark that I have not much confidence in a proposition which proposes to leave the question of the regulation of the charges of public utilities to the owner of the public utility upon the ground that he is a respectable gentleman and possesses great civic pride.

Mr. GALLINGER. If the Senator from Missouri will permit me, I made no such statement as that. I did not intimate it.

Mr. REED. I think that the RECORD will show that the Senator used substantially this language—that he believed in leaving these gentlemen some leeway, and that they were men possessed of civic pride; and I at the time wrote "civic pride" on a card, so that I would not forget it, for I have heard that argument before, coming from the lips of gentlemen who were proprietors of institutions and who wanted to regulate public charges by their civic pride.

Mr. GALLINGER. If the Senator will permit me—

Mr. REED. I do not mean by what I have said to intimate that the Senator used it in the sense those gentlemen did.

Mr. GALLINGER. If the Senator will permit me, I meant simply to say that I happen to be one of those who do not think a man at the head of a public utility is an outcast. I think he is entitled to consideration and his views are entitled to consideration, and because of that feeling I did consult those gentlemen in regard to this bill.

Mr. REED. There is no man in the Senate who believes in making an outcast of any man because he has money. There is no man in the Senate who has the slightest desire in his heart to impose a hardship upon any public utility of the District of Columbia or of the United States. Some of us differ from other Members of the Senate as to what may be a proper charge, but upon the fundamental proposition that every public utility is entitled to a fair and just return upon its honest investment, there is no difference of opinion in the Senate of the United States or among honest men anywhere.

But coming back to the question I was talking about, I have always found that when a man has a large sum of money invested in an enterprise, he gets his civic pride so involved in the question of losses and profits that his civic pride is controlled by the question of dividends. So I am not willing to leave this bill to that kind of settlement.

As to the length of this bill, it is long enough, but there are one or two things that ought to go into any law or any bill that proposes to give to a court or to a board the right of regulation of charges; and the first question that must be determined by any board or any court when it comes to fix charges is, What is the value of the investment upon which returns are to be had; what elements enter into the question of value?

It has been fought out in the courts of every State, not once, but hundreds of times, and the great difficulty has always been to determine what shall be counted as an element of value.

The contention has been made, and has been successfully made, time and again in the courts that a franchise—the right to do business—is an element of value, and companies have been permitted to have considered as an element of value their franchise, their right to do business, although their franchise was granted to them by the public without charge.

They have also contended that the question of value is affected and measured by the amount of the income. They contended for that in the great Gas case in the city of New York. The result of that logic, of course, is, if you are to measure the value of a plant by the amount of its income, the more you increase the income the more you increase the value of the plant, so that no regulation of rates can result.

Now, all this makes it plain that there should be, in any bill which proposes to give to a board or to a court the right to fix rates, some rule by which it can estimate values, and so I say that this bill should contain the very plain and simple words that in estimating the value the court or the board shall not consider the franchise rights of the company or the question of its earning capacity.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President—

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Missouri yield to the Senator from New Hampshire?

Mr. REED. Certainly.

Mr. GALLINGER. Am I not correct in saying that while that is a popular thought, the Supreme Court of the United States decided in the Consolidated Gas Co. case that a franchise had a value?

Mr. REED. Yes, sir; they did so decide.

Mr. GALLINGER. I thought so.

Mr. REED. And because they so decided is the very reason why we should exclude it here.

Mr. GALLINGER. That is, we ought—

Mr. REED. If the Senator from New Hampshire will pardon me—

Mr. GALLINGER. Yes.

Mr. REED. So that I will not have my statement interrupted, the Supreme Court decision in that case, in which they admitted the franchise as an element of value, was based in part upon the peculiar facts of that case, so that it may well be said to be a mooted question whether a company has a right to have its franchise charged as an element of value or not, and because it is a mooted question that doubt should be removed and these companies should be made to accept a valuation which excludes from it that which the public gave them of free grace, always allowing them a fair return upon the money they have actually invested.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President—

Mr. REED. Just one second, and I will yield. That can be done and that can be compelled, if it be true as the Senator has said, that we have the power of revocation; and it should be done. What is more abhorrent to the sense of justice than that an institution operating upon the streets of a city, by the grace of the city, should be allowed to tax the public upon the free gift which it received? I yield to the Senator from New Hampshire if he desires.

Mr. GALLINGER. I do not think any corporation in this District has insisted that there was a special value to its franchise. I was going to ask the Senator if the fact that a corporation is a going concern has not some connection with the value of the property?

Mr. REED. Oh, certainly; the fact that it is a going concern is a matter to be considered in this way. No man would propose to go out here and value, as a piece of second-hand material, a new steel rail that had been put down on the ground and used a week. They are entitled to have the property valued fairly as a going concern, and those elements of value which properly belong ought always to be considered. But if you propose to say that the franchises of the companies in this city are worth $10,000,000 or $20,000,000 and add that to the value, and then permit a charge to be made which will pay interest and dividends not only upon the real value of their plants, but upon the franchise value, manifestly that would be unjust to the people of Washington.

Mr. GALLINGER. If the Senator will permit me, nobody has ever dreamed that anything of that kind has happened, and it is within the power of Congress at any moment to regulate all those things. It is within the power of Congress to say that these companies, if they are making inordinate profits, shall carry passengers for 2 cents or 1 cent.

Mr. REED. But, Mr. President, we are doing this thing now, and why not do that right now?

Mr. GALLINGER. No; we are putting in the hands of a commission the power to do that thing—

Mr. REED. Exactly.

Mr. GALLINGER. To determine rates.

Mr. REED. But you have not specified in the bill, as I understand it, that in fixing the value they shall exclude franchise value.

Mr. GALLINGER. We have put in the bill authority to the commission to estimate the fair value of the property, and if they are in any doubt that they may go to the Supreme Court—

Mr. REED. Yes.

Mr. GALLINGER. To ascertain what is the fair value or what are the elements that should enter into the fair value.

Mr. REED. But that leaves it just exactly where it would be if you had not said a word about the value.

Mr. GALLINGER. Oh, no.

Mr. REED. "The fair value of the property." That is what every corporate attorney would want written into a bill or into a franchise. "The fair value of the property," and then he says "my franchise is a part of my property, and upon that franchise I am entitled to a return." That is the very thing which ought to be guarded now, and it is no answer to say that Congress may hereafter guard against it because we are now enacting a bill dealing with that very subject matter. Why not deal with it now? Why wait for the future? Will these companies object; and if they do object, upon what sound ground can they base the objection to a line or two in this bill which shall provide the basis upon which the commission shall act?

I insist, Mr. President, that it should go into this bill, and even if it should take several words to say it, it ought to go into the bill, and I trust that the bill will not be passed with that important provision omitted.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, I trust the question will be put.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing—

Mr. WORKS. I suggest to the Senator from New Hampshire that a vote upon such an important matter ought not to be taken with so few of the Senators present. I do not care to put Senators to trouble by suggesting the absence of a quorum, but I should like to have a full attendance here when the bill is voted upon.

Mr. GALLINGER. Will the Senator from California agree to vote upon the bill and all amendments at 4 o'clock tomorrow?

Mr. WORKS. I have no objection.

Mr. LEA. Before that is done, I should like to ask the Senator from New Hampshire if I am not correct in stating that the present bill is approved by the District Commissioners and was drawn by the corporation counsel of the District of Columbia?

Mr. GALLINGER. The report was made on the bill that is now before us.

Mr. LEA. Is not that the bill which was approved by the District Commissioners?

Mr. GALLINGER. Yes. The bill that is now before us was submitted to the District Commissioners, and they made a report on it. They went outside of their usual function to offer comment upon a bill that was before the House of Representatives. I never could understand why they did it, but they did, and they compared certain provisions in it with certain provisions in the House bill, suggesting that two provisions, I think, in the House bill were a little more specific than in this bill and that one section in the House bill which they thought was a good provision was not in this bill.

Mr. WORKS. I should like to say to the Senator from Tennessee that if he had been here this afternoon he would have heard the statement made as to the character of the report made by the commissioners upon both of these bills.

Mr. LEA. I did not—

Mr. WORKS. The report on the bill that I offered as a substitute was unqualified in favor of the passage of the bill. The report upon the pending bill was favorable in a general way, and then they went on to point out in what respects it was defective in comparison with the one I offered as a substitute.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, I believe I have the floor. These two reports are in print. The Senator can examine them, rather than to be governed by anyone's statement.

Mr. WORKS. I should like to have the Senator do that.

Mr. GALLINGER. I ask that a vote on this bill and all pending amendments and all other amendments be taken to-morrow not later than 4 o'clock.

Mr. BRISTOW. I have no objections to voting upon this amendment at 4 o'clock to-morrow, but I know at least one Senator who is absent who wants to offer some additional amendments. He is not here, and he might want to offer and discuss those amendments after this amendment shall have been disposed of.

Mr. GALLINGER. If we are going to wait for a Senator who is absent, I will say that I have a great deal of other work to do, and this bill can remain upon the calendar for some time to come.

Mr. WORKS. I should like to understand, in connection with the request of the Senator from New Hampshire, to what hour the Senate will adjourn. Of course, if the Senate should adjourn until 2 o'clock to-morrow it would give a very short time to dispose of the bill, and I would not want to give consent to his request, for it would give only two hours. But if the Senate is to adjourn until 12 o'clock to-morrow, I think it would give ample time.

Mr. LEA. Mr. President—

Mr. GALLINGER. Will the Senator from Tennessee permit me.

Mr. LEA. Certainly.

Mr. GALLINGER. I move that when the Senate adjourns to-day it adjourn to meet at 12 o'clock to-morrow.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. GALLINGER. Now I ask unanimous consent that the vote on the bill and all pending amendments may be taken not later than 4 o'clock to-morrow.

Mr. LEA. Mr. President—

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Tennessee desire to object to the request, or does he desire to discuss the matter before the request is put?

Mr. LEA. I merely wish to say that I thought the suggestion of the Senator from California in regard to not voting on the bill this afternoon a good one, and I think, to-morrow being Saturday, the same situation will occur, and if the request is insisted upon I shall, for that reason, object to it.

Mr. BRISTOW. I shall have to object to any request which provides that we shall vote upon all amendments at 4 o'clock to-morrow without further debate. I know Senators are away who can not be here on account of—

The VICE PRESIDENT. Objection is made to the request of the Senator from New Hampshire.

Mr. JONES. I desire to ask unanimous consent that the pending bill and the substitute may be printed together in parallel columns, so that we can see the difference between them.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

PRESIDENT OF THE SENATE PRO TEMPORE.

Mr. SMOOT. On account of what will be the enforced absence of the President of the Senate, I ask unanimous consent that the senior Senator from Georgia [Mr. BACON] be designated to act as President of the Senate on Monday, the 11th, and Tuesday, the 12th, of next week.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and the order is entered.

Mr. SMOOT submitted the following resolution (S. Res. 244), which was read, considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to, as follows:

Resolved, That the Secretary wait upon the President of the United States and inform him that the Senate has elected AUGUSTUS O. BACON, a Senator from the State of Georgia, President of the Senate pro tempore, to hold and exercise the office in the absence of the Vice President on Monday and Tuesday, March 11 and 12, 1912.

Mr. SMOOT submitted the following resolution (S. Res. 245), which was read, considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to, as follows:

Resolved, That the Secretary notify the House of Representatives that the Senate has elected AUGUSTUS O. BACON, a Senator from the State of Georgia, President of the Senate pro tempore, to hold and exercise the office in the absence of the Vice President on Monday and Tuesday, March 11 and 12, 1912.

EXECUTIVE SESSION.

Mr. SMOOT. I move that the Senate adjourn.

Mr. BURTON. Mr. President—

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Utah yield to the Senator from Ohio?

Mr. SMOOT. I do.

Mr. BURTON. There is pending a treaty which was partially considered a few days ago. It will take probably five minutes to complete its consideration.

Mr. SMOOT. I move, then, that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was agreed to, and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business. After 40 minutes spent in executive session the doors were reopened.

HOOR OF MEETING TO-MORROW.

Mr. GALLINGER. Inasmuch as no unanimous-consent agreement was reached to-day for a vote on the public-utilities bill, I move that the order of the Senate fixing the hour of meeting to-morrow at 12 o'clock be reconsidered.

Mr. REED. If we are going to vote on the public-utilities bill at 4 o'clock to-morrow under the unanimous-consent agreement, it would make the time for the discussion of the measure very short, if we are to meet at 2 o'clock instead of at 12.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Unanimous consent was not given.

Mr. GALLINGER. The fact that unanimous consent was not given for the final disposition of the bill and amendments is the reason why I make the motion.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, the motion of the Senator from New Hampshire to reconsider the order fixing the hour of 12 o'clock m. to-morrow will be agreed to, and the Senate will assemble at 2 o'clock p. m.

Mr. SMOOT. I move that the Senate adjourn.

The motion was agreed to, and (at 5 o'clock and 35 minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned until to-morrow, Saturday, March 9, 1912, at 2 o'clock p. m.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

FRIDAY, March 8, 1912.

The House met at 12 o'clock noon.

The Chaplain, Rev. Henry N. Couden, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Our Father in heaven, strengthen, we beseech Thee, our moral and spiritual fiber, that we may resist all the forms of temptation which assail us and with firm and steadfast reliance in Thee our God and our Father follow after the things which make for righteousness in the individual, in the home, in the State, the Nation, that we may exemplify in our daily life what we know to be right in Thy sight and in the sight of our fellow men, to the glory and honor of Thy holy name. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

LEAVE TO WITHDRAW PAPERS.

By unanimous consent, at the request of Mr. J. M. C. SMITH, leave was granted to withdraw from the files of the House, without leaving copies, the papers in the case of Edward Cunningham (H. R. 10766), no adverse report having been made thereon.

QUESTION OF PERSONAL PRIVILEGE.

Mr. AMES. Mr. Speaker, I rise to a question of personal privilege.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. AMES. On February 26, on page 2483 of the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, it appears that the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. Good] made the following statement about me, which is to the detriment of my character and honesty, and affects my position as a Member of this body. I ask the Clerk to read from the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

I was amazed beyond my power to explain that that statement should have been made by the gentleman from Massachusetts. I can recall that a few months ago, when the gentleman from Massachusetts, when the cotton bill was under discussion, said that he did not own stock and was not interested in cotton mills, but that members of his family did own stock and were interested in them. The other day, when the Army appropriation bill was before the House, the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. AMES] said that he did not own stock in ammunition concerns, but that members of his family did.

I want to raise the question now and have it settled once for all that not on the floor of this House, while I am a Member of it at least, will I have my integrity impugned by a man who stands here not as a Representative, but as a person representing members of his family who are stockholders in concerns that would receive dividends under contracts that might be awarded. I believe that Members on the floor of this House should represent an American constituency, a constituency of men, and not a constituency of family members demanding dividends earned on Government contracts.

Mr. AMES. Mr. Speaker, I regret the necessity that compels the following statements with reference to the gentleman from Iowa. To destroy his reputation for honesty and sincerity would not repair the injustice he has attempted to saddle upon me or right the wrong of his baseless accusations.

But to protect this membership from such attacks and to properly refute his accusations I feel in duty bound to show that one can not accept as facts these statements made by the gentleman from Iowa, whether they be made about others or about himself.

Mr. Speaker, in my remarks of the 26th of February, which formed the basis for the unwarranted attack upon me by the gentleman from Iowa, I did not impugn either his integrity or his motives.

In order to show how impossible it is for rational men to accept as fact these statements by the gentleman from Iowa, I desire to take his remarks concerning me, paragraph by paragraph, and analyze the same, to the end that those who hear or read may understand the curious results of the mental processes of the gentleman from Iowa.

On pages 2483 and 2484, CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, February 26, the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. Good] began his misstatement of facts concerning myself and the so-called Ammunition Trust, which trust exists only in a neurotic imagination.

The first paragraph of his remarks concerning me reads as follows:

A few days ago, when the Army appropriation bill was before the House, I had something to say on the question of the Powder Trust. After I had taken my seat I was called out of the Chamber, and my attention was not called to some remarks made by the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. AMES] until they appeared in the RECORD. I was in hopes he would be here to-day, as I told him I expected to discuss this bill and to refer to his remarks. I was amazed when I came to read his remarks to find that not only the accuracy of my statements was questioned, but the good faith and sincerity with which I made them was also questioned.

Now, Mr. Speaker, can that paragraph convey any meaning to the normal mind other than that the gentleman from Iowa intended us to believe that he was out of the room when I made my remarks concerning him and to which he took exception; and also that I questioned his good faith and sincerity in his absence?

And, in addition, does not his statement therein read to make us believe that his attention had not been called to my remarks until afterwards, when he read the RECORD?

But what are the facts in the case, Mr. Speaker? The facts that the gentleman from Iowa seems to have shunned.

The gentleman from Iowa was in the room, and not only in the room but listening to my remarks, and not only listening to my remarks but also interrupting them; and the proof of this fact lies in his interrupting me and asking that I yield, which I did. And his interrupting statement appears sandwiched into my remarks on page 2118 of the RECORD. And, furthermore, it was not until after I had used the major part of my first five minutes that the gentleman from Iowa left the Chamber, and only then in the face of my earnest verbal protest against his leaving. This protest of mine is shown in the eleventh line, second column, on that page.

And, further, after his departure I made no reference to the gentleman, except on the forty-ninth line, same page and column, where I expressed my doubt as to the information he had given us, as will be seen by reference to my remarks.

In addition, I challenge the gentleman from Iowa to verify his statement in the first paragraph that in my remarks—to which he took exception—I questioned either his good faith or his sincerity.

Mr. GOOD. Mr. Speaker—

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from Massachusetts yield to the gentleman from Iowa?

Mr. AMES. Certainly.

Mr. GOOD. I will say that in the statement I made I did not disclaim hearing all of the gentleman's remarks. I stated that I did not hear all of his remarks. I was called from the Chamber immediately upon taking my seat by a newspaper reporter, and sat in the lobby for at least two or three minutes, and then told him he would have to excuse me. If the gentleman will look over my remarks carefully, he will note that I said I did not hear all his remarks. I at no time claimed that I did not hear some of the gentleman's remarks.

Mr. AMES. Mr. Speaker, I will read what the gentleman said in his remarks:

A few days ago, when the Army appropriation bill was before the House, I had something to say on the question of the Powder Trust. After I had taken my seat I was called out of the Chamber, and my attention was not called to some remarks made by the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. AMES] until they appeared in the RECORD. I was in hopes he would be here to-day, for I told him I expected to discuss this bill and to refer to his remarks. I was amazed, when I came to read his remarks, to find that not only the accuracy of my statements was questioned, but the good faith and sincerity with which I made them was also questioned.

Now, the facts in the case were that the gentleman from Iowa was in the room; and he was not only in the room listening to my remarks, and he was not only listening, but interrupted them, but after leaving the room, which he did against my verbal protest, I said nothing against the gentleman from Iowa except in one or two lines. And after the gentleman left the room there was nothing that could be construed as an attack on him, as anyone who will read the remarks will see.

And in addition, whether the gentleman was in the room or not, or whether he heard my remarks or not, or had his attention called to them or not, I challenge the gentleman from Iowa to verify his statement in the RECORD, and in the first paragraph of his remarks, that in my remarks to which he took exception I questioned either his good faith or his sincerity.

In his presence and to his face I called his speech a neurotic attack upon a perfectly defensible, honestly conducted industry—the manufacture of ammunition—and then explained later what I meant by neurotic.

For the benefit of the gentleman from Iowa I give, from Webster's Dictionary, the following definition of neurotic:

Neurotic: Acting on the nerves; useful in nervous disorders; of or pertaining to the nerves; seated in the nerves; of the nature of neurosis; affected with neurosis; subject to neuroses.

To recapitulate, then, on this one paragraph of the remarks of the gentleman from Iowa. There appear three separate and utterly misleading statements, evidently calculated to make us believe that the gentleman from Iowa was not in the Chamber when I made my remarks, that he was unaware of them until later, "when he read them in the RECORD," and that I had questioned his good faith and sincerity.

Had the gentleman from Iowa made the preceding misstatements in the heat of debate there might have been some excuse for him; but to go off to his office and, in the course of almost two weeks, reappear upon the floor—and in what ought to have been a carefully prepared speech—to make an unfounded attack upon my standing as a Representative in an attempted justification of himself was not worthy his name or his State.

The second paragraph of the remarks of the Member from Iowa reads as follows:

I was amazed beyond my power to explain that that statement should have been made by the gentleman from Massachusetts. I can recall a few months ago, when the gentleman from Massachusetts, when the cotton bill was under discussion, said that he did not own stock and was not interested in cotton mills, but that members of his family did own stock and were interested in them. The other day, when the Army appropriation bill was before the House, the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. AMES] said that he did not own stock in ammunition concerns, but that members of his family did.

Has it occurred to the gentleman from Iowa that there is scarcely a family of means in New England that some member thereof does not have some interest in some manufacture?

And I might have expected that the reasons for my declarations relative to the interests of members of my family would pass entirely over the head of the gentleman from Iowa.

I made those declarations to show not that I was likely therefore to have some knowledge of those subjects but to let the world know that because of my family connection, even if I held no interest of my own, I should therefore be considered as interested to some extent, and that any of my statements should be considered as those of one not wholly disinterested.

I had nothing to conceal, nothing of which to be ashamed, nothing to explain. And had I not made clear any possible connection of mine to such industries I might have left myself open to an accusation of concealment with an ulterior purpose by some loose-mouthed demagogic muckraker.

The next paragraph of the remarks of the gentleman from Iowa reads:

I want to raise the question now, and have it settled once for all, that not on the floor of this House, while I am a Member of it, at least, will I have my integrity impugned by a man who stands here not as a Representative but as a person representing members of his family, who are stockholders in concerns that would receive dividends under contracts that might be awarded. I believe that Members on the floor of this House should represent an American constituency, a constituency of men, and not a constituency of family members demanding dividends earned on Government contracts.

This paragraph is an honor to the fair-mindedness of the gentleman from Iowa, a high tribute to his sense of justice of right and wrong.

This paragraph epitomizes the attitude of mind of the gentleman from Iowa. Honest men are not prone to suspect dishonesty in their fellow-man. Honest men do not impugn the honesty of others unless the facts of dishonesty are self-evident, and then it could scarcely be considered an imputation. But herein has my honesty been impugned, and impugned under false pretenses.

Nowhere in my remarks did I impugn the honesty of the gentleman from Iowa; nowhere did I even question his sincerity or his good faith; but I am tempted to do so now. I realize that fact has no apparent place in the ratiocinations of the gentleman from Iowa, either in his statements about the Ammunition Trust or myself.

That the cotton mill in which members of my family are interested is situated in Georgia and has never done any business, to my knowledge, for the Government is of little moment in this controversy.

That the ammunition mill has to compete in the open market under sealed bids, and the awards are made to the lowest and best bidder, is not clearly brought out by the generous, fair-minded gentleman from Iowa. It would appear that he might properly be accused of having fallen into a misstatement of the facts in this paragraph, as he did in the first, and of making statements on a subject about which he had no information or knowledge.

The following paragraphs of the remarks of the gentleman from Iowa make no further accusations against my integrity, and while they are similarly full of false reasonings and misstatements of fact, I can not properly demonstrate the same under a question of personal privilege.

We can not afford to give any more credence to the statements and deductions of the gentleman from Iowa, in reference to the ammunition manufacturer, than we can to his statements and reasonings concerning himself or myself, and these have been proven on their own face to be inventions of an undesirable kind.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. LAMB. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the bill H. R. 18960, the agricultural appropriation bill.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Virginia moves that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the agricultural appropriation bill.

Mr. RUSSELL. A parliamentary inquiry, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. RUSSELL. Is not this the day specially set apart for bills on the Private Calendar, and is not this the day that pension bills have preference?

The SPEAKER. Both propositions are true, and yet the motion of the gentleman from Virginia is in order. The House will understand that if his motion prevails private-bill day goes over.

Mr. RUSSELL. I would like to ask my friend from Virginia to withdraw his motion and let the pension bills be considered in their regular order.

Mr. LAMB. If I consented to that there is no telling when the agricultural bill will be completed. Very likely the discussion on these pension bills will run through the whole day. I want to say further that it is very necessary that we should get through with this agricultural bill expeditiously. We have before our committee various important measures which we can not consider while this bill is under consideration. We have the antioption bill, the oleomargarine bill, the LEVER agricultural extension bill, and various other measures. We sit from 10 to 12 o'clock every morning, and then come in here and work all the afternoon. The older men on the committee can not stand it as well as perhaps some of us younger ones.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Let me suggest to the gentleman that there is on the calendar the diplomatic bill, the Indian appropriation bill, the Post Office appropriation bill—

The SPEAKER. And the river and harbor bill.

Mr. FITZGERALD. And it is necessary that the public business be given preference at this time.

Mr. MANN. Let me suggest that there is plenty of time for getting these bills through. There will be no trouble about the passage of the appropriation bills.

Mr. FITZGERALD. And there is no trouble about the passage of the bills to which the gentleman refers.

Mr. MANN. This is the day for them, and they probably can be disposed of in a few minutes if we can consider them in the House as in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. RUSSELL. My information is that there will be no contest and no opposition to them. We have only one large bill.

Mr. LAMB. I think I have given good reasons why we ought to proceed with the consideration of our bill.

Mr. RUBEN. Mr. Speaker, I rise to a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. RUBEN. If the pension business goes over to-day, does it not go over for two weeks?

The SPEAKER. For two weeks, unless there is some special arrangement by the House.

Mr. MANN. And then, probably, some other bill will want to take their place two weeks from now.

Mr. RUSSELL. Mr. Speaker, we insist that the pension bills be put upon their passage now—the day fixed by the rule.

The SPEAKER. Before the Chair puts the question, he desires to designate the gentleman from Kentucky, Mr. JAMES, to preside as Speaker pro tempore to-morrow.

The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Virginia, that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the agricultural appropriation bill.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. RODDENBERRY) there were 67 ayes and 91 noes.

So the motion was lost.

Mr. RODDENBERRY. Mr. Speaker, I make the point that there is no quorum present, and pending that I call for the yeas and nays.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Speaker, the gentleman can not do both.

Mr. RODDENBERRY. Mr. Speaker, I withdraw the point of no quorum and demand the yeas and nays.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Georgia demands the yeas and nays. Those in favor of ordering the yeas and nays will rise and stand until counted. [After counting.] Five Members have risen, not a sufficient number, and the yeas and nays are refused.

Mr. RODDENBERRY. Mr. Speaker, I demand the other side.

Mr. FOSTER of Illinois. Mr. Speaker, that is dilatory.

Mr. RODDENBERRY. Mr. Speaker, I demand the other side.

The SPEAKER. Those opposed will rise and stand until counted. [After a pause.] Evidently not one-fifth of those present demand the yeas and nays, and the yeas and nays are refused.

Mr. RODDENBERRY. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order that there is no quorum present.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Georgia makes the point of order that there is no quorum present. The Chair will count. [After counting.] One hundred and sixty-nine Members present, not a quorum.

Mr. HAMILTON of West Virginia. Mr. Speaker, I move a call of the House.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from West Virginia moves a call of the House.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Speaker, is not the call automatic?

The SPEAKER. It is automatic only when the House is dividing upon a question.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Speaker, the House is dividing upon the question of whether we shall go into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union to consider the agricultural appropriation bill.

The SPEAKER. No; that question has been disposed of. The House refused to go into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for that purpose. The question is on ordering a call of the House.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. RODDENBERRY) there were—ayes 129, noes 5.

So the motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The Doorkeeper will close the doors, the Sergeant at Arms will notify absentees, and the Clerk will call the roll.

Mr. BARTLETT. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. BARTLETT. Will the vote be on the motion to go into Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union for the consideration of the agricultural appropriation bill?

The SPEAKER. That matter has been disposed of. The vote on this is simply a vote of present. The Clerk will call the roll.

The Clerk called the roll, and the following Members failed to answer to their names:

Aiken, S. C.	Flood, Va.	Kopp	Powers

The SPEAKER. On this roll call 285 Members have answered to their names, a quorum.

Mr. HAMILTON of West Virginia. Mr. Speaker, I move that further proceedings under the call be dispensed with.

The question was taken, and the Chair announced that the ayes seemed to have it.

Mr. RODDENBERRY. Mr. Speaker, I ask for a division on suspending further proceedings under the call.

The question was taken; and there were—ayes 161, noes 7.

The SPEAKER. The ayes have it, and the Doorkeeper will open the doors.

Mr. RODDENBERRY. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. RODDENBERRY. Under the count just now by the Chair, is it in order to raise the point of no quorum?

The SPEAKER. It is not; the Chair would rule it dilatory. Further proceedings under the call are dispensed with, and the Doorkeeper will open the doors.

Mr. HAMILTON of West Virginia. Mr. Speaker, I move that pension bills in order to-day on the Private Calendar be considered in the House as in Committee of the Whole.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from West Virginia asks unanimous consent that pension bills on the Private Calendar in order to-day be considered in the House as in Committee of the Whole. Is there objection?

Mr. RODDENBERRY. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, may I ask the gentleman presenting the request how many of these pension bills there are?

Mr. HAMILTON of West Virginia. There is only one from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, and I understand one from the Committee on Pensions. They are omnibus bills and include, of course, a good many smaller bills.

Mr. RODDENBERRY. Does the gentleman recall how many individual items there are?

Mr. HAMILTON of West Virginia. There are 292 in the bill I am representing, and 9, as I understand, in the one from the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. RODDENBERRY. Does not the gentleman think that we could facilitate action on these bills by permitting this bill carrying these items to go over until the next semimonthly or bimonthly pension day, so that both bills may be considered at one time and cover the entire subject?

Mr. HAMILTON of West Virginia. I am very frank to say to the gentleman I do not know how it will expedite the bill by putting it over two weeks. I do not know what will be up then. [Cries of "Regular order!"]

Mr. RODDENBERRY. I am endeavoring to say to the gentleman that from what consideration I have given to this particular bill it shows an absence of many of the egregious provisions that, in my judgment, obtained in the other bills, but on account of the pendency of the agricultural appropriation bill, in which I have been deeply and intensely interested, I have not yet had time to consider thoroughly all the cases, and I will state to the gentleman that so far as I have gone fewer objections occur in this bill than occurred, in my judgment, in the other bills.

It is no fault of the committee at this time, because this pending report and the bill came in due time; but because of having up the appropriation bill for the Agricultural Department I have not had time to go into it as fully and thoroughly and carefully as I would desire, and I am candidly of the opinion if the gentleman will not press the question at this time that two weeks from now we will make greater progress than we will make to-day, unless the powers that be avail themselves of radical procedure.

Mr. RUBEY. Mr. Speaker, a point of order.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. RUBEY. I think the gentleman ought to state his objections or ought not to be allowed to discuss the whole matter here.

The SPEAKER. It is all by unanimous consent.

Mr. HAMILTON of West Virginia. I will state to the gentleman from Georgia there is not an item in this bill but what has been gone over twice, once by the examiner detailed by the Interior Department to assist the committee and another time by the committee itself.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. RODDENBERRY. Mr. Speaker, I must object.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Georgia objects.

PENSIONS.

Mr. HAMILTON of West Virginia. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union to consider the bill H. R. 21230.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from West Virginia [Mr. HAMILTON] moves that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole House for the consideration of bills on the Private Calendar.

The question was taken, and the Chair announced that the ayes seemed to have it.

Mr. RODDENBERRY. Division, Mr. Speaker.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 169, noes 5.

So the motion was agreed to.

Mr. RODDENBERRY. Mr. Speaker, I desire to make a point of order that there is no quorum present.

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks that motion is dilatory. [Applause.] It has not been more than five minutes since it was ascertained that there was a quorum, 284 Members being present.

Mr. RODDENBERRY. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. RODDENBERRY. Although five minutes have elapsed, and although a different motion on a different line of procedure has been before the House, the vote shows there is no quorum. Is not the raising of the point of no quorum in order?

The SPEAKER. The Chair holds that the point is dilatory. Accordingly the House resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar for the consideration of the bill H. R. 21230, with Mr. Dixon of Indiana in the chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 21230) granting pensions and increase of pensions to certain soldiers and sailors of the Civil War and certain widows and dependent children of soldiers and sailors of said war.

Mr. HAMILTON of West Virginia. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the first reading of the bill be dispensed with.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from West Virginia [Mr. HAMILTON] asks unanimous consent that the first reading of the bill be dispensed with.

Mr. RODDENBERRY. Mr. Chairman—

The CHAIRMAN. For what purpose does the gentleman rise?

Mr. RODDENBERRY. I insist on addressing the Chair. I object. I addressed the Chair before any announcement was made.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read the bill.

During the reading,

Mr. RODDENBERRY. Mr. Chairman, I do not think there is a quorum of the committee present.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will count. [After counting.] One hundred and four Members are present—a quorum—and the Clerk will proceed with the reading of the bill.

The Clerk proceeded, and concluded the reading of the bill.

Mr. HAMILTON of West Virginia. Mr. Chairman, this omnibus bill, including 17 original pensions and 275—

Mr. RODDENBERRY. A parliamentary inquiry, Mr. Chairman.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. RODDENBERRY. Is not now, at the conclusion of the reading of the bill, the first time parliamentarily appropriate to ask unanimous consent that the report of the committee on the bill be read?

Mr. RUSSELL. We object to the reading of the report.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman in charge of the bill [Mr. HAMILTON] is entitled to recognition.

Mr. RODDENBERRY. A further parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. RODDENBERRY. May I appropriately obtain information at this time whether I shall be permitted to be recognized by the Chair for the purpose of general debate on this bill, for which purpose I desire to be recognized?

The CHAIRMAN. General debate is in order at this time, but the gentleman from West Virginia [Mr. HAMILTON] has the floor. When he concludes, if the gentleman is recognized—

Mr. RODDENBERRY. I desire to state to the Chair at this time that I wish to be recognized in order.

Mr. HAMILTON of West Virginia. What time does the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. RODDENBERRY] want?

Mr. RODDENBERRY. The time allowed by the existing rules—one hour.

Mr. HAMILTON of West Virginia. An hour covers all the debate.

Mr. RODDENBERRY. Not according to the rule, as I understand it.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from West Virginia [Mr. HAMILTON] has the floor.

Mr. HAMILTON of West Virginia. Mr. Chairman, as I stated, this bill covers 292 cases. Seventeen of them are original pensions granted by the committee, and consist of allowances made to widows and, perhaps in one or two cases, to children. The total amount carried by this bill—

Mr. BARTLETT. May I ask the gentleman a question?

Mr. HAMILTON of West Virginia. Yes, sir.

Mr. BARTLETT. I understood the gentleman to say that 17 of them are increases of pensions which have heretofore been granted by Congress?

Mr. HAMILTON of West Virginia. No, sir. Seventeen of them are original pensions to widows, granted the first time.

Mr. BARTLETT. In this bill?

Mr. HAMILTON of West Virginia. Yes, sir. They are principally granted to widows.

Mr. BARTLETT. The reason I asked the question was that I knew it was the rule of the committee, and has been for many years, both in the House and the Senate, with rare exceptions, that you do not increase the pension when the pensioner's right to draw a pension is by special act.

Mr. HAMILTON of West Virginia. It depends on the statute.

Mr. BARTLETT. I thought the gentleman said that 17 of these were increases.

Mr. HAMILTON of West Virginia. No, sir.

Mr. BARTLETT. I misunderstood the gentleman.

Mr. HAMILTON of West Virginia. There are increases, but not necessarily increases over pensions granted by special acts.

Mr. BARTLETT. I am interested in the matter, because I have given that as an answer to persons in my district who desired to have bills introduced.

Mr. HAMILTON of West Virginia. The committee has a rule—rule No. 2—by which only in very exceptional cases they will increase pensions granted by Congress under special act.

Mr. BARTLETT. This committee is enforcing that rule in this House?

Mr. HAMILTON of West Virginia. Yes; the best we can. I do not know that there are any cases in this bill that would violate that rule.

Mr. BARTLETT. I simply wanted to know for my own information, because I have had correspondence on the subject with residents in my district, and in a few cases have had inquiries as to pensions under the invalid-pension law and applications for pensions for soldiers of the Spanish-American War where Congress has granted a pension by special legislative act. Then in such cases the committee does not increase that pension?

Mr. HAMILTON of West Virginia. That is the rule of the committee, but in candor I will say to the gentleman that it is not entirely inflexible. I recall to mind one or two cases in which that rule has not been followed.

Mr. BARTLETT. I think it is a rare exception, but I have known some cases since I have been here. I have known one or two cases where Congress has increased the pension of the pensioner who was pensioned by special act of Congress. The reason why I made the inquiry was that I understood the gentleman to say that there were 17 cases of that kind in this bill.

Mr. HAMILTON of West Virginia. No, sir; I did not mean to say that.

Mr. ALEXANDER. Mr. Chairman, the rule of the Committee on Invalid Pensions provides that in no instance will a pension be increased where the original pension was granted by special act of Congress. I wish to say to the gentleman in charge of the bill that if you are going to depart from that practice you ought to modify your rule. I have answered scores of letters, which I have received in cases where parties have applied for increases under those circumstances, calling attention to this rule, and up to this moment I did not understand that it had been violated.

Mr. HAMILTON of West Virginia. In a few cases only, but not in this bill.

Mr. ADAIR. There are no cases of that kind in this bill?

Mr. HAMILTON of West Virginia. No; I think not.

Mr. ALEXANDER. You ought to live up to the rule.

Mr. BARTLETT. Mr. Chairman, I would like to have the gentleman from West Virginia [Mr. HAMILTON] answer the question he started to answer. I am interested in this matter.

Mr. ADAIR. I want to say, in answer to what the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. ALEXANDER] has said, which in a way reflects upon the committee of the House, that so far as the Committee on Invalid Pensions of the House is concerned it does not now and never did have a rule of that kind. The rule making such a distinction was adopted by the Senate Committee on Pensions, but I am informed by some of the older Members in the House—and I believe the gentleman from New Hampshire [Mr. SULLOWAY] will bear me out in that statement—that the House committee has no such rule.

Mr. ALEXANDER. You mean you have no rule at all?

Mr. ADAIR. No written rules; and have not had.

Mr. ALEXANDER. These are the rules we understand that the committee has, and when we write for information to the committee those are the rules we get.

Mr. ADAIR. Does the gentleman refer to the Senate rules?

Mr. ALEXANDER. No; to the rules of the House Committee on Invalid Pensions, when we ask for the rules of the committee. This is the first time I ever knew that that was not so.

Mr. ADAIR. They are not the rules of the House committee. We turned over to the gentleman all the rules that we have in our possession.

Mr. BARTLETT. Will the gentleman allow me another question?

Mr. HAMILTON of West Virginia. Yes, sir.

Mr. BARTLETT. I did not raise this question idly, Mr. Chairman. I have three cases that I recall now where I have introduced bills, and I have been informed by the Committees on Invalid Pensions and on Pensions of the House and the Committee on Pensions of the Senate—and I want to say not by any particular member of the Committee on Invalid Pensions—but it is the general understanding that where a special bill has passed, granting a pension and fixing the amount, it is not increased in these bills coming from this committee except in very rare instances, with rare exceptions. That, as I understand, is the history of it for years in this House. It has been the practice of the committees of both Houses, both the House and the Senate, not to increase a pension when the pension had its origin in a special legislative act. I have acted upon that. I had one case here some years ago in which I secured a pension for a Federal soldier who lived in my district, in which case that rule was not adhered to, as my friend from New Hampshire [Mr. SULLOWAY] will recall. It was a very worthy case, and the gentleman from New Hampshire aided me materially in securing the increase for the old man, who was recognized as being entitled to the increase, but because of the fact that the original pension had been granted by Congress, they did not want to increase it. The old man was at that time helpless, and the Senate committee did make an exception to the rule in that case, informing me, however, that they would not do so again.

I have very few applicants for pensions in my district. Most of those who apply are veterans of the Spanish-American War and the Indian wars, but I have secured pensions for some who were in the Federal Army during the War between the States. I use the expression that the President prefers. I have uniformly told them that their pensions could not be increased, because of this rule of both the House and Senate that a pension not granted through the Pension Bureau, but originating by legislative enactment, could not be increased.

Mr. ALEXANDER. I have sent them notice to that same effect.

Mr. BARTLETT. If the committee is going to make any more exceptions, I have one or two cases that should be granted.

Mr. KENDALL. It has been the popular understanding here in the House, I think, that the rules of the Pension Committee exclude from further relief a soldier who is in receipt of a pension under a private act. That is not, however, a fixed rule of the committee. While it is a regulation which has been recognized more or less, it ought to be relaxed. If a soldier is pensioned at $24 a month under an act of Congress, and subsequent to that time he becomes totally paralyzed and requires constant attention, he should be given additional aid.

Mr. BARTLETT. I have that identical case in mind.

Mr. KENDALL. I am describing the gentleman's case.

Mr. BARTLETT. Then there is no reason why this rule should be enforced. The soldier ought to be entitled to additional benefits commensurate with his condition. I agree with the gentleman. Can the gentleman answer this question, Whether the Bureau of Pensions has authority to increase the pension of a pensioner who draws his pension by reason of a private act?

Mr. KENDALL. Not at all, unless his disabilities growing out of his service are considered.

Mr. BARTLETT. I understand the presumption is that when you pension a man by legislative act he can not get a pension at the Pension Bureau under the general law.

Mr. KENDALL. That is a mistake. If he wants to resort to the general law and can establish that he is entitled to more pension than Congress has allowed him, he has a right to do it.

Mr. BARTLETT. He must be refused at the Pension Office before we can consider his bill.

Mr. KENDALL. Other circumstances may arise—

Mr. RUSSELL. I think I can explain in just a word about what the action of the committee has been and the reason for its action. As stated by the gentleman from Indiana, as I understand, the Senate has written rules. We have not written rules. We have unwritten rules that have guided us. Bills passed by the House must also be passed by the Senate. The House committee thought it was practically useless for us to give the second increase where a man had previously one special bill, because the Senate would turn it down anyway, and has been doing it.

I understand the action of the committee on these cases has been about this: Notwithstanding the Senate rule and our unwritten rule, where a man has been granted an increase by special act, but since that time his disabilities have become greater, we felt, and I think the committee feels, and the House feels, that it would be unjust to deny him the right he is justly entitled to. But if there has been no increase in the disabilities since the private act was granted, the committee has not felt that it ought to undo the work done by the previous committee and the previous Congress by recommending an increase.

Mr. ANDERSON of Ohio. Mr. Chairman, for the purpose of correcting the impression regarding the granting of second special bills and as to the unwritten rule referred to by the gentleman from Missouri, I think you will find by referring to the printed rules of the committee that rule 2 applies.

Mr. KENDALL. Will the gentleman from West Virginia yield?

Mr. HAMILTON of West Virginia. I will yield to the gentleman.

Mr. KENDALL. I want to say that this argument is entirely unnecessary, because there are no such items in this bill.

Mr. BARTLETT. I understood that there were.

Mr. HAMILTON of West Virginia. I do not remember of any that are in this bill; there may be one or two.

Mr. BARTLETT. Then the gentleman from Iowa is mistaken.

Mr. KENDALL. I am making* the statement on the authority of some members of the committee on whose judgment I rely.

Mr. HAMILTON of West Virginia. I say that the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. BARTLETT] is entitled to a candid answer on this matter.

Mr. BARTLETT. And I know I will get it.

Mr. HAMILTON of West Virginia. I have known one or two cases where the statutory pension has been increased. I think there is a printed rule of our committee on a card which has the rule 2 which the gentleman from Ohio speaks of, but I never was present at any meeting when it was adopted.

Mr. BARTLETT. I am not making any complaint. As I stated to the gentleman, my pension cases are very few; but when the committee have sent to Members of the House printed rules which govern them in the reporting of bills, and we have informed our constituents who desire pensions that they would not be accepted, we want to know whether the committee intends to stand by the rule.

Mr. HAMILTON of West Virginia. The Committee on Pensions, of which I am not a member, has an inflexible rule of that kind, and there is where the most of the cases to which you refer come from.

Mr. BARTLETT. I have had one bill before the Committee on Invalid Pensions that ran up against this rule.

Mr. HAMILTON of West Virginia. While that rule is printed on the card, I know it is not an inflexible rule.

Mr. FOWLER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HAMILTON of West Virginia. Certainly.

Mr. FOWLER. I desire to know if the Committee on Invalid Pensions does not have a set of rules in book form, and if rule No. 2 does not declare in substance that where a soldier has been pensioned by a private act under no circumstances will the committee consider an application for an additional private act.

Mr. HAMILTON of West Virginia. I think the gentleman is right about that. I think there is such a rule printed on a card, but I never was present at a meeting when the rule was adopted, and I think I have been present at every meeting while I have been in the city.

Mr. FOWLER. Does the gentleman understand that the rule was adopted and intended to be universal and to prevent Members of Congress from encouraging those who are drawing pensions by private act from making application for a second private act?

Mr. HAMILTON of West Virginia. As I stated a while ago, I do not think the rule ever was adopted. How it got into print that way I do not know. It may have been adopted by some prior Congress.

Mr. FOWLER. I should be glad to have some gentleman inform me how it became a rule, because I have written a number of old soldiers in my district, sent them copies of that rule, and called their attention to it. Now, if that is not the rule of the Committee on Invalid Pensions, I desire to correct myself with some of these old soldiers in my district who are entitled to more pension than they are now receiving.

Mr. HAMILTON of West Virginia. All I can say is that, if it is a rule of the committee, I have known it to be violated in two or three cases.

Mr. SIMS. It has been the rule for many years.

Mr. FOWLER. One more question. I will ask the gentleman how long this rule No. 2, governing the Committee on Invalid Pensions, has been in vogue?

Mr. HAMILTON of West Virginia. I can not answer that, because, as I say, I have never been present at any meeting when that rule was adopted. I have been present frequently when it was acted on.

Mr. ANDERSON of Ohio. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HAMILTON of West Virginia. Yes.

Mr. ANDERSON of Ohio. Referring to the controversy regarding the rule granting a second special pension to the same soldier, it may be that the House Committee on Invalid Pensions has not adopted a rule, but it has been printed as a rule, and I hold it in my hand. On the first page of this pamphlet is printed "Committee on Invalid Pensions, House of Representatives." It may have been handed down in days gone by, but it does read "Rules of House of Representatives."

And on page 4 of Committee Rules, line 1 reads:

The Pension Committees of the two Houses of Congress were created to consider a very few claims, etc.

Mr. SULLOWAY. Yes; it was the Pension Committees of the two Houses, and neither of those committees is an invalid pension committee.

Mr. ANDERSON of Ohio. It is misleading, and when a soldier writes me for a second special pension I refer him to rule 2.

Mr. SULLOWAY. Well, that furnishes a nice buffer for the gentleman.

Mr. ANDERSON of Ohio. Oh, I am not in need of any buffer, I assure the gentleman. The old soldier of my district knows I will use every honorable means to help him.

Mr. FOWLER. Mr. Chairman, I will be glad to have rule No. 2 read into the RECORD, so that soldiers may understand.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from West Virginia yield to the gentleman from Illinois?

Mr. HAMILTON of West Virginia. Mr. Chairman, I have only a few words to say in reference to this bill. I do not know that it is necessary to say anything. I have already stated in the House this morning that there is no item included in this bill that has not had a thorough examination. In fact, it has been examined more than once. In the first place—and I say this for the Members of the House generally, because I have had quite a number of inquiries about it—the Interior Department, under a statute, details to the Committee on Invalid Pensions an officer, who is known as an examiner. As prerequisite to taking up any case in that committee it has to be passed upon by that examiner. I do not mean to say by that that the examiner is final upon it, but in ninety-nine cases out of a hundred I believe I would be safe in saying that no pension has ever been granted except upon the recommendation of the examiner.

Sometimes the examiner reports the case as doubtful. In that case it is then considered by a subcommittee and then by the full committee. I do not recall any case in which the examiner has made an adverse report where the claim has been allowed by the committee, although I make that as a general statement, and I may be mistaken in regard to it. I think this bill ought to pass.

Mr. HOWARD. Mr. Chairman, I would like to ask the gentleman a question about one particular claim in this bill which I have seen, and the only one to which I desire to interpose any specific objection. Probably the gentleman can explain it. It is to be found on page 38 in the report, being H. R. 6980, the case of William M. Capps. I read from the report:

William M. Capps, aged 70 years, served as a principal musician in Third Regiment North Carolina Mounted Infantry from January 15, 1865, to August 8, 1865 (seven months), and is not now a pensioner.

Address, Edwin, Tenn.

In his Confederate service he was known as Manley W. Capps and in the Union Army as William Capps and William M. Capps.

His claims under acts of June 27, 1890, and February 6, 1907, were rejected because of a prior voluntary service in the Confederate Army, and as he enlisted in the Union Army subsequent to January 1, 1865, the joint resolution of July 1, 1902, afforded no relief. His claim under the general law was rejected June 30, 1899, upon the ground of no record of alleged rheumatism, and special examination had failed to establish it as of service origin.

The last medical examination, September 3, 1892, rates him for rheumatism, weak heart, and weak mind.

Dr. G. C. Williams has treated him during the last 18 years for rheumatism and resulting disease of heart.

The physician and neighbors say he is disabled the greater part of the time for manual labor; that he owns a small house and lot, worth about $200, and has no income except the little he earns by the little labor he can do.

As he served in the Union Army seven months and was honorably discharged, a pension of $12 is recommended.

It appears that this man is not only a traitor and a deserter from the Confederate Army, but that all efforts on the part of the man to secure a pension failed by virtue of the fact that he could not make out his case at the Pension Office. He has been turned down four or five different times. Upon what ground does the committee pension this sort of man? He is what is very properly termed by my colleague, Judge BARTLETT, a tooter and not a shooter.

Mr. HAMILTON of West Virginia. The gentleman will find that he had seven months' service in the Union Army after his service in the Confederate Army.

Mr. HOWARD. Oh, the war was over when he had four and a half months' of that service.

Mr. HAMILTON of West Virginia. I do not know whether he was a deserter or not. He may have been.

Mr. HOWARD. If he was not a deserter, why did he get into the Federal Army and change his name?

Mr. HAMILTON of West Virginia. That is a pertinent question that I can not answer.

Mr. HOWARD. Did the gentleman make any investigation of it?

Mr. HAMILTON of West Virginia. I can not answer, but I will say that the examiner has reported to this committee that he served seven months in the Union Army; also that he had been rated by the department for certain disabilities. Why his pension was never granted in the department I do not know, but this report shows that by the last examination, September 3, he was rated for rheumatism, weak heart, and weak mind.

Mr. HOWARD. Now, I hope the gentleman will not misunderstand my motive in asking him this question. I am not one of those who think that nobody ought to receive a pension. I think that every man honorably discharged who rendered faithful service to the United States Government in the Civil War ought to have a pension if he is in poverty and want [applause], but I do not believe in pensioning these traitors to the Government, deserters, who can not show a ratable pensionable degree.

Mr. HAMILTON of West Virginia. I desire to say that we did not know whether the man was a deserter or anything of that kind, and we can not go into the question of morality. The Pension Committee can not go into the moral character of a man.

Mr. TRIBBLE. Mr. Chairman—

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from West Virginia yield to the gentleman from Georgia?

Mr. HAMILTON of West Virginia. For a question.

Mr. TRIBBLE. On page 88, I desire to ask a question about a case—

Mr. HOWARD. One moment. Is that the only answer the gentleman from West Virginia is capable of giving to this particular claim? Is there a record, can the gentleman who introduced the bill—

Mr. HAMILTON of West Virginia. I do not know; the report does not show—

Mr. HOWARD. Is the gentleman who introduced this bill in the House? I would just like to ask him, if he is, and I would be very glad for him to state it.

Mr. HAMILTON of West Virginia. I do not know.

Mr. HOWARD. Then, as a matter of fact, the gentleman in charge of this bill admits that he knows nothing except what is incorporated in this report?

Mr. HAMILTON of West Virginia. Nothing except what is shown in the official report, and it is shown that this man served seven months in the Union Army and he was rated for disabilities. It is shown right here in this report.

Mr. TRIBBLE. Mr. Chairman—

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from West Virginia yield to the gentleman from Georgia?

Mr. HAMILTON of West Virginia. I am answering his question.

Mr. HOWARD. You say he had a ratable disability; why did not he get a pension from the Pension Office?

Mr. HAMILTON of West Virginia. Because he had no status under the general pension law.

Mr. TRIBBLE. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield to me?

Mr. HAMILTON of West Virginia. Yes.

Mr. TRIBBLE. On page 88 of the report I find this statement:

He—

That is, this old soldier—

died in service March 19, 1865.

Mr. HAMILTON of West Virginia. What line of the bill, and what page?

Mr. TRIBBLE. I am reading from page 88, near the middle of the page:

Shortly thereafter, Nancy—

Nancy was the soldier's wife—took up with Gaven, also a soldier, and, having become a Catholic, married him by ceremony on February 15, 1878.

She took up with him and lived with him until that time and then married him. Now, further down, you will find there that the soldier, Gaven—the soldier she married—also had a wife at the time he married her, by the name of Anne Burke, and Anne Burke came to the front and administered on the estate, took his property, and there is no question, as proven by the record, that this woman was never legally married to the man on whose name she got a pension. Now, will the gentleman explain to the House how this committee gives this woman, who is not legally married, never was legally married, a pension when the Pension Bureau says that she was not? Let me read this:

The Bureau of Pensions denied her restoration on the ground that her conduct since the death of the soldier and the passage of the act of August 7, 1882, was in violation of the provisions of said act. The officers of the Church Federation of Charity, of Lincoln, Mo., in pleading for the restoration of her name to the pension roll, say that she married Anthony G. Gaven in good faith, not knowing that he had a wife living (which view is not shared by the Pension Bureau).

Now, my question was this: Here is a woman who was not married to this man. She lived with him in an unmarried state for 10 years, as the record shows, and then married him, he having a living wife. How can this committee, in the face of this fact and the Pension Bureau protesting against it, proceed to give this unmarried woman a pension?

Mr. HAMILTON of West Virginia. It seems to me that the marriage is not the bad part of this. It seems to me a woman who lived with a man for a number of years, not being his wife, when she became his wife that, notwithstanding her former bad conduct, she ought not to be condemned for that.

Now, as to this report here the committee has to take the examiner's report on this to a large extent. We can not go into every question minutely. It would take a year to do it.

Mr. TRIBBLE. You did turn down the Pension Bureau's report when they investigated. She drew two pensions. The report says:

Nancy has been the wife of two soldiers, pensioned as the widow of each; dropped from the rolls as such widow for reasons given above.

Mr. HAMILTON of West Virginia. We did not turn down the Pension Bureau's report. If the Pension Bureau had power to act in it we would not take it up at all.

Mr. TRIBBLE. They had the power, but found against it. Now, on page 24, I will ask you another question.

Mr. LOBECK. I want to ask the gentleman from Georgia to read the last part of the statement on page 89.

Mr. TRIBBLE. I did not yield to the gentleman from Nebraska. I ask, Mr. Chairman—

Mr. KENDALL. Mr. Chairman, I ask for order.

Mr. TRIBBLE. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to insert in the Record the entire case.

H R. 16528. Nancy Gaven, aged 76 years, is the former widow of Asa J. Moore, who served as a private in Company D, Sixteenth Regiment Wisconsin Infantry, from September 9, 1864, to March 19, 1865 (eight months), and is not now a pensioner under any act. Address, Lebanon, Mo.

She was formerly pensioned under the act of July 14, 1862, at $8 per month by reason of death of Anthony P. Gaven, her second husband, his death being due to service disability. Her children by the first husband and soldier's were pensioned under act of July 14, 1862, from October 28, 1865, when Nancy established marriage relations with Gaven.

Applicant and soldier, Asa J. Moore, were married about 1851, and lived together until his enlistment, September 9, 1864. They had five children. He died in service March 19, 1865. Shortly thereafter Nancy took up with Gaven, also a soldier, and, having become a Catholic, married him by ceremony February 15, 1878. They lived together until his death, August 31, 1897.

After being pensioned as his widow until 1903, her name was dropped from the roll on the ground that she was not the legal widow, since he (Gaven) had a prior wife, herself an applicant for pension.

This woman was Ann Burke, who succeeded by judgment or compromise in obtaining the estate of Anthony C. Gaven. Ann alleged that Gaven and Nancy eloped in 1866.

Nancy having been pensioned as the widow of Asa J. Moore from the date of his death, March 19, 1865, to October 29, 1865, the date of her alleged marriage to Anthony C. Gaven, the Bureau of Pensions denied her restoration on the ground that her conduct since the death of the soldier and the passage of the act of August 7, 1882, was in violation of the provision of said act.

Nancy has been the wife of two soldiers, pensioned as the widow of each, and dropped from the roll as such widow for reasons given above.

She is now 76 years old. The officers of the Church Federation of Charity, of Lebanon, Mo., in pleading for the restoration of her name to the pension roll, say that she married Anthony C. Gaven in good faith, not knowing that he had a wife living (which view is not shared by the Pension Bureau), and that she felt herself innocent of intentional wrongdoing. Further, she is an invalid, confined to her bed; that she lives with her widowed daughter, who is totally blind and who is also confined to her bed, and the two require the constant care of a trained nurse, and they have neither money, property, nor income.

The Member introducing this bill states that he has known the soldier, Anthony C. Gaven, the applicant, and her daughter for years. Just before coming to Washington last November he visited them, applicant and daughter. He says:

"In the corner of the room was the mother, sick, feeble, and almost helpless; in the center of the room, upon an invalid's bed so arranged as to be wheeled around the room, lay the daughter; so afflicted was the daughter she could only move the tips of her fingers; she could not turn her head from side to side, and she was blind. Nancy Gaven has no property; she and her daughter are dependent upon the county court and upon the charity of the people of Lebanon."

This case enlists the sympathy of all and calls for congressional relief. A pension of $12 per month is recommended.

Mr. LOBECK. Read the last part.

Mr. HAMILTON of West Virginia. Mr. Chairman, I have made a promise to a gentleman who wants to speak against pension legislation generally. I think it is right for him to be heard on this bill, and I now yield to the gentleman from Texas [Mr. CALLAWAY] for 20 minutes.

Mr. CALLAWAY. Mr. Chairman, I have always had great admiration for the truly brave, whether on the battle's front or in the walks of civil life. The first thing, though, I ever took a live interest in reading was the histories of battles. I never tired of reading of the Battle of New Orleans, when Jackson's Kentucky and Tennessee riflemen lay behind the cotton bales until Pakenham's redcoats came close enough for Jackson's men to see the whites of their eyes.

My blood boiled when I read and reread the story of the Alamo, how the heroic Crockett, the dauntless Fannin, and the indomitable Bowie, together with 157 other fit companions, held out against the Mexican army from the 23d of February to the 6th of March. I believe that man can not die better than when facing fearful odds for the idols of his country and the temples of his gods.

I have seen through the eye of history, in supremest admiration, Napoleon at Lodi, Marengo, and Austerlitz; had a storm in my blood when reading the statement of the drummer boy that "he had never been taught to beat a retreat."

I have traced in awe the maneuvers of the valley campaign made immortal by the genius of Stonewall Jackson.

I yield to no man in worship of the heroism displayed by Americans in our Civil War. It was never equaled in the history of the world and it will never be duplicated by mankind, for our people have met their last time in mortal conflict. That is the saddest page in human history, but it is made the most brilliant with exhibitions of superhuman fortitude.

I honor those who immortalized themselves in that strife, and they look alike to me whether on the one side or the other. I have no feeling in the matter whatsoever. I was born, long after the war had ended, in a State that never felt a hostile foot, and reared by a Confederate father who bore no taint of malice. He taught me that fanatics on both sides caused that fratricidal strife, and the memories of its horrors should pass and this country be an indissoluble Union in feeling, as it is in fact.

I honor them whether their jackets were blue or gray, and I will go as far as who goes farthest in paying them homage and doing them honor, but honor can not be paid in dollars and cents. When reduced to a contract basis, the apples of Hesperides turn to Dead Sea fruit. The debt of gratitude paid in cash is no longer a debt. It is effaced forever.

I owe my life to a man who risked his own to pull me from a swollen stream when I was a boy of 13. He has always been my hero. I can never pay him the debt of gratitude I owe him. It never occurred to me that I should become his slave, even had he asked it.

He taught me early in life that a debt of gratitude can not be paid with money, nor honor reduced to a cash basis.

So it is with State or Nation. When materialists want to check up the debt of gratitude and the value of honor and go to the United States Treasury for the purpose of paying it in pensions, it makes me sick. Sick because I can see the grandeur of this Republic, born of our fathers' blood and sanctified by our mothers' tears, passing away. It shows the trend of our thought, the bent of this age of avarice and commercialism. It would lead a man each time he does a patriotic deed to estimate the value of it. When he has a generous impulse the thought will occur, "What dividend will it pay?" His suffrage, which should be a service to his country, will be worth so much.

The progress of pension legislation in this country is a fruitful field for study. It reveals the remarkable power of the human faculties for development in any direction, whether for the weal or the woe of this country's future.

PENSION LAWS BASED ON JUSTICE.

In 1863, when all the promises made by those in authority to encourage men to go to the front were fresh in mind; when legislators knew the hardships undergone by men in the line; when boon companions of the pension beneficiaries made the laws; an act was passed which certainly they thought did justice to their comrades who suffered from the service. This act was amended in some details in 1873.

These acts gave pensions to all injured in the service, their widows and minor children, and graduated the allowance according to the injury received.

They made special provision for those who lost a leg, an arm, an eye or hearing. These acts had the ring of justice in them. They were passed by men who had gone through that conflict. They were passed for the benefit of those with whom they had suffered in that struggle. Those who legislated at that time were the best equipped to do the subject justice of any who have ever acted upon it, or of any who can ever act upon it. They knew the promises made as an inducement to get men to go to the front. They knew the conditions under which they entered the service. They knew the personnel of the men who answered the call. They knew the motives that actuated them and the bounties received. They knew the trials and tribulations of that awful strife. They knew what the loss was in finance and what it was in experience. They knew what it meant, not from hearsay, not from cultivated retrospection, not from fancy, not from the standpoint of political expediency, nor party advantage. They knew from actual experience, from seeing it and suffering it.

No one complained at those laws. The beneficiaries did not contend that those laws were parsimonious nor stingy. They were based on justice. Justice typified by the blind Goddess with the balances in one hand and the sword in the other. The kind of justice that inspires confidence. The kind of justice that makes a republic based on the consent of the governed, a stable government. The kind of justice that makes a happy and a contented people.

Garfield, chairman of the Appropriation Committee in 1876, presenting the pension appropriation bill under those acts, which carried $28,951,288 and provided for 232,137 pensioners, said:

My idea is, if the gentleman will allow me, that we have reached, and perhaps passed, the summit of appropriations for this object; that it took a number of years to develop, to get through with the regular form of laws to admit to the rolls the persons entitled to pensions, and that the time must necessarily come when we shall pass the climax and begin to go downward. I suppose we have already passed the maximum.

Mr. ADKINS. We reached the maximum two years ago. We appropriated last year $500,000 less than the year previous, and we appropriated this year a million less than the appropriation in the previous pension bill.

Garfield had rendered distinguished military service. He had been with the men on the firing line; he had heard the roar of shot and shell; he had had comrades fall around him; he had heard the groans of the dying; he had brought back to the grief-stricken wife the sad tale of how her life's dear lord went down with his face to the foe, a patriot serving his country. He had a mind that knew justice and a heart to do it. He helped enact those laws. As chairman of the Committee on Appropriations he was carrying out the laws he had helped to enact when he said, in 1876, all were on the rolls who were entitled to pensions.

THE FIRST DEPARTURE FROM JUSTICE AS THE STANDARD.

In 1890 an act was passed putting—all persons who served 90 days or more * * * and who may hereafter be suffering from any mental or physical disability, upon the list of invalid pensioners.

This was the first change in the principle of pension legislation. Disability due to service had been the rule in pensioning the soldiers of the Revolution, the War of 1812, and of all other wars up to that time.

That act also provided a pension for the widow of every soldier or sailor and each of his minor children no matter what the cause of his death, conditioned only that they were dependent on their own effort for support. This condition did not apply to the widows and minor children of officers. It provided a pension for them except when they had a yearly net income exceeding $250.

This was the first general act that abandoned justice as the guide. This was the first act which was generous and liberal. In dealing with the soldiers of the Revolution we had never taken generosity for our guide and liberality for our limit. We had never abandoned justice. The loadstar of this Republic from its inception was adhered to in pension legislation until we got 25 years from the Civil War and the Grand Army of the Republic was organized, cultivated, and encouraged and its political possibilities realized.

When a representative abandons necessity and justice in the expenditure of the public money he has weighed anchor, reefed sail, torn out his rudder, thrown away his chart and compass, and battened down the hatches. He is on the high seas, subject to the pressure of the winds. He is adrift, headed for no port, hedged about by no limitations.

This has been the condition in pension legislation since the act of 1890. There was no justice in that act. What was the reason for putting a man on the pension roll who suffered no injury from his service in that great war. He was as well and able as if he had never had that grand, glorious, and unique experience. What was the reason for putting a woman and children on the pension roll whose husband or father had served in the Army? I have yet to see a man who served on either side in that great conflict who did not regard it a distinction and a grand experience. It is an honor to him and to those who come after him. He never tires of talking of it. Why should he be pensioned if he suffered no injury on account of it? Why should the toilers be taxed to pension the widow of a man who enlisted as much as three months but was never injured and whose death was in no way due to his service? Is there any reason for the children of such soldier being pensioned—the children who point to their father's service as family heritage of which they are proud?

Why, on this bill introduced to-day, carrying 290 special pensioners, I see there is a person who served 3 months and 18 days put on for special pension of $30 a month. He has been drawing a pension of $15 a month since 1907. He enlisted in May and quit in August. He had a summer vacation. It says that he suffered no injury in the war, but now he is afflicted with rheumatism. He is in no worse fix than thousands taxed to pay this pension.

But having embarked on a scheme of generosity in pension legislation, bounded by liberality, the act of 1890 was, of course, the beginning and not the end of pension legislation. Thousands of private pension bills were passed each Congress; 9,623 were passed last Congress, and when these bills are passed it will make 1,500 for this Congress. Representatives in the infected districts vied with each other in fulsome flattery of the old heroes. They worked themselves up to arguing, and, worse, even to feeling, that heroism should be rewarded by something more substantial than renown; that honor was empty unless it was accompanied with cash.

THE CONDITIONS IN PENSION TERRITORY.

The Republicans, finding themselves hard pressed in close districts and States, fell back on the old prejudices engendered by the war and made believe the Republicans were the only friends of the soldier. They asserted that the Democrats were southern sympathizers and should they come into power would refuse more pensions and cut what they had. The Democrats met this argument by advocating even more liberal allowances than the Republicans had dreamed of. Representatives of one party prized the other in platform declarations, and were in turn prized. This continued from year to year and from election day to election day. They cultivated a sentiment and created a condition to which they are slaves—servile, abject slaves. Their time and energy is absorbed in pension promotion, and when they are foiled in their efforts, or even questioned about the logic of their position, they get irritable; they do not argue. They flatter the soldier and malign their opponents. Their condition is to be pitied rather than condemned.

THE TAXPAYERS, NOT THE TAX EATERS, ARE THE HOPE.

There is but one way to stay this drift; that is, combat it at the source. It can not be stopped by argument nor by an appeal to the reason nor the sense of justice of those who are directly or indirectly the beneficiaries. The average man is blind to argument that is against his interest. He is impervious to reason or logic that touches his pocket. He has no sense of justice when he is financially affected. The founders of this Republic recognized these human weaknesses and wisely provided that no judge nor juror should sit on a case in which the judgment or verdict would directly or indirectly affect him personally. The beneficiaries of pensions are average men, neither better nor worse than other men.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. CALLAWAY. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to continue for five minutes.

Mr. HAMILTON of West Virginia. How much time have I left, Mr. Chairman?

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from West Virginia has five minutes more.

Mr. HAMILTON of West Virginia. I yield four minutes, then, to the gentleman from Texas [Mr. CALLAWAY].

Mr. CALLAWAY. I thank the gentleman. But for fear the sentiment has been so cultivated and the enthusiasm so aroused by the political devotees of the old soldier that a simple statement of a truism calling attention to a fact will not suffice, and for fear there are many who have been closer followers of the fulsome flattery of the post-bellum political orators than of real history, and for fear some might think I came from too far South to do exact justice to these northern heroes, I want to quote from Charles Francis Adams, a general in the Union Army, to show that these particular warriors were mottled and mixed, even as other aggregations of men are:

The beginning of a war is always in the nature of a picnic—a stimulating novelty; everyone is anxious to have a hand in it in some shape or manner. But after the glow of the first call to arms dies away and real war reveals its grim, repulsive aspect, the response to each renewal of that call to arms grows less and less in volume, until in the case of our Civil War, within the very first year of the struggle (April, 1862) volunteering practically ceased. Under such circumstances, as everyone at all informed on that subject knows perfectly well, there is but one true course to pursue—recourse should be had to a system of conscription, exacting, stern, and even cruel. Permitting the fewest possible grounds of exemption, it should accept no excuses. Our Government in the Civil War, however, never dared have a real recourse to that drastic but alone effective measure. Conscription, in the States of the Confederacy a stern, unrelenting reality, was in the loyal States a scarecrow. Enacted under the pressure of necessity into a law, that law was used as a threat to compel local communities to band together to fill their quotas somehow. Recourse was then naturally had to the bounty system, and this early in the second year of the war. The frightful losses incurred in McClellan's peninsular campaign thus had to be made good.

The communities, local and otherwise, then combined; enlisting agencies were established; and men sold themselves and were bought and delivered singly and in lots at so much a head, like cattle. It was a wretched system, cowardly, wasteful, inhuman; but under it—and it was pursued for three years—men were quoted much as bullocks at Smithfield, a fair average valuation being, say, $3 to $6 a pound, the only difference from the Smithfield basis of dealing being that quality was not considered. Anything went.

Needless to say, the material forwarded to the front under such a system—the bogus conscription system—constantly deteriorated. In the Army this was notorious not only to everyone who held a commission, but to every man in the ranks called upon to associate with those forwarded under guard to fill up the war-worn battalions. Desertion and bounty jumping having become a calling were reduced to a system. As the war went on the recruits, recent importations from Europe or picked up in the slums and from the gutters of the great cities, were notoriously looked upon by the veterans of 1861 with averted eyes; objects of contempt; they were treated with scant consideration. Yet these, "the cankers of a calm world and a long peace," to a large extent, constituted what are now known as war-worn veterans, glorious heroes, and worthy patriots.

To one who personally recalls the events of that struggle, its hard, realistic, and mercenary features, the present-day utterances concerning it are a constant source of amused astonishment. In skimming over the columns of the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD such can not but marvel at the amount of cant and fustian—nauseating twaddle, perhaps, would not be too extreme a term—deemed useful properly to lubricate the creaking district machinery.

But lest some doubting Thomas should question that authority and still be of the opinion that every man in uniform was a courageous patriot and a hero out to serve and save his country, I will put in a few words from Abraham Lincoln: He said—he was shocked to find that of 140,000 whom we are paying for in Pope's army only 60,000 could be found. McClellan brought away 93,000 from the Peninsula, but could not to-day cover over 45,000.

As regarded demoralization, the President said:

There was no doubt that some of our men permitted themselves to be captured in order that they might leave on parole, get discharged, and go home. Where there is such rottenness, is there not reason to fear for the country?

THE END OF THE NUMERICAL INCREASE.

In 1900 an act was passed providing pensions for all widows and minor children of soldiers who served 90 days or more who did not have a net income of or exceeding $250 per year. During these years the increase in appropriations evidence the enterprise and organization of those who received pensions. That year the pension appropriation bill carried $142,303,887.

In 1907 the generous and liberal legislators passed an act which provided:

That hereafter the age of 62 years and over shall be considered a permanent specific disability within the meaning of the pension laws.

This made pensionable every man who served 90 days or more during the Civil War, except those who had not at that time reached the age of 62 years. All who served in the war reached the pensionable status during the year 1910. Seventeen was as young as any could enlist and all who were 17 in 1865 were 62 in 1910. Since then, every man who served on the Union side for 90 days, and that without reference to whether he was rich or poor, capable or incapable, a creditable citizen or a discreditable citizen, whether a citizen of the United States or a citizen of some foreign country, has drawn a pension. The Union soldiers have all got on the pension rolls. The widows of Union soldiers are all on the pension rolls, the children of Union soldiers are all on the pension rolls, the helpless and idiot children or relatives of Union soldiers are all on the pension rolls.

The average taxpayer who has patiently borne the burden uncomplainingly through all these years, while expense has grown like Jack's bean stalk to the colossal sum of one hundred and sixty millions per year, expected pension legislation to cease. "But alack! and alas! it has been ever thus from childhood's hour, we have seen our fondest hopes decay."

THE BEGINNING OF THE LIMITLESS INCREASE.

The next move was to increase the amount of the allowance, since numerically they were at their row's end.

In 1908 they passed an act increasing the pensions of widows married prior to 1890 from eight to twelve dollars per month. No voice was raised against this act, which shoved appropriations from $141,464,522 in 1908 to $155,894,049 in 1909.

The pension forces, emboldened by such successes, pressed through the House of Representatives of the Sixty-first Congress the Sulloway pension bill. It died on the Senate calendar. That was the boldest and most extravagant general act ever seriously considered by Congress. It would have taken $50,000,000 to meet its provisions. It would have raised the yearly pension expenditures to two hundred million, or about $10 for each voter in the United States, a little more than seven times as much as Gen. Garfield said they were entitled to 36 years before. The pension advocates say the ranks are thinning. Let us look at the figures. In 1876 there were 232,137; in 1911, 892,098, nearly four times as many as there were 36 years before, when Gen. Garfield said all were on the rolls who were entitled to pensions. They have been able so far to supply more pensioners by law than have been taken away by nature.

A PENSIONER FIRST, A PATRIOT AFTERWARDS.

The complexion of the lower House of Congress changed in 1910, but we were soon to learn that a pensioner is a pensioner. The Democrats came in. The Democrats, whose shibboleth for 40 years has been that—

Public money should not be spent except what is necessary in the honest and economical administration of public affairs.

The Sherwood pension bill, variously estimated to add from forty-six to seventy-five millions to our present pension expenditures, which approximate one hundred and fifty-three millions for this year, accompanied the Democratic shibboleth into the Sixty-second Congress and knocked that shibboleth into a "cocked hat." Gen. SHERWOOD's Democratic bill prizes SULLOWAY's Republican measure. It goes it one better. It is in line with the manner in which the conditions have been created in the States that send pension slaves to this House. A Democratic House pledged to economy and honesty in the public expenditures rammed that bill through. They forced it through in the face of the statement of Mr. FITZGERALD, chairman of the Appropriations Committee, that—

Its enactment sounds the death knell of the hopes of the Democratic Party successfully to reduce expenditures and lower substantially tariff taxes.

They forced it through in the face of the statement of the gentleman from New York [Mr. HARRISON], a member of the Ways and Means Committee—

That the tariff on sugar could not be reduced should this bill become a law.

They rammed it through for the purpose of getting with it enough soldier votes to bring them back to Congress and possibly carry their States for the party.

THE REAL PURPOSE OF THE SULLOWAY AND SHERWOOD BILLS.

It was an effort to beat the Republicans to it. The advocates of that measure argued that should the Republicans ever get back in power they would pass then a pension bill that would perpetuate them in power. The proponents of that measure claimed the Republicans would win unless that bill was passed. If it was passed, the Democrats would return. The question, then, was, according to the arguments, whether the Democrats, having the power, should buy that vote with pensions or let it go to the Republicans, who have heretofore held it with pensions.

If that vote can be bought with pension money this year, it can be bought with any other kind of money. If it has to be bought at this election, it will have to be bought at the next election and at the next one. It is not worth the price.

THE REAL SEQUENCE OF SUCH LEGISLATION.

It is not only the cost to this Government in dollars and cents, it breeds indolence and vice in the recipients; it undermines self-respect by removing the necessity for self-reliance; it saps independence and begets dependence.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. RUCKER of Colorado. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. CALLAWAY. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to conclude my remarks.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman asks unanimous consent to conclude his remarks. Is there objection?

Mr. RUCKER of Colorado. Mr. Chairman—

The CHAIRMAN. Will the gentleman from Texas yield to the gentleman from Colorado?

Mr. CALLAWAY. Yes.

Mr. RUCKER of Colorado. Is the gentleman going to vote against this bill?

Mr. CALLAWAY. Yes; I am going to vote against every pension bill. I think we are already overloaded with pension burdens.

Mr. RUCKER of Colorado. Has the gentleman more than five Members among his colleagues on this side of the Chamber to join with him in that vote?

Mr. CALLAWAY. I never asked that question. It is not a question of how many will vote with me. The question with me is whether or not I am right.

Mr. HAMILTON of West Virginia. Mr. Chairman, I have only one minute left.

The CHAIRMAN. The committee gave unanimous consent for the gentleman from Texas to complete his remarks.

Mr. OLMSTED. Mr. Chairman, I suggest that the Chairman did not put that question to the committee.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Texas has asked unanimous consent for sufficient time in which to complete his remarks. Is there any objection?

Mr. OLMSTED. Mr. Chairman, I object to unlimited extension of time.

Mr. FOSTER of Illinois. Mr. Chairman—

Mr. RODDENBERY. Mr. Chairman, I rise to a point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. RODDENBERY. The Chair had definitely stated the request for unanimous consent and had ruled thereon, and debate has followed thereunder.

The CHAIRMAN. That is true; but the Chair did not put the motion to the committee.

Mr. BEALL of Texas. Did not the gentleman from West Virginia reserve his minute and then demand recognition immediately after the gentleman from Texas concluded?

Mr. OLMSTED. Mr. Chairman, I object, as I say, to an unlimited extension of time. The gentleman might talk a week.

Mr. CALLAWAY. It will take me about four minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Texas asks unanimous consent for four minutes more. Is there objection?

Mr. OLMSTED. I have no objection to that.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair hears no objection.

Mr. CALLAWAY. It supports in idleness thousands who should be engaged in creative employment. They would be better off if forced to rely on their own efforts, and would add to the world's wealth instead of absorbing substance they never created.

That is exemplified, Mr. Chairman, in the difference to-day in the feeling of dependence of the soldiers of the North and the feeling of independence of the soldiers of the South, who have had to depend upon their own energy and exertions for their support.

I want to quote here from no less authority than Gen. Charles Francis Adams, a great-grandson of President John Adams, on the influence of such gifts as have been made by this Government in pensions. He said:

The matter of provision to be made for those who for any reason are insufficiently provided for is no new question. On the contrary, in one form or another it has as a problem occupied the attention of the individual man, the legislator, and the business administrator or director almost since the beginning of time. And if, as a result of all human experience, through largesses, distributions, charitable bequests and foundations, poor laws and workhouses, doles, outdoor reliefs, asylums, and pensions—the panem et circenses of all times and kinds—one fact stands forth more distinct and indisputable than most others it is that promiscuous and indiscriminate benefactions and givings are a curse to all concerned. In such case the demand always exceeds the supply; feeding on itself, the thing fed grows with an exceeding growth. Impairing self-respect, it saps the desire of self-help. It creates dependents and begets mendicants.

That this is a correct statement of the effect of giving is known to every student of human nature.

And he said, further:

That our pension system tends to pauperize the community by undermining that sense of self-respect always incident to self-support hardly admits of denial; that indiscriminate giving, regardless of individual requirements, restricts the funds available for the relief of the truly deserving and really needy is a self-evident proposition. That such a condition of things calls for reform is obvious.

THE SHERWOOD BILL IS NOT THE END OF PENSION LEGISLATION.

A cursory examination of the speeches made by the advocates of the Sherwood pension bill shows conclusively that they do not offer that measure as the concluding pension act, but simply as one of their pension acts. The gentleman from Ohio [Mr. ASHBROOK], in giving his views on the Sherwood pension bill, said:

I am a firm believer in generous and liberal pensions.

He then stated that he would include widows without restriction, and that he wanted to strike out the thousand-dollar income provision of the Sherwood bill, and said those opposed to all kinds of pension legislation worked that provision into the bill. Then he asks:

Why let these gentlemen dictate to those who are friends of the soldiers? Let the soldiers' friends make this bill.

Another proponent of this measure states clearly that this bill is prepared at the instance of and for the benefit of the soldiers. He says:

Hence we have tried to do what seems best for the soldiers by preparing this bill * * *. I am also for this bill, because I have ascertained from the soldiers of my district that they are in favor of this, the Sherwood bill * * *. Here is a letter advising me of a meeting held in my district only one week ago by one of the largest Grand Army posts in the district that I represent.

Then he reads the letter as an argument for the bill.

The foregoing are but samples of the arguments made for the Sherwood pension bill, that if passed will increase the tax burdens somewhere between forty-six and seventy-five millions of dollars. The public welfare, the future of the country, the effect on the electorate of the land, or the burden upon the already overburdened taxpayers does not enter into these arguments, but the question is what do the soldiers want; and the promise to them is that their Representatives will get for them now and in the future everything that they can get, and what they can get seems to be limited only by what the Treasury has.

Mr. LONGWORTH, of Ohio, who voted against the Sulloway bill in the last Congress, in discussing the Sherwood bill stated that he was going to vote for it now that the Supreme Court has held the corporation-tax law constitutional, and "that we can afford to pass some pension legislation." He said when the Sulloway bill was before the House last year the Secretary of the Treasury appeared before the Ways and Means Committee and stated that we could not meet a $50,000,000 charge on the revenues without a bond issue or without additional taxation. We got the additional taxation in the corporation tax, therefore.

It has always been my conviction, and I believe it is the conviction of the average man, that those who are affected by judicial decisions should not determine the judgment, but that the judgment should be rendered by those who are not personally affected and those who can not be affected by the judgment; and the law of the land should not be made by those who are personally affected by the laws or who are direct beneficiaries under the law, and I do not believe that pension grants should be determined by our ability to levy and collect taxes. My views, though, are wholly at variance with the arguments and statements above quoted. The above quotations evidence the influence and motives actuating pension legislation.

THE POLITICAL POWER OF THE ORGANIZED PENSIONERS.

And Mr. Adams further said:

It is safe to say that there is to-day in Washington, or in the world, no influence which, in its power to break down opposition and to bring about the legislative results it desires, at all comparable to the influence which has grown up and become organized under the existing United States pension system.

The present Secretary of the Treasury, the Hon. Franklin MacVeagh, referring to the present Civil War pension system, in April, 1911, said:

That it had lost its patriotic aspect and now become a political list.

These statements show that the men making them knew and appreciated the conditions actuating the men of this House in their vote on pension questions.

According to the statements, arguments, and actions of those from the infected territory, pensions determine elections. It is not party principles; it is not tariff, high or low; it is not whether the Government shall be administered honestly and economically; it is not whether the few shall continue by means of law to take toll from the many; it is not how burdensome the taxes shall be, but how much pension are we to get. Lest some man should say that I am radical in my statement of the motives and influences in this House that backed these measures and pushed them through, I shall quote Mr. HUGHES of New Jersey, a member of the Ways and Means Committee and seven years a Member of this body. He put it bluntly but truthfully, courageously, and like a patriot, not a timeserver:

Fifty million dollars a year is too big a price for the country to pay to bring me back to Congress.

He was speaking of the Sulloway bill. If his words mean anything, they mean that bill was a vote purchaser.

I am going to add here a statement showing the number of pensioners in each State and Territory, each insular possession, and each foreign country on the rolls June 30, 1911, and the amounts paid during the fiscal year 1911, together with disbursements for pensions and for maintenance of the pension system from 1866 to 1911. This does not give an adequate estimate of the political influence of pensioners unless in looking at it you multiply the number of voters by their political activity and concentration of effort.

If it has come to this, that the giving of pensions is to purchase votes; votes in the pension districts of this country that determine elections, National as well as State, what must be the consequence when that condition is understood and appreciated by the millions of yeomanry who each year pay their taxes and have heretofore biennially marched over the hills to deposit an honest, unselfish ballot in the hope that this Government would do even-handed justice to all? [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from West Virginia [Mr. HAMILTON] has one minute remaining.

Mr. HAMILTON of West Virginia. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that general debate be closed in one hour and five minutes; one hour of the time to be controlled by the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. RODDENBERRY] and five minutes by myself.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from West Virginia [Mr. HAMILTON] asks unanimous consent that general debate be closed in one hour and five minutes; one hour of that time to be controlled by the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. RODDENBERRY] and five minutes to be controlled by himself. Is there objection?

Mr. BARTLETT. Mr. Chairman, reserving the right to object—I do not know that I will object—I desire to call the attention of the Chair and the attention of the committee to the fact that the fixing of general debate is not in the power of the Committee of the Whole. It rests with the House. Now, I am not going to object, but I do not desire—

Mr. HAMILTON of West Virginia. If the gentleman will yield to me a moment, I would say that I fully understand that I could not do it by a vote, but by unanimous consent, if the committee so desires.

Mr. BARTLETT. Well, Mr. Chairman, I am not going to object to its being done by unanimous consent. I do not oppose that, but I do not like these precedents—that are sought to be set, and I merely rose for the purpose of calling the attention of the committee to it. I think it is a bad precedent, and it ought not to be accepted as a precedent without some sort of protest. I do not object.

Mr. RODDENBERRY. Mr. Chairman, reserving the right to object. Before acquiescence in the request, I desire to state that I understand that the request of the chairman of the subcommittee provides for general debate for one hour and five minutes, one hour to be controlled by myself and five minutes by himself. Of course it is to be noted that the gentleman from West Virginia has already consumed one hour of general debate.

Mr. HAMILTON of West Virginia. Oh, certainly. I mean five minutes besides that. I want to yield that time to the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. RUBEY], who desires to explain a bill here. I do not want a minute of it for myself.

Mr. RODDENBERRY. I want to say, Mr. Chairman, in order that my colleagues on this side who desire time may have it, one hour may not be sufficient. I expect to use an hour myself. Thus far no Members have requested to be given time. If they desire it before this agreement is entered into I should like to be apprised of it. I have no desire to utilize all the time.

Mr. TRIBBLE. Mr. Chairman, reserving the right to object, I do not want to concur in any agreement that will affect our rights under the five-minute rule. Does this affect our rights under the five-minute rule?

The CHAIRMAN. It does not in any way affect the five-minute rule. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from West Virginia?

There was no objection.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Georgia [Mr. RODDENBERRY] is recognized for one hour.

Mr. HAMILTON of West Virginia. Does the gentleman from Georgia want to use some of his time now?

Mr. RODDENBERRY. Yes.

Mr. HAMILTON of West Virginia. Otherwise, I would be glad to yield to the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. RUBEY].

Mr. RODDENBERRY. That can be done at any time. I shall have no objection.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Georgia [Mr. RODDENBERRY] is recognized.

Mr. RODDENBERRY. Mr. Chairman, in the discussion of all pension legislation since I have been a Member there has been a manifest absence of dealing with that great question without interjection now and then and ever and anon of nonessentials, of appeals to sympathy, of recounting the heroic deeds of the past. But notwithstanding all that has taken place to do honor and justice to the Army of this country, Members, in my respectful and candid judgment, have not exercised that caution, that prudence, that the real soldier deserves and that the taxpayers of the country are entitled to. There has not been that caution against placing upon the pension rolls of this country the names of persons who, neither by service to the country nor sacrifice for it, deserve to be there; and I am rising now to direct the attention of the House to the fact that while noble names go upon that roll no ignoble names should mar the brilliant page of the great array of Union soldiers who fought for their conscience and for their country as they saw it. I desire to say to you that it is a dishonor to the country and a discredit to the soldiers upon the pension rolls to put side by side with them the names of persons who never served their country, of men who deserted their country, of men who, by legerdemain, by artifice, by favoritism, and by fraud are now enrolled on this great page of honor. We shall discuss it somewhat presently.

Two May months have passed since I came here. On each recurring Memorial Day, to Arlington, beneath the arch built there, and in full view of the massive construction of the Amphitheater of Fame, which has carved upon it the names of the illustrious men of the days of 1860-1865, in full view of the imposing columns of the southern colonial home where the great Lee lived and began his matchless career, I have journeyed with my little children and the other and greater half of my household. There, beneath the trailing vines and under the clear heavens, while the swelling notes of the Marine Band were set in full attune, where but lately the President of this country stood wrapped in the folds of his country's flag, doing honor and reverence to the soldiers of the Union in that great struggle, I and my household have sat, amid the harmony of that far-famed aggregation of musicians, and under the inspiring voice of the orator, the President of the Republic. Along with all the rest, we offered up our devotion, we mingled our applause, and tendered our share in doing honor to the soldiery of the Republic and all that is noble in it.

And when we come to discuss this subject, I would have gentlemen on either side understand that we approach it with nothing save the conception we have of a just consideration of this legislation. I recall well two weeks ago, when this subject was considered, there was no voice then to explain one of these bills. I do not complain, gentlemen. It is a part of the decree of the political life of the country in its legislative procedure. There was no voice then raised in explanation. There was no colloquy indulged in with fairness that light might be thrown upon this legislation. I will not say there was contempt, but there was silent inaction. By and by the powerful Committee on Rules was called together, and in council they prepared what they call a rule to close debate, to close amendment, to close consideration, and to throttle and to shackle this body of the people's representatives. At this moment I see neither the gentleman from Texas [Mr. HENRY] nor the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. DALZELL]; but when that committee repaired to their room to prepare that rule under a Democratic House, I would ask those gentlemen, if they were here, who dictated the rule of February 23?

Whose hand wrote the rule of February 23, which was brought forth to shut off debate and consideration in a Democratic House? Was it HENRY or was it DALZELL? Go to the room of the journal clerk of the House and see the chirography of that rule and see whether the gag was that of HENRY or that of DALZELL. See whether or not, in formulating the rules for the Democratic majority, it was written by the hand of a Democrat or by the hand of a Republican. Gentlemen, the voice was the voice of Jacob, but the hand was the hand of Esau. No party expediency, no danger of party future, shall let me give my assent that the rules of procedure of the Democrats of this House shall be drafted by the arch Republican gagger of the last 20 years, the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. DALZELL], without a protest and without calling attention to the fact.

The bill now before us is smaller by some 60 or 70 names than that of two weeks ago. I note the improvement.

I scarcely find to-day any of these $50 pensions in it. They tell us the committee has agreed not to put in any more over $50. They say, gentlemen, that hereafter the committee will not indulge individual Members to rise in their places and quiescently adopt amendments that they have drafted. So after all, if we may say it, perhaps a little publicity connected with this pension legislation will not be detrimental to the country or degrade the Union soldier.

I say to you now that within the last fortnight there have come in my daily mails letters from Union soldiers—not from the South—there have come from inmates of soldiers' homes letters protesting against this procedure and favoritism. There have come from presidents of western universities letters of approval of the position we have taken on this question. They have read the Record. There have come from the State of New York, the State of Pennsylvania, the State of Massachusetts, the State of New Jersey, and elsewhere communications from citizens, some of whom say they were soldiers in the war, emphatically indorsing the position we have taken in the interest of the just appreciation and treatment of the soldiers of the Union Army and in defense of the burden bearers of the country. At some future day we may have an opportunity and the permission to file them in the Record or to read them from the floor of the House, giving Members the information as to the opinion some men in this country entertain in regard to this reckless exploiting of both political parties in the name of the tottering, crippled, and aged Union soldiers.

Gentlemen, it is absolutely appalling that men in their solicitude for their political fortunes, far transcending their solicitude for the Union soldier, should tremble when public discussion of this question is raised. Gentlemen dare not deny the statement from their own lips, from their own utterances—it is heard in the hotel corridor, it is heard in the cloakrooms, and, more than that, it is heard privately on the floor of the House—that this pension question is literally embedded in our politics, and that it will be political suicide to ventilate it. God spare such patriotism and such statesmanship!

Observe here to-day Members of the House, when specific cases of private pensions are brought to the notice of gentlemen who bring in the bill, that they stand without explanation because they can not make it, I assume. They stand without reason and without justification for taking a condemned soldier and a questionable widow and placing them on the pension roll, when I doubt not there are thousands of true soldiers who deserve recognition, and I would not deny it to them.

Oh, the history of the pension legislation of this country! I can not read it without being tedious and exhausting. But we turn to the Commissioner of Pensions' report for 1911. The number of individuals in the military and civil service of the United States during the Civil War is estimated at two million two hundred and odd thousand. The number of survivors of the Civil War on the pension roll at the close of the fiscal year was 539,000.

It is stated by the commissioner that but about 25 per cent of the Union soldiers now survive, and I do not question his statement. We find now on the pension roll the entire remnant of that great army that for four years met that other great army, the like of whose heroism on either side the annals of no history transcend. They are there. Has the country neglected them? Has it declined from any geographical portion of this Republic to do honor and pay tribute and yield support from our Treasury to them in their need, their infirmity, or in their age? I deny it. A thousand general statutes well-nigh have been enacted to provide for every conceivable contingency.

In the same report we come to the special private pension bills. They began very modestly, but now run to the enormous number of twenty-two thousand and odd privileged acts for those who were fortunate enough to ingratiate themselves into the favor of their Members of Congress. Most of the soldiers of the Civil War are now pensioned under the act of February 6, 1907, and apply for increase only as they become 70 or 75 years of age.

Yet, be it remembered, gentlemen, that long before 1907, beginning with 1861, pension statutes were passed, and vast numbers under those statutes have been receiving pensions. Year by year the pension allowance has been increased. In 1878, 1890, 1899, 1900, and 1907 the restrictions of examination were modified, and the rules were relaxed in order to make easier the obtaining of a pension; the construction of the Commissioner of Pensions has been liberal, has been generous—sometimes well-nigh to a fault.

I will take up somewhat directly the pension legislation. The laws have been extended to the widow and the children and to dependents, and I do not challenge it immoderately. Various statutes provide for furnishing a limb or an arm, and give the soldier the right to take his arm or his lower limb, or to take money in lieu of it.

The Treasury of the Republic, supplemented by treasuries of great States, have provided homes for them, and they are there, cared for in comfort, and in addition are permitted to draw as high as $17 a month pension in addition to care and support in the home. I here declare to you that I am not one of those who would undertake to consign the Union soldier to a home whether he wills or not. If, perchance, in Iowa, in Indiana, Pennsylvania, or some other State, ill provided though he may be, he desires to spend his remaining years in less comfortable quarters, with less food, with less raiment, than in a soldiers' home, I would not deny that to him. It is but a tribute to, and evidence of, his patriotism. It tells a story that swells the hearts of all of us, that the man, though he may be infirm and needy, loves to linger about the scenes of his childhood and to live and die at the hearthstone of his boyhood and manhood. I would give to them adequate pensions to get the necessities, and let the home be optional with them.

But, Mr. Chairman, that is no justification for an adulterous woman being on the pension roll nor for a deserting soldier drawing from the Treasury of this Republic. According to the report of the Commissioner of Pensions criminal prosecutions are infinitesimal, but you say that it is a broad statement that many undeserved ones go on the list. The same commissioner undertook to check the pension roll in a very gentle, very effeminate way, and with apparent great trepidation to peruse the rolls and make some interrogation as to the record and deservedness of some of them. His report Members have seen. It says that some were found who were perpetrating fraud on the Government, and he says further:

Last fall it became apparent from letters received in the bureau and certain press articles that the impression obtained in some parts of the country that the pension roll was honeycombed with fraud.

Now, make ready to hear:

To settle the question beyond all controversy by determining whether the pension roll was a roll of honor or otherwise, I obtained favorable permission from those in authority over me to check up the pension roll. I mean by that, ascertaining whether every person drawing a pension is entitled to it. The task is no small one, as the bureau must first get the names and the last-known post-office addresses of the pensioners from the pension agents, and then field men must go from pensioner to pensioner to learn whether the proper persons are drawing the pensions.

And, gentlemen, what is the objection that we hear interposed on the floor of this House to such a procedure? It is not that there is no fraud on the pension roll, but that it will cost more money to detect the fraud than it will to pay it. My God, what does such an argument lead us to? In other words, gentlemen, they are there, but let them remain; do not uncover them, for it will cost money.

We owe it to the integrity of the Republic, we owe it to the integrity of the legislative body of the country to investigate. We owe it to the Union soldier and his descendants and to the past and future history of our country to rid this roll of honor of fraud, of perjury, of perfidy, of national shame.

I read again from the commissioner's report:

The special examiners employed upon this work have paid particular attention to the marital relation of the pensioners and have reported thereon, and the data so obtained will assist greatly in disposing of widows' claims when the same are filed.

Why, if they found no fraud, what help would it be?

Here is more of the farce:

Whenever it has been ascertained that a pensioner is known by any name other than that under which pensioned, a full investigation has been made to prove identity and age at enlistment, which will also be of benefit in adjudicating claims which may hereafter be filed.

And so purging the pension rolls is ended. The people of this country will not stand for that whitewash. Standing well-nigh alone before you, and with little open approval from Members, I say to you now, and mark it, that the patriotic soldier, the patriotic woman, the patriotic journal, the patriotic populace, will not let the pension history of this Nation and its glory be clouded and enrobed in curtains of fraud and of dishonor.

The day of reckoning will come. If this is unpatriotic, then appealing for the honor of the Nation is unpatriotic. If this is demagoguery, then demagoguery is a sleuth in pursuit of fraud. If this is calculated to disrupt political parties or to embarrass, it is no less calculated to render a measure of service to the people who send us here. Read the history of this Republic, and where is there any neglect of the American soldier? As early as 1861 the Volunteer Army was placed on the same basis of pay for disability as applied to the Regular Establishment. A year later $8 per month was added, and there follows, compiled by the junior Senator from Florida, a well-nigh complete tabulation of the general pension history of the country, and I shall hand it to the reporter and let him incorporate it as a part of my remarks. But, mark you, when our pension outlay is tabulated and summed up, it appears that the Treasury of this Government has contributed for pensions four billions of dollars.

As early as 1861 the Volunteer Army was placed on the same basis of pay for disability as applied to the Regular Establishment. A year later $8 was fixed for noncommissioned officers and privates and $30 for officers of the rank of lieutenant colonel and above. To widows during widowhood, or, if none, to children under 16, then to mothers, then to dependent sisters under 16, pensions were granted. In 1864 an elaborate specific disability pension bill was passed, providing a table of rates for certain named injuries ranging from incapacity to perform manual labor to the loss of hands, arms, feet, legs, hearing, and eyesight, the rates of which have been increased from year to year. General provision was made for those who had not suffered such serious loss but who for any reason were so disabled as to render them incapable of performing manual labor, and it was left to the Commissioner of Pensions to determine this general class. On page 122 of a compilation prepared by the Commissioner of Pensions in 1905 will be found the rates fixed by him for disabilities not specified by this act of 1864. The allowance fixed for inability to perform manual labor, due to the military or naval service, was $15 per month. This amount was increased in 1883 to $30 per month, and it has been the law since 1883 that anyone so disabled in the service as to be incapacitated to perform manual labor shall receive a pension of $30 per month. In 1866 brothers and fathers were added to the pensionable class. In 1868 arrears of pensions were allowed to pensioners on account of death, disease, or discharge, but in this act was included a provision that the application must have been filed within five years after the date of death or disability. It would seem that five years ought to be sufficient time within which any person might ascertain whether he had been wounded or disabled, and if within such time a person had not complained of wound or injury the presumption ought to be conclusive that he had not been wounded or disabled during the war.

From 1874 to 1878 the amounts paid out for pensions began to decrease year by year. In 1878 an effort was made to allow arrears in pensions, and claim agents and pension attorneys became active. The Commissioner of Pensions, in his report for 1878, called attention to this agitation and pointed out the great inducements to fraud and imposition. Notwithstanding this the arrears act of 1879 was passed by Congress. It provided that all pensions granted, or to be granted, in consequence of death, wounds, injury, or disease received or contracted during the Civil War, should commence from the date of the death or discharge from service of the person on whose account the claim had been or should be granted, or from the termination of the right of the party having prior title to such pension. The bill as it passed the House fixed no time limit for filing applications. The Senate proposed an amendment to the effect that the application must have been filed by July 1, 1880. This amendment was finally agreed to, although it was vigorously opposed in the House on the ground that it would be despicable on the part of the Government to limit the time of application for pension. The Government was sought to be placed in the unpopular attitude of a debtor in a lawsuit on the common counts, pleading the statute of limitations in order to avoid the payment of his just debts. In the circumstances usually attendant upon the enthusiasm aroused by pension oratory the provisions of the act of 1868 were forgotten. The almost irresistible impulse to take inventory of all the ills and aches that flesh is heir to and attribute them to imaginary disabilities due to a war that had passed into history 15 years before was ignored. At last war neurasthenia was recognized. The commissioner, in his report of 1879, pointed out the easy method of obtaining pensions and the temptation to commit fraud. An amendment was offered to have the United States represented and not allow the proceedings to continue ex parte. This amendment was rejected. The Government was not to be represented; no reflection was to be cast upon the imagination of an applicant or the diagnosis of his friendly physician. It was considered undignified to question the right of any pensioner to receive in a lump sum compensation for disabilities which he might suppose originated 14 or 18 years before. It would have been remarkable if weak human nature had not yielded to this temptation. That it did yield is shown by the remarkable increase in the pension roll. I ask leave to insert table of first payments for the years 1878, 1879, 1880, 1881, 1882, and 1883.

First payments for year ending June 30—

1878	$2,992,352.17
1879	5,763,758.60
1880	12,468,191.20
1881	23,628,176.61
1882	26,421,669.19
1883	29,906,753.94

These first payments increased from less than $3,000,000 in 1878 to nearly $30,000,000 in 1883. Of course it requires time for the Pension Bureau to pass upon these claims. In 1879 the applications were more than double those of any previous year except 1866, when the Army was disbanded, and almost double the rate of that year. The Commissioner of Pensions complained that his office force was unable to keep up with the correspondence. Congress has been appealed to since the passage of this act to repeal the limitation with reference to the time of application, but it has so far resisted the appeal except as to widows. In 1888 the act, in so far as they were concerned, was repealed, and they have thus been enabled ever since that time, by complying with the terms of that act, to receive in a lump sum a pension for the full period of widowhood. Commissioner Evans, in his report of 1889, cites an instance of a widow who had remarried collecting in one sum the accrued pension which was allowed to her on account of the death of her soldier husband. By the beneficence of this provision in the act of 1888 she was enabled to collect nearly $4,000 for the use and benefit of her second husband.

In 1890 the so-called invalid-pension act was passed, granting to anyone who had served 90 days or more, and who then or may thereafter suffer from a mental or physical disability, not the result of his own vicious habits, which incapacitates him from the performance of manual labor in such a degree as to prevent him from earning a support, pensions ranging from $6 to $12 per month, according to the degree of disability. The disability need not be due to the service; it may have been caused by any act not due to the vicious habits of the applicant. This pension act constitutes both a health and accident policy, issued by the Government. Reference to the table of disbursements, which will be hereafter incorporated, shows an immense increase in the pension roll, on account of this act of 1890. Let it be borne in mind that provision had already been made for disabilities due to the service, and let it also be borne in mind that by act of 1883 the rate allowed for disability due to the service was $30 per month; in other words, the rates under the general law are higher than the rates under the act of 1890; and yet we are forced to meet, face to face, the fact that immediately 110,000 more persons were pensioned under this act than under all the others combined; and that, beginning with 1890, we were placing on the pension roll a class that could not show, even by ex parte proceedings, disability due to service. By this act widows were pensioned at the rate of $8 per month who were without other means of support than their daily labor. In 1900, however, they were given a pensionable status, if they were dependent upon their labor for support, and had only a net income of $250; and in 1908 they were pensioned irrespective of whether they were dependent upon their labor for support, and irrespective of whether they had an income. In 1892 the Army nurses were pensioned at $12 per month. In the pension appropriation bill of 1906 a provision was made that the age of 62 should be considered a permanent, specific disability within the meaning of the pension laws. By the act of 1907 pensions were granted to any person who served 90 days or more in the Civil War, or 60 days in the War with Mexico, upon the sole ground of age. Those who have reached the age of 62 are entitled to a pension of $12 per month; 70, $15 per month; 75 or over, $20 per month.

It has been a curious incident of our pension legislation that whenever the pension roll shows a decrease, legislation has been enacted the result of which has been to increase the annual amount; as the numbers have decreased, the allowances to those yet surviving have been so increased as constantly to require an increased expenditure.

If, temporarily, this matter has been overlooked for any reason, early opportunity has always been embraced to more than make up for the oversight. I ask leave to print, without reading, table of disbursements from 1866 to 1911:

Disbursements for pensions and for maintenance of pension system, 1866 to 1911.

I would not recall a just penny that has gone to the maimed faithful soldier of the country, but I pronounce a curse on every dollar that has gone into the pockets of pensioners by fraud and deception. Deserters are to-day drawing pensions at public expense. I challenge this Congress to provide a legitimate and adequate method of searching carefully these rolls. Oh, but they say it throws the old soldiers in a state of turmoil while in their last days. Gentlemen, the old soldier who in Pennsylvania, who in Virginia, who in Georgia, who in Tennessee, in obedience to command, with armor buckled about him, with musket on his shoulder, marched without a tremor and without a fear into the face of cannon and into the death of musketry, will never tremble when you seek to investigate his military record and his services. He will welcome it and it will add new luster to his valor and to his glory. Ah, but on the other hand, when you go to investigate, when you go to inquire, when you go to ferret, when you go to pry, when you go to seek out the stealthy pensioner, the meat hunter, the guard hanger, the rear trailer, the tree dodger, the mountain hider, the deserter, the impostor, the traitor, the belligerent who never fought, he will quake and will tremble until his knees will smite together.

And you say that it is no part of a government's legislative duty? These utterances I lay upon the consciences of Representatives, and they shall reach the eyes and thought of the people of this country. If there be treachery and disloyalty in these utterances, I shall be condemned and despised, and deserve no better. If these words, on the contrary, touch upon a festering spot of national shame and finally redound to the honor of the Republic, I shall be content.

Mr. CLINE. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RODDENBERRY. I do.

Mr. CLINE. I have been very much entertained by the wholesale charges of fraud and moral depravity on the part of the Pension Office of this country and the men who are administering it, the impeachment of the integrity and personal honor of every Member of Congress here, and if it is true, as the gentleman says, about Members of Congress voting the public money out of the Treasury to secure their return to seats in this body, those men ought to be impeached.

Now, in this statement that the gentleman made, would not he be kind enough, in assuming that there is a large amount of fraud in the administration of the office of the Pension Bureau, to cite to us a few instances, to get down to brass tacks, to give some facts upon which he bases his allegation. The general statement that fraud is a bad thing and a man ought not to have the benefit of fraudulent action, by the Committee on Pensions, is conceded by everybody, but why not give us some specific instances, enough at least to vitiate the law and make it a reproach to the Members who have enacted it. I would like to hear the gentleman on this point.

Mr. RODDENBERRY. I am glad to have the interruption of the gentleman. No word from me can impeach the Members of this House, but the utterances we make in that regard are made public and will go in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, and we stand now and hereafter everywhere by every one of them. I need not say to the gentleman who asked for a bill of particulars, that his own ears have heard his colleagues say, "This thing will beat us for reelection."

Mr. CLINE. I beg to correct the gentleman there.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman yield?

Mr. RODDENBERRY. I do.

Mr. CLINE. I have no recollection of hearing any gentleman on the floor of this House say—

Mr. RODDENBERRY. Not publicly; I did not say publicly; I stated in conversation, privately, about the hotels.

Mr. SHACKLEFORD. May I ask the gentleman a question?

Mr. RODDENBERRY. When I finish with the gentleman from Indiana.

Mr. CLINE. If the chairman pleases, I want to purge myself from any inkling of that kind, so far as I am concerned, for I have no recollection of any man who has taken an oath to support the Constitution of the United States and discharge his duties as a Member of this body so far compromised himself as to say that he would support either in public or private a pension bill for the purpose of getting back into this body.

Mr. RODDENBERRY. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen, as the remarks and exposures of Gen. Adams have been so oft quoted, I shall not present them again. You are familiar with them. But I will say to the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. CLINE] that he can not seek to break either the force of the awful truth of the general's statement read on the floor, for which I stand responsible now and ever hereafter, by demanding a bill of particulars. I am no prosecutor nor pursuer of the individual Members of this House, but there is no one here, on the floor or off of it, that dares tell me that the utterances I make are untrue.

Some of them have been politically trembling, so they have expressed themselves. In my own time and without fear and without faltering, when in my judgment as a public duty it becomes necessary to so speak, I shall not hesitate to be even more specific, assuming all responsibility therefor. And, moreover, I say to the gentleman who asks specific instances of men who have perjured themselves to get on the pension roll, invoke the power of this House to afford an exhaustive and impartial investigation. It will develop startling facts. Beyond all peradventure it will verify and establish my statement that crooked records have been straightened; that the charge of desertion has been legislated away; that the deserters have been translated from oblivious shame into well-rewarded pensions; that widows with mercenary motives have imposed on aged soldiers and bound them in wedlock that they might survive to draw their pensions. It will further develop that women who lived lives of questionable repute, as reports of this committee show, are finally rewarded from the Treasury of the Republic; that bounty-seeking men who ensconced themselves safely on the side of the Confederacy when the fighting was light on that side and translated themselves to the Army of the Union when the fighting was light there have gotten on the pension roll. I challenge the House to inaugurate the investigation.

Mr. CLINE. Have you more than one instance where the committee of this House has pensioned a man, or proposed to pension a man, who deserted from the Confederate service in mind right now?

Mr. RODDENBERRY. Not right now. But that reminds me—

Mr. CLINE. Just one other question. You got away very rapidly from general legislation to special legislation. My remarks were directed to the general legislation of this House, and then you undertook to back up your arguments by here and there a scattering instance that crops out in the special bills that are filed in this House. I want to ask the gentleman whether he is able to say that Congress has ever refused to investigate any fraud that was properly brought before it?

Mr. RODDENBERRY. Not being possessed of the information, I can not inform the gentleman.

Mr. CLINE. What steps has the gentleman taken to have the Pension Office investigated by filing a bill and having it referred to the proper committee, in order to find out whether there was any fraud in the execution of the pension laws?

Mr. RODDENBERRY. I will say to the gentleman, in the first place, there is no necessity for that procedure, but if there is I am taking steps now—decided steps, unequivocal steps, unevasive steps, and fearless steps, if you please.

Mr. CLINE. I want to ask you if it would not facilitate the investigation to file a bill of that character? The gentleman understands this, that with the broad, sweeping declaration, without bills of particulars, or without bringing the matters to the notice of the officers in the administration of this bureau, except by his mere unsupported declaration, no one will pay attention to them.

Mr. RODDENBERRY. Perhaps they will not, but the country will. Mark you, now, these words. Some of you have already heard from home, and I can look you in the face, and in my own good time, if need be, I will call names. You have heard already. I will read further from the report of the Commissioner of Pensions:

The special examiners on this work have succeeded in causing the arrest of two bogus special pension examiners—

Is it any disloyalty for a Member in his place to ask for an investigation, when your own commissioner shows that bogus pension examiners are going over the country imposing on the old soldiers of the Republic whom you so much love and we all honor?

That report further says:

As well as ascertaining the names of two others for whom a thorough search is now being made.

And we read:

It was decided to check up the rolls—

Where?

At Washington and Knoxville pension agencies, and by the result to determine whether the rolls of the other agencies should be looked into.

Now look at this investigation. The Commissioner of Pensions says: We will take Washington and Knoxville to check up by and see whether the other pension agencies shall be inquired into. They find, according to this recording and their checking of the books of the pension examiners, fraudulent names on the roll. And how much more investigation has been reported to the House? None. The investigation died in its birth. Ah, my friend, when he wants to know if I can not give one more case, reminds me of the old darky who was charged with chicken stealing. When the overwhelming evidence appeared that Jones had a coop with 30 hens and two roosters in it, and it was proved that Ephraim took a yellow-legged hen and a red-combed rooster; when the witnesses had established the fact he rose with great complacency when asked, "Ephraim, what do you say?" "Well," said Ephraim to the judge, "the witnesses say they had 32 chickens in dat coop, an ef they only prove dat I got two of them I do not know what they have got to complain of when I left all the others." [Laughter and applause.]

That is the trouble with the gentleman. One case, two cases, are sufficient, I imagine, to put the Congress and the country upon inquiry. Gentlemen pass over it now with great complacency, but the end is not yet. I am glad to know that on the 8th day of March, 1912, the Democratic leaders of the House have so progressed and have so relented of their gag-rule tactics of two weeks ago that they will not repeat it now. [Applause.] If nothing else has been achieved, if nothing else has been attained except to deter this mighty committee in its mad rush to gamble in the pension rolls further, this much has been accomplished. They seem to deem it wise to stop before passing the threshold of another Cannon rule.

I rejoice that the members of the committee will now occasionally rise and answer questions respecting special bills and private pension favors. It was not so two weeks ago. I challenge you to go to the country on the various cases presented this morning, particularly the one presented by my colleague from Georgia, Mr. TRIBBLE, and one exposed by my colleague, Mr. HOWARD, of Georgia.

I challenge you to take those specific cases to the country and undertake to have the people approve your findings. They will overrule you with their ballots and condemn you with their votes from one end of this country to the other. Such bills are indefensible and can not be apologized for.

We may just as well now approach these pension bills as we approach other legislation. Bring these measures in and let the public gaze be turned upon them. Here is a report covering 118 pages, containing 293 separate private pensions. The report is full of instances telling of the turning down of the applicants by the Pension Bureau; and yet, gentlemen, these bills are brought here to be voted upon and passed before any Member can obtain from the Commissioner of Pensions or War Department the complete war record and military career of the soldier. I may confront my friend from Indiana [Mr. CLINE], whom I regard highly, before four more weeks have passed, with pension and war records of some of these pension grafters that will well-nigh answer all of his inquiries, but in 48 hours it is impossible to study out and delve into the military records of 290 men.

Ah, why delve into it to-morrow, when the bill is passed? Why delve into it next week, when these names are on the pension roll? Why not come and let them be investigated and looked into and studied out now? We owe it to the true soldier; we owe it to judicious legislation; we owe it to ourselves and to the country. Do the pensions we now pass comport with the careful analysis and most scrupulous judgment of the House? Other bills will come in here by and by. Gentlemen, take no unction to yourselves that you can place the brunt of this feeble resistance to this legislation on one man, and crush him and go on. Gentlemen, take no solace to yourselves that because, forsooth, the vote on this floor is overwhelming, you can pass these bills over the resistance of a small number and nothing but faint echoes be left behind you.

These days will come again. Then for no vexation, for no parliamentary delay, for no political advancement shall we pursue the course our judgment dictates and directs. Come, gentlemen, hereafter with these bills fewer in number and purer in character. Come with these bills increasing pensions for soldiers who have straighter records and less of kinks. Bring in here the names of widows who are not so distantly related to the alleged husbands that the Pension Commissioner said he could not find that the woman enjoyed any legitimate marital relations. Come with bills for widows who do not need a special law to establish their relations with the soldier, after four different applications to the Commissioner of Pensions have been turned down. Bring the names of men whose records in the Army are so clear that it does not take a special report of the Pension Commissioner or a special act of Congress to take away the stain of desertion and to restore them to the status of faithful American soldiers. Bring forth the needy soldiers of this Republic, and bring with them their dependent children and their helpless widows, and we will pension them as they desire, and the country will approve.

But no longer think that there shall be brought forward this species of legislation to be passed as sausage through the mill without resistance and without impediment. Be not impatient on this question. Conscious of your great majority, with full knowledge of your power and your right to legislate, go on, oh, men, go on, but, mark you, the American people will never acquiesce in anything which brings infamy, dishonor, and corruption to the pension system of this Republic. From our roll I would strike no poor and disabled man who braved danger or faced death; but on this roll I would tolerate no man who failed in the hour of conflict, who deserted on the day of battle. Nor will the people. But the bills you present and the reports you make cast suspicion in their very language on 40 per cent of them. Turned down because the evidence before the Pension Commissioner did not show they were disabled; turned down because it did not show service; turned down by the Pension Commissioner because it did not appear that the women were related to the soldiers in a legal way; yet they are reported to Congress, and under the favor of the legislators of the Nation given a pensionable status, and thereby given access to the Treasury.

Gentlemen, pursue that course if it is right, and I shall come to shame quite justly. Adhere to this policy, but know well that whoever deserves the opprobrium of the country, in the end will receive it. Go on if you will with this special legislation, selecting out the favored few, and feed them from the Government Treasury. In the days to come retribution will be visited upon those who perpetrate it. Vast as are the numbers of the survivors of this great war; momentous as were the issues they determined, as trembling in the balance was held the fate of our Republic; great as was that crisis, no greater in horror was that crisis than the other crisis that our country confronts—that of turning the pension roll of this country into a roll of pillage and of plunder. When the wealth producers and burden bearers of the country, week after week, see written upon the American pension roll the names of persons such as some of these, it marks a chapter in the history of this Republic that every brave citizen and every courageous soldier will frown upon. It is no encouragement to patriotism. It is no inspiration to youth. It is no honor to true men who merit their just reward.

I implore gentlemen of the House, in the love of country, to cast scrutiny upon further legislation of this character and guard well the roll of honor of American heroes. Do not be partial, do not discriminate. I shall, if my strength lasts, interrogate the committee hereafter with regard to some of these particular items. I have submitted to you what I believe, upon careful and calm reflection, will have a different consideration than you have hitherto accorded. These observations by me, as a servant of a patriotic constituency, have been made. Upon them the country may pass its own judgment. My duty, as I see it, to the utmost is performed. I shall serve with you here in future days, and shall ask no less and no more fair consideration for this legislation than is asked and accorded to other measures.

The power of the majority may, in the language of another, "work its will," but, mark you, gentlemen, when the power of the majority of this country in the days that are gone. In working its will, has ignored the will of the people that majority has come to grief and by the sovereign at the ballot box has been defeated. May I finally warn you, my Democratic colleagues, that so long as we exercise the right and the power of our majority by doing the will of the American people with courage, with justice, and with judgment we may expect and we will retain the confidence and approval of the voters of this land.

When we turn our majority into a tyranny, into an autocracy composed of one, or into a dynasty composed of a few, contrary to the fundamental principles of a Democracy, contrary to the patriotic convictions of our people, then, gentlemen, the day of our undoing comes, and then will we forfeit national trust and national confidence.

Mr. LITTLEPAGE. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RODDENBERRY. How much time have I remaining, Mr. Chairman?

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman has two minutes.

Mr. RODDENBERRY. I can not yield. I wish the gentleman had interrupted me earlier and then I would gladly have yielded. I must respectfully decline now.

No star in the emblem of this Republic should ever be dimmed by the stain of an ignoble name on our pension roll. No flag that waves over an American democracy should ever be anything less than the insignia of popular government.

To this democratic Republic it is imperative that the peoples' Representatives guard the Treasury, legislate for the masses of our countrymen, maintain with honor the roll of our soldiery, establish by wise laws equal and exact justice between all men, whether widows, whether soldiers, whether farmers, whether laborers, whether taxpayers. The bone and sinew of this Republic which achieves its fortunes, creates its wealth, will never hesitate to bear with cheerfulness the just burdens of raising millions of wisely expended revenue, but the yeomanry of these States will rebel and refuse to follow that party or that majority which places about their necks the yoke of unequable taxation or the shackles of galling pension legislation. Mr. Speaker, I have done. [Applause.]

Mr. HAMILTON of West Virginia. Mr. Chairman, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. RUBEY].

Mr. RUBEY. Mr. Chairman, a little while ago in the discussion of this question the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. TRIBBLE] called the attention of this House to an item in this bill and asked that it be placed in the Record, and in doing so he called the attention of the House to the fact, or rather made the allegation, that the claimant in this case is unworthy because of her character.

Let me say to you that I have been a Member of this House but a little while, but should I serve in this great body for 20 years I shall never knowingly introduce into this body a pension measure against the applicant of which there can be truthfully said a single word as to his or her high moral character. If I did I would render myself unworthy of the respect of my fellow Members. [Applause.]

I have known the applicant in this case for more than a third of a century. She lives in my home town. I want briefly, because I must be brief in the time allotted to me, to give you a history of this case. Her first husband was named Moore. He died while in the service. Shortly afterwards she married Anthony C. Gaven. With him she lived in the town of Lebanon for many years. He was the proprietor of a little corner grocery store. I traded with him often. In 1897 he passed away. His widow, Nancy Gaven, applied for a pension and received a pension. Just a little while afterwards there appeared upon the scene a woman who claimed to be his wife by a prior marriage. The matter was taken into the court and she proved her claim, and every bit of the property belonging to Gaven was given to this woman, who claimed to be his first wife. When this woman appeared upon the scene the people of the entire town were absolutely astounded. They had never dreamed of such a thing, and so far as I know, and so far as our people know, and we believe, that this claimant, Mrs. Gaven, when she married Gaven, had no idea that he then had a living wife. Nancy Gaven then applied for a pension as the widow of Asa J. Moore, her first husband, who had died while in the service. That claim was rejected upon the ground that she had married Gaven while he had a living wife.

I say to you that there can be no immorality attached to this widow upon that ground. I want to say to you here and now that you can go down to that little city and talk to the citizens of my town, and you will not find a single person who in all these 30 years has looked upon this woman or upon Gaven himself with any other idea than that they were both of high character.

I want to say further that on Sunday before I started to Washington I visited this little home. I went into a little cottage, and in that cottage I witnessed a scene which, I say to you, my friends, I hope I may never again witness in all my life. In one corner of the room, in an invalid chair, was the widow whose case is now under discussion. In the center of the room, upon a cot so constructed as to be easily moved from place to place, lay her invalid daughter, a woman from 30 to 35 years of age. This daughter could move only her fingers and her toes. She was absolutely unable to move herself, even to turn her head from side to side. Not only that, but that daughter was blind—from her eyes had been shut out for many years the light of day. In that condition this young woman, the daughter of a soldier and the daughter of this claimant, had been lying for more than 10 years. They have absolutely no property. They have been supported by the people of my own city, and this $12 a month that in justice to her has been awarded by this committee will not pay for the nurse hire necessary to take care of them during the long days and nights they must lie there and suffer.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. ANDERSON of Ohio. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman be given two minutes more.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. RUBEY. Mr. Chairman, during all these years this claimant and her invalid daughter have been kept up by the people of my town. The woman who came and claimed to be the wife by a former marriage got every bit of the property that belonged to Gaven and to-day these people are upon the charity of my city and county. That case is a worthy one, and if there were against the character of this claimant the least possible stain I would not be here asking this House to give her a pension.

Mr. ANDERSON of Ohio. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RUBEY. Certainly.

Mr. ANDERSON of Ohio. Is it not true that this woman, the widow of two veterans, the first having been shot down in the service and the second having seen long service, has received the support of the officers of the church federation of charity of the town of Lebanon, Mo.?

Mr. RUBEY. That is true.

Mr. ANDERSON of Ohio. And is it not true that this old woman is past 76 years of age?

Mr. RUBEY. That is true; and in addition to that I will say that the ladies of my town take care of her, and the officers and others of the federation of churches in my town visit her and look after her, and there is not a lady in my town who holds that there is anything of immorality which attaches to the character of this old lady or they would not be doing that sort of thing.

Mr. LITTLEPAGE. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RUBEY. Certainly.

Mr. LITTLEPAGE. I just want to say to the gentleman that when the time comes if he will move to double that pension I am one Member of Congress who will vote to increase it. [Applause.]

Mr. RUBEY. Mr. Chairman, as was suggested by the gentleman from Ohio, this woman lies in a helpless condition, the widow of two soldiers, one who lost his life in the defense of his country, and the other who was wounded in battle. There with her, depending upon her, and upon the neighbors for subsistence, is the invalid daughter of one of those soldiers. These good women have asked me to present this case to the Congress of the United States; and let me say if this is the kind of bills that my two friends from Georgia [Mr. TRIBBLE and Mr. RONDENBERY] are going to bring up here and criticize, then I say the more they criticize the better it will be, because this is an absolutely worthy case. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. By order of the House, general debate is now closed, and the Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

The name of John W. Turner, late of Company I, Fourth Regiment West Virginia Volunteer Cavalry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $24 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

Mr. HAMILTON of West Virginia. Mr. Chairman, in the preparation of this bill there was a mistake made. The pensioner is now drawing $24, and it was the intention to allow him $30, and I have a certificate here from the Pension Bureau to that effect, and I move to strike out the figures "24" and insert the figures "30."

Mr. TRIBBLE. May I ask the gentleman a question?

Mr. HAMILTON of West Virginia. Yes, sir.

Mr. TRIBBLE. I understand that is purely a clerical error?

Mr. HAMILTON of West Virginia. Yes; I will read what—

Mr. TRIBBLE. That is all the answer I desire.

Mr. HAMILTON of West Virginia. It is the indorsement of Mr. Albert, the examiner, saying that it is an inadvertence, and it ought to be $30.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Strike out, in line 8, page 1, the word "twenty-four" and insert the word "thirty."

Mr. TRIBBLE. Mr. Chairman, in reply to what Gov. RUBEY has just said—

Mr. HAMILTON of West Virginia. Mr. Chairman, I ask for a vote on this amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The motion is debatable, and the gentleman from Georgia has a right to debate the amendment.

Mr. RUSSELL. But the gentleman does not want to talk to this amendment.

Mr. TRIBBLE. I have the floor under the rule. I desire to say, Mr. Chairman, that there is not a man in this House for whom I have a higher regard than I have for my friend from Missouri [Mr. RUBEY]. I think he is a man of the highest honor, but Gov. RUBEY failed to explain a few things to this House. I am satisfied that it is very easy to explain these things to my friend from West Virginia here, who is anxious to help his soldier friends, but my friend from West Virginia, before he goes back to his constituents, had better read the report of this committee and a few things contained therein before he makes such a broad statement. I know my friend from West Virginia to be one of the best Representatives among the new Members and a just and fair man. Now, the committee made this statement. It says:

Shortly thereafter—

That is, after 1865, when this woman's husband died—Nancy took up with Gaven.

And she lived with him in that state until 1878, and then she became a member of the Catholic Church, and under the rules of the Catholic Church they forced her to marry him.

Mr. RUBEY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Georgia yield to the gentleman from Missouri?

Mr. TRIBBLE. No, sir; I have only five minutes. The gentleman has had his say.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman yield?

Mr. TRIBBLE. No, sir; I have only five minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman refuses to yield.

Mr. TRIBBLE. Now, Mr. Chairman, I call attention to this fact. Here is a bureau refusing to accept the proposition that this woman did not know that a wife of the man with whom she lived and later married was living; they refused it. Now, look to the action of the committee. It promptly overrules the bureau and grants a large pension. I call attention to another fact, that when this man died his wife turned up promptly. She was there to get the property, and yet in the face of all these facts the committee comes into this House and says that these people had been living together for 25 or 30 years, and Nancy did not know that this other woman was in existence. But she was there when the property was to be administered.

Now, Mr. Chairman, I desire to call attention to some other cases as I go along. On page 24, and I desire gentlemen to read it, there they say, "this woman's claim was rejected in 1909 on the ground that she was not the legal widow of the soldier, as she had a former husband living and undivorced when she married the soldier." Now, Mr. Chairman, this question is not contradicted, nobody undertakes to deny that proposition, but what do they do? They come in here and undertake to protect her by saying that when she married she was so young, under the laws of the State the marriage was invalid. Let us see whether it was invalid or not. The courts of the State of Pennsylvania make this ruling, and it was in that State where the parties lived and where the contest came up:

The Pension Bureau held, following a decision of the courts of Massachusetts, wherein it was held that the age of consent in that Commonwealth, as by the common law, was 12 years for females and 14 for males, and that a marriage between two infants above these ages was valid without the consent of their parents or guardian, notwithstanding the statutes prohibit magistrates, etc.

The court says the Pennsylvania statute on this question is—

Merely directory and was a corrective measure and aimed at the prevention of youthful marriages, and that there was no provision declaring such marriages void in the event that they were good as at common law.

The court and Pension Bureau held the marriage valid.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. HOWARD. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for just one minute, not for the purpose of entering into a discussion of this subject.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Georgia asks unanimous consent to proceed for one minute. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. HOWARD. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to print in the RECORD speeches made by the Hon. OSCAR W. UNDERWOOD, of Alabama, on "The protection of profits" before the Southern Society of New York on December 16, 1911, and on "George Washington" before the State Society of the Cincinnati in Philadelphia on February 22, 1912, and on "Federal Government and public roads" before the American Automobile Association Convention on January 16, 1912.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Georgia [Mr. HOWARD] asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD by printing the three speeches he has designated. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. HOWARD. The following are the speeches referred to:

PROTECTION OF PROFITS.

ADDRESS OF HON. OSCAR W. UNDERWOOD, OF ALABAMA, DELIVERED AT THE ANNUAL BANQUET OF THE SOUTHERN SOCIETY OF NEW YORK ON THE 16TH DAY OF DECEMBER, 1911.

"The kaleidoscope of political issues must and will continually change with the changing conditions of our Republic, but there is one question that was with us in the beginning and will be in the end, and that is the most effective, efficient, and fairest way of equalizing the burdens of taxation that are levied by the National Government. Of all the great powers that were yielded to the Federal Government by the States when they adopted the Constitution of our country the one indispensable to the administration of public affairs is the right to levy and collect taxes. Without the exercise of that power we could not maintain an army and navy; we could not establish the courts of the land; the Government would fail to perform its function if the power to tax were taken away from it. The power to tax carries with it the power to destroy, and it is, therefore, a most dangerous governmental power as well as a most necessary one.

"There is a very clear and marked distinction between the position of the two great political parties of America as to how power to tax should be exercised in the levying of revenue at the customhouses.

REPUBLICAN PARTY HAS ALWAYS STOOD FOR PROTECTION.

"The Republican Party has maintained the doctrine that taxes should not only be levied for the purpose of revenue, but also for the purpose of protecting the home manufacturer from foreign competition. Of necessity protection from competition carried with it a guaranty of profits. In the last Republican platform this position of the party was distinctly recognized when they declared that they were not only in favor of the protection of the difference in cost at home and abroad, but also a reasonable profit to American industries.

DEMOCRATIC PARTY FOR TARIFF FOR REVENUE ONLY.

"The Democratic Party favors the policy of raising its taxes at the customhouse by a tariff that is levied for revenue only, which clearly excludes the idea of protecting the manufacturer's profits. In my opinion, the dividing line between the positions of the two great parties on this question is very clear and easily ascertained in theory. Where the tariff rates balance the difference in cost at home and abroad, including an allowance for the difference in freight rates, the tariff must be competitive, and from that point downward to the lowest tariff that can be levied it will continue to be competitive to a greater or less extent. Where competition is not interfered with by levying the tax above the highest competitive point, the profits of the manufacturer are not protected. On the other hand, when the duties levied at the customhouse equalize the difference in cost at home and abroad, and in addition thereto they are high enough to allow the American manufacturer to make a profit before his competitor can enter the field, we have invaded the domain of the protection of profits. Some men assert that the protection of reasonable profits to the home manufacturer should be commended instead of being condemned, but, in my judgment, the protection of any profit must of necessity have a tendency to destroy competition and create monopoly, whether the profit protected is reasonable or unreasonable.

UNFAIRNESS OF PROTECTION.

"You should bear in mind that to establish a business in a foreign country requires a vast outlay both in time and capital. Should the foreign manufacturer attempt to establish himself in this country he must advertise his goods, establish selling agencies and points of distribution, before he can successfully conduct his business. After he has done so, if the home producer is protected by a law that not only equals the difference in cost at home and abroad, but also protects a reasonable or unreasonable profit, it is only necessary for him to drop his prices slightly below the point that the law has fixed to protect his profits, and his competitor must retire from the country or become a bankrupt because he would then have to sell his goods at a loss and not a profit if he continued to compete. The foreign competitor having retired, the home producer could raise his price to any level that home competition would allow him, and it is not probable that the foreigner who had already been driven out of the country would again return, no matter how inviting the field, as long as the law remained on the statute books that would enable his competitor to again put him out of business.

INIQUITY OF THE PROTECTION OF PROFITS.

"Thirty or forty years ago, when we had numbers of small manufacturers, when there was honest competition without an attempt being made to restrict trade, and the home market was more than able to consume the production of our mills and factories, the danger and the injury to the consumer of the country was not so great or apparent as it is to-day, when the control of many great industries has been concentrated in the hands of a few men or a few corporations, because domestic competition was prohibited. When we cease to have competition at home and the law prohibits competition from abroad by protecting profits, there is no relief for the consumer except to cry out for Government regulation. To my mind there is no more reason or justice in the Government attempting to protect the profits of the manufacturers and producers of this country than there would be to protect the profits of the merchant or the lawyer, the banker or the farmer, or the wages of the laboring man. In almost every line of industry in the United States we have as great natural resources to develop as that of any country in the world.

"It is admitted by all that our machinery and methods of doing business are in advance of the other nations. By reason of the efficient use of American machinery by American labor, in most of the manufactures of this country the labor cost per unit of production is no greater here than abroad. It is admitted, of course, that the actual wage of the American laborer is in excess of European countries, but as to most articles we manufacture the labor cost in this country is not more than double the labor cost abroad. When we consider that the average ad valorem rate of duty levied at the customhouse on manufactures of cotton goods is 53 per cent of the value of the article imported, and the total labor cost of the production of cotton goods in this country is only 21 per cent of the factory value of the product, that the difference in labor cost at home and abroad is only about as 1 is to 2, and that 10 or 11 per cent of the value of the product levied at the customhouse would equal the difference in the labor wage, it is apparent that our present tariff laws exceed the point where they equalize the difference in cost at home and abroad, and we realize how far they have entered into the domain of protecting profits for the home manufacturer.

WOOL, IRON, AND STEEL.

"This is not only true of the manufacture of cotton goods, but of almost every schedule in the tariff bill. To protect profits of necessity means to protect inefficiency. It does not stimulate industry, because a manufacturer standing behind a tariff wall that is protecting his profits is not driven to develop his business along the lines of greatest efficiency and greatest economy. This is clearly illustrated in a comparison of the wool and the iron and steel industries. Wool has had a specific duty that when worked out to an ad valorem basis amounts to a tax of about 90 per cent of the average value of all woolen goods imported into the United States, and the duties imposed have remained practically unchanged for 40 years. During that time the wool industry has made comparatively little progress in cheapening the cost of its product and improving its business methods. On the other hand, in the iron and steel industry the tariff rate has been cut every time a tariff bill has been written. Forty years ago the tax on steel rails amounted to $17.50 a ton; to-day it amounts to $3.92. Forty years ago the tax on pig iron was $13.60 a ton; to-day it is $2.50. The same is true of most of the other articles in the iron and steel schedule, and yet the iron and steel industry has not languished, it has not been destroyed, and it has not gone to the wall. It is the most compact, virile, fighting force of all the industries of America to-day. It has long ago expanded its productive capacity beyond the power of the American people to consume its output and is to-day facing out toward the markets of the world, battling for a part of the trade of foreign lands, where it must meet free competition or, as is often the case, pay adverse tariff rates to enter the industrial fields of its competitor.

DUTY OF THE GOVERNMENT—GENUINE TARIFF REDUCTION TO A REVENUE-PRODUCING BASIS ONLY.

"Which course is the wiser one for our Government to take? The one that demands the protection of profits, the continued policy of hothouse growth for our industries, the stagnation of development that follows where competition ceases, or, on the other hand, the gradual and insistent reduction of our tariff laws to a basis where the American manufacturer must meet honest competition, where he must develop his business along the best and most economic lines, where when he fights at home to control his market he is forging the way in the economic development of his business to extend his trade in the markets of the world? In my judgment, the future growth of our great industries lies beyond the seas.

"A just equalization of the burdens of taxation and honest competition, in my judgment, are economic truths; they are not permitted to-day by the laws of our country. We must face toward them and not away from them.

"What I have said does not mean that I am in favor of going to free-trade conditions or of being so radical in our legislation as to injure legitimate business, but I do mean that the period of exclusion has passed and the era of honest competition is here.

"Let us approach the solution of the problem involved with the determination to do what is right, what is safe, and what is reasonable."

GEORGE WASHINGTON.

ADDRESS OF THE HON. OSCAR W. UNDERWOOD, OF ALABAMA, DELIVERED AT THE ANNUAL BANQUET OF THE STATE SOCIETY OF THE CINCINNATI, HELD IN PHILADELPHIA ON WASHINGTON'S BIRTHDAY, FEBRUARY 22, 1912.

"Surely by no other body could this great anniversary of the Nation be more appropriately celebrated than by your society of splendid traditions, for Washington not only took an important part in its formation, but, in large measure, became its directing head during the early days when its continued existence was threatened by adverse criticism.

"Those of you who enjoy membership in this society may well be congratulated, for it is a privilege greater than membership in any order of aristocracy or nobility of however distinguished rank or origin, because eligibility for it means that you can trace your ancestry back to the great men who served this Nation in an accomplishment which has had more to do than any other single event with the shaping of the political progress not only of this country but of the world.

IMPORTANCE OF COMMEMORATIVE EXERCISES.

"All of us, however, that have not this privilege may have a share which should not yield even to you in gratitude to those who wrought such momentous things. And it is on such occasions as this, which are altogether too few, that duty and interest as well should prompt us to resolve to see to it that grave matters affecting the public welfare shall not hereafter, as often as they have been in the past, be subordinated to our personal or political affairs. In such a way we shall make the wisest use of this day.

"The place and the time are not appropriate for us to attempt anything like an inventory of our assets as a people, for, as men of different political faith, we might not be in accord as to how the inventory should be taken. There are some acquisitions we have made which, from my point of view, are to be regarded as unfortunate, since in securing them it may be said that we have overlooked what concerned our national well-being. All of us at times are capable of forgetting that things in life have a relative as well as an absolute value. If, in obtaining something, we have lost something, we are not, in making up the items of our resources, whether national or personal, to disregard the debits; but we are to have a balance sheet so that we know how it really is with us. The headlong rush for possessions or advantage exposes us to the risk of many a rough fall; and as time goes on the homely adage, 'All is not gain that is got into the purse,' has a widening application to nations as well as to men.

SUBJECT STATED.

"Yet certainly at a time like this, though we may hope to say little, if anything, new, we can, whether Democrats or Republicans, without debate or controversy, take counsel with ourselves as to some of the underlying considerations which have made our Nation what it is, and which, if adhered to, will keep it strong and righteous and capable of resolving the doubts and surviving the dangers likely to confront us as time goes on; and to what wellspring so refreshing and invigorating can we better have recourse than to the career and to the words of Washington! Some of us have no great respect for the so-called referendum; but we all ought to approve of a referendum of what politically is new and untried and uncertain and of doubtful worth to his counsel, from which proceeded always light and judgment.

HONOR ROLL OF THE FOUNDERS.

"It is an inspiration to the loyal American citizen merely to call the roll of the men in whose brain and heart was born the conception of the Republic, who laid its foundations so deep and lasting that there is no height to which we might not build, whereon to keep burning a great light for our guidance and for the guidance of all people; who drew a Declaration of Independence which voiced, as it has never been voiced before, the longing of men for political liberty; who carried the Colonies through a well-nigh hopeless struggle; who devised the Articles of Confederation—that 'firm league of friendship'—as a modus vivendi for a people under arms, and then supplemented it with a Constitution that welded together into an indissoluble Union the interests to which war had given only temporary cohesion—a Constitution which, under the interpretation of John Marshall, was to be, as he said, a document not of definition but of enumeration, and therefore of increasing and broadening significance such as perhaps no other similar writing before has ever had.

"There were giants in the earth in those days.' In no other period in our history, or perhaps of the history of the world, were there gathered together so many gifted men, each with his special capacity for contribution to the success of a nation's cause, as Washington, Jefferson, Franklin, Madison, Patrick Henry, the Adamses, Edmund Randolph, Robert Morris, Charles Carroll, of Carrollton, and James Wilson, too, so intimately identified with this Commonwealth of Pennsylvania, and all the other heroes of discontent, of war, of reconstruction, or of the establishment of the Union.

"To shine at all in such a galaxy was to shed a great light; but the calm and steady light of Washington was, by common consent, the brightest in glory there. In peculiar equipment for each class of work required to be done, he may have been outshone. The protest against English misrule may have come from better-disciplined minds than his; even more brilliant military resourcefulness than he possessed there may have been; in constructive statesmanship he perhaps had his superiors; in knowledge of the political problems to be worked out by the American Colonies through a constitutional form of government, his insight was not always the clearest.

"Nevertheless, it can be confidently said that Washington combined in himself, more than did anyone else, a greater number of those unique qualities essential to make what might easily have been a crude experiment of revolt a success upon which the world still looks with increasing admiration. In the prosecution of the war with unrivaled patience under disheartening conditions and numberless privations and cruel disappointments; in his contribution to the steps leading up to the Constitutional Convention, during all the time from the first meeting of the Virginia and Maryland commissioners down to the calling and holding of the convention; in his advice to that convention and in his presiding over it; in his administration of the Presidency, where he put aside the petty things of politics; in his relinquishment of office when, for the asking, it was within his possession during all the years of his life, Washington, in influence and wisdom and judgment, is the central figure of those times, and in just fame stands alone. And should we ask ourselves to-night which of these men could have been spared in the work that was accomplished, we could not, with all our admiration for any other man, conceive the outcome as it was without the commanding presence of Washington.

"He did not foresee all the perplexing problems with which we have to deal to-day in our tariff or in our great corporations, in our currency, in our foreign possessions, or in a reconciliation of the rights of labor and capital; he did not foresee the vast task we all have, whether native or foreign born, of taking the new material constantly coming to our shores and assimilating it into our growth and molding it into a loyal and intelligent support of our institutions; he did not foresee the menace of destructive socialism nor the extent to which, unfortunately, we were to go in substituting party interest for political principle, though as to this he gave us paternal warning. Nevertheless he did foresee sufficient of our problems to be able to commend to us a course the principles of which, if steadily adhered to, should bring us safely through all the perils to which we may be exposed. While he did not outline the by-laws, so to speak, that must, from time to time, be framed and adopted for the detailed life of this country, he did understand as no one else understood the organic principles upon which were to rest the security and the welfare of our national life. And subject always to his urgent advice against permanent alliances with foreign powers, like a high priest among men he preached the gospel of tolerance, of benevolence, of peace, of reasonableness, and of righteousness toward all peoples.

"Not without faults, not without limitations of intelligence or of those qualities which go to make up the perfect man, Washington manifested in word and deed the best that has gone to dignify and make great and honored American manhood. When there is taken into consideration what he did for us and for the peoples of the earth that have followed or are ready to adopt our example by transferring so much of his conceptions and accomplishment as may be made to take root and grow in their soils; what he did toward establishing the principle that men have the capacity to govern themselves, and that those chosen to represent the people are to be their servants and not their rulers, and that public officials are engaged in the administration of a trust; when we consider that but for his triumphant leadership this Republic would never, perhaps, have been born, and that but for the example of his successful administration of the Presidency the experiment of self-government might have collapsed or retrograded into a kingdom, we must all agree that Washington performed a service for us and our posterity and for all the nations of the earth greater than any like service ever performed by the nobility or the genius or the sacrifice of any other one man.

FAREWELL ADDRESS.

"To appreciate the bold outlines of his personality and at the same time the patriarchal attitude he was entitled to assume toward the Republic, which was so much of his own making, we have only to read his Farewell Address—that wonderful product of affection and intelligence and insight. We can not think of it as written by any one of his contemporaries. The tone of it forbids this. Not one of them could have made use of its language without being open to the charge of affectation or arrogance. The words of dignity and injunction and warning came naturally from him, for they were the words of the guardian to the Nation as his ward, or, as he said, of an old and affectionate friend. He was the Gamaliel at whose feet the people sought wisdom. He was, in truth, the Father of his Country, as he enjoined upon us all those virtues and practices which can keep us strong and just and prosperous at home and respected in the councils of the world.

LESSONS OF HIS LIFE—CHARACTERISTICS.

"So many are the lessons we can gather from his life and his work that one is justified in saying that on an occasion like this the time is too limited even to enumerate them. Yet there are one or two things which we may well recall at a time when so many of us are disposed to seize upon the first expedient which seems to make for popularity or progress and when old-fashioned truths give way to strange doctrine; for, unlike many of us, he did not, in conduct or in speech, seem of the view that a thing is necessarily valuable because it is new. Courageous, but regardless of the value of precedent, certainly with truth it can be said that he had what a distinguished foreign diplomat recently declared we as a people have—the tenacity of tradition and the audacity of progress.

"The lines of calm serenity and determination along which Washington worked out his life were rarely varied. Persistent of purpose, he was never obstinate or unreasonable in judgment nor without the realization that the means to be selected must have reference to the end to be attained; he did not make of consistency a fetish, but change of plan with him was a matter of deliberation and conviction; he accommodated the plans of his official life, as he did his plans as a general, to the need of the hour, making use of all the resources he could command for the purpose of influencing men by conversion to a course of action believed by him to favor the successful outcome of worthy effort. Not without a shrewdness far beyond that which we are accustomed to attribute to him, he never resorted to measures or methods that were cheap or beneath his dignity. Seeing great visions, he was no mere dreamer of dreams; and what he accomplished for political liberty in association with the development of our national prosperity is an object lesson to us all that the ideal may go hand in hand with the practical for the realization of its highest ambition. He was patient and forbearing under unjust censure and coarse libel, and displayed charity toward friends and enemies as each class had the need for it; he could be what so many of us find it impossible to be—temperate in speech and conduct and considerate of the opinions of others; but when the occasion forbade it he made no surrender to compromise. The choice of no party for elevation to office and the foe of undue partisan zeal, he recognized the likelihood that party lines must be reckoned with; he adhered always to the fundamental things upon which the character of nations must be built if they are to be enduring; and above all he has never been weighed in the balance by posterity and been found wanting in that sincerity which, in the end, is the convincing argument, the best strategy, and the surest way to keep our self-respect.

DISTINGUISHING COMMON SENSE AND PRACTICAL TURN OF MIND.

"His distinguishing common sense and practical turn of mind served him well in the administration of his high office. Few, if any, mere generalities or quixotic schemes for action were suggested by him; but, on the contrary, he seemed to be master of the underlying principles of the business needs of the country as he had been of the plans of his campaigns. At a time when so many of us are disposed to put upon the statute book nostrums for relief from our industrial and financial and economic evils, it will be well for us to call to mind the striking contrast between the moderate volume and temperate character of laws enacted during his Presidency and so much of our present-day legislation of the experimental sort, reflecting often merely a view of to-day that is likely to be the heresy of tomorrow, and attempting to deal with the objectionable tendency before it is seen that it will not be arrested of itself, or before we have sufficient understanding of it to be in a position to know or apply the appropriate remedy. Accordingly the recommendations and the legislation of Washington's administration were not along guesswork lines; but the elements of soberness, patience, and wisdom which he so invariably manifested were typical of the plans he favored and adopted to bring order out of financial and industrial chaos, promote industry among the people, and restore their energies by opening up new sources of revenue and prosperity, and by assuring men that they should gather and be secure in the possession of the harvest of their labor. In all this he held true to the promise of his messages to Congress and to all his utterances and acts, and justified the expectation of the Nation—that he was to be as faithful and intelligent a servant in the work of peace as he had been amid the struggle for independence.

"While believing that free intercourse with nations would, to use his own words, promote policy, harmony, and interest, he did not part company with statesmanship, for he added:

"There can be no greater error than to expect or calculate upon real favors from nation to nation; it is an illusion which experience must cure and which a just pride ought to discard.

COORDINATE BRANCHES OF THE GOVERNMENT TO BE HELD IN THEIR RESPECTIVE BOUNDARIES.

"There is a great need, too, for us in this day when constitutional restraint has become irksome to many, never to turn a deaf ear to the stirring appeal of Washington to his people—that the departments into which our Government is constitutionally divided shall be kept with determined hand within their respective boundaries. Speaking here not as a party man but as a citizen of the Republic, my observation and reflection have shown me how treacherously easy is the transition from centralization of government—which those of the Republican Party set so much store by and which a good many of us Democrats are inclined to acquiesce in—to a personalization of government and then to usurpation of government. Washington in all his career uttered no greater truth than when he declared that a constitutional government, under such circumstances, becomes almost, as a matter of course, a despotism. For a long time, fortunately, this was the view of the American people; and when they have departed from it a long and ominous step has been taken, not only in the commission of error but toward establishing evil precedent.

"Said he in his stately language:

"It is important, likewise, that the habits of thinking in a free country should inspire caution in those intrusted with its administration, to confine themselves within their respective constitutional spheres, avoiding in the exercise of the powers of one department to encroach upon another. The spirit of encroachment tends to consolidate the powers of all the departments in one, and thus to create, whatever the form of government, a real despotism. A just estimate of that love of power and proneness to abuse it, which predominates in the human heart, is sufficient to satisfy us of the truth of this position. The necessity of reciprocal checks in the exercise of political power, by dividing and distributing it into different depositories, and constituting each the guardian of the public weal against invasions by the others, has been evinced by experiments ancient and modern; some of them in our country and under our own eyes. To preserve them must be as necessary as to institute them. If, in the opinion of the people, the distribution or modification of the constitutional powers be in any particular wrong, let it be corrected by an amendment in the way which the Constitution designates. But let there be no change by usurpation; for though this, in one instance, may be the instrument of good, it is the customary weapon by which free governments are destroyed. The precedent must always greatly overbalance in permanent evil any partial or transient benefit which the use can at any time yield.

"Years afterwards Daniel Webster merely put into the matchless eloquence of his paraphrase this thought when he directed his protest at apparently so slight a departure from this principle as the proposal of the President to take from the proper Cabinet officer the right to determine upon the depository of the funds of the United States:

"It was strongly and forcibly urged yesterday by the honorable Member from South Carolina that the true and only mode of preserving any balance of power in mixed governments is to keep an exact balance. This is very true, and to this end encroachments must be resisted at the first step. The question is, therefore, whether, upon the true principles of the Constitution, this exercise of power by the President can be justified. Whether the consequences be prejudicial or not, if there be an illegal exercise of power it is to be resisted in the proper manner. Even if no harm or inconvenience results from transgressing the boundary, the intrusion is not to be suffered to pass unnoticed. Every encroachment, great or small, is important enough to awaken the attention of those who are intrusted with the preservation of a constitutional government. We are not to wait till great public mischiefs come, till the Government is overthrown, or liberty itself put into extreme jeopardy. We should not be worthy sons of our fathers were we so to regard great questions affecting the general feeling. Those fathers accomplished the Revolution on a strict question of principle. The Parliament of Great Britain asserted a right to tax the Colonies in all cases whatsoever; and it was precisely on this question that they made the Revolution turn. The amount of taxation was trifling, but the claim itself was inconsistent with liberty; and that was, in their eyes, enough. It was against the recital of an act of Parliament, rather than against any suffering under its enactments, that they took up arms. They went to war against a preamble. They fought seven years against a declaration. They poured out their treasures and their blood like water in a contest against an assertion which those less sagacious and not so well schooled in the principles of civil liberty would have regarded as barren phraseology or mere parade of words. They saw in the claim of the British Parliament a seminal attitude of mischief, the germ of unjust power; they detected it, dragged it forth from underneath its plausible disguises, struck at it; nor did it elude either their steady eye or their well-directed blow till they had extirpated it and destroyed it to the smallest fiber. On this question of principle, while actual suffering was yet afar off, they raised their flag against the power to which, for purposes of foreign contest and subrogation, Rome, in the height of her glory, is not to be compared; a power which is dotted over the surface of the whole globe with her possessions and military posts, whose morning drum beat, following the sun and keeping company with the hours, circles the earth with one continuous and unbroken strain of the martial airs of England.

"The necessity of holding strictly to the principles upon which free governments are constructed, and to those precise lines which fix the partitions of power between different branches, is as plain, if not as cogent, as that of resisting, as our fathers did, the strides of the parent country against the rights of the Colonies; because, whether the power which exceeds its just limits be foreign or domestic, whether it be the encroachment of all branches on the rights of the people, or that of one branch on the rights of others, in either case the balanced and well-adjusted machinery of free government is disturbed, and, if the derangement go on, the whole system must fall.

CHARACTER OF WASHINGTON.

"At all times and amid all conditions Washington rang true to the note of a splendid manhood. Hypocrisy and a trafficking in expedients for popular applause no more match with his life than the crime of murder. He had little of the captivating style of speech or manner; but regard for the nobility of his character, rather than any rhetorical art or charm of personal address on his part, kept wavering lines from retreat in battle and from mutiny amid privations and suffering to which our neglect had exposed the soldiers of the Revolution. The men in the ranks and above the ranks were zealots, ready to be shot to death or starved to death or frozen to death for the sake of such an inspiring leader, even when the Colonies had forgotten to clothe and to feed them after they had carried victorious arms in this unequal contest with the greatest military power in the world. He suppressed the dissensions of the men he gathered about him for the administration of his high office, and lessened their antagonism; and, as a man of affairs and the possessor of wealth, he had so mastered essential business principles that he knew how, by encouraging manufacture and thrift and enterprise, to bind up the wounds of a people wasted and impoverished by the exhaustion of prolonged war. What a priceless possession to his countrymen is the splendid record of the achievements of such a many-sided, well-balanced, noble man.

"So all discussion of Washington ends—whether it be in the brief address or in the pages of the biographer or historian—with panegyric, and without the opportunity of the most exacting criticism to point to any conspicuous act of his which we to-day would wish to have otherwise, either for his fame or for the example of his life.

"No wonder that Webster said—

"America has furnished to the world the character of Washington. And if our American institutions had done nothing else, that alone would have entitled them to the respect of mankind.

"He stands among the great men of this country and among the great men of all countries, not only on the many pedestals of our handiwork, but on the eminence of our admiration and gratitude, as a splendid, commanding, heroic figure, the embodiment of those traits which go to make up true manhood and true greatness in the world. What Tennyson not unfairly said of Wellington can even more justly be said of Washington—that he both saved and served the State; that for him the path of duty was the way to glory, and that there should be eternal honor to his name.

PRESENT-DAY PROBLEMS OF THE REPUBLIC.

"And let us and all loyal Americans resolve that the spirit of Washington, so manifestly in the midst of us on such occasions as this, shall go with us, as with gratitude and hope renewed and loins girded about we face the future. That future will not open for us always a pleasant prospect. We shall not always be blessed with prosperous times. Corresponding to those temporary setbacks to our health wherein Nature gives her warnings whenever we are making too great a draft upon mind or body, we shall have our periodical depressions when we are imprudent in the affairs of our business life. These need not unduly concern us, for, as we come to have a stable currency and a better understanding of the economic workings of the laws of supply and demand and do not overlook some considerations which are not always in accord with the strife for mere money return, these depressions should be appreciably less and less in number and importance.

"We have, however, problems of a more serious nature confronting us for solution, and doubtless they will increase as time goes on. We, as a people, have tolerated the doing of things which must be undone or made right and not condoned; we have at times set too much store by mere material success and judged as of minor consequence things which broaden and elevate and ennoble a nation; we have made compromise with things of evil import. We have at times been unmindful of the rights of others as we have hurried on to the realization of ambitious plans, and in our indifference to the demands of good citizenship we have been guilty of or acquiesced in a course of conduct that has given rise to sullen expressions of an unrest to which we can not afford to be unconcerned listeners, for unchecked unrest is likely to breed discontent and discontent, in its turn, disorder. And unless we frankly recognize this we shall have no reasonable hope of correcting the conditions which arouse, if they do not altogether justify, those expressions, and which are a menace not only to our continuing prosperity but to our self-respect and our repute in the world. Again and again, as time goes on, in obedience to popular clamor, we shall be tempted to enact statutes unjust to labor or capital and not representing reflection and conviction, or statutes which are fairly certain to be incapable of enforcement and to bring the administration of the law into contempt. We shall be tempted to hesitate and temporize concerning things demanding prompt and courageous action for the public welfare. Again and again we shall stand perplexed in which direction to go when we shall have come to the crossroads of public duty and mere party expediency or even self-interest. Our way will be so shut in by doubt that we shall hesitate even as to a single step forward and upward. But there is one thing above all things to which we may cling with a certain faith, that so long as we keep with ourselves a covenant to return to and abide by the principles of Washington's Farewell Address, so long as his character shall be remembered and revered by us, so long as we shall set his life and his devotion before us as the best type and example of American citizenship to admire and emulate, this country can not falter in true progress nor in the end come short of its high mission in the world. For then, during all time to come, we shall have for our political guidance as a people the inspiration of his presence, which will be to us what for the moral guidance of men the Word of the Lord was to the psalmist of old—a lamp unto the feet and a light unto the path."

THE FEDERAL GOVERNMENT AND PUBLIC ROADS.

ADDRESS OF THE HON. OSCAR W. UNDERWOOD, OF ALABAMA, DELIVERED BEFORE THE AMERICAN AUTOMOBILE ASSOCIATION CONVENTION JANUARY 16, 1912.

"I thank you for the opportunity that has been given me to say a few words on a subject that is of such great importance to the American people.

"There were no wiser men, more patriotic men, that have ever been connected with this great Government of ours than the men who established it. They were enabled to look far into the future and realize that a great civilization was to grow up out of a wilderness. In establishing this Government of ours they delegated certain powers to the Federal Government and reserved the balance to the States. As to matters of local government, almost all the powers were reserved to the States, and only the necessary powers to create a central government to protect us against foreign foes, to enable us to establish a system of judiciary, and to maintain armies and navies were delegated to the Federal Government. But in their wisdom they deemed it necessary and proper to declare in the Federal Constitution that the National Government should have the power to establish post offices and post roads.

SYSTEM OF POST ROADS AUTHORIZED.

"I do not believe in the Federal Government encroaching upon the rights of the States any more than I believe in the States encroaching on the rights of the Federal Government; but I do believe that the great Central Government owes it to the people of the United States that it should enforce, carry out, and maintain the great powers of government that have been delegated to it by the States; and one of those great powers carries with it the right to see that a system of post roads for intercommunication between the people within the States and the people beyond the borders of the several States is established.

"The fathers of our Republic recognized that fact. You know as well as I do that one of the very first questions that was agitated before the Federal Congress was the building of a great post road across the continent to bind and hold the States together. They spent millions of dollars in building the Cumberland Turnpike, and we should have gone on building Federal roads throughout the United States if Watt had not invented the steam engine, and if the iron rail had not taken the place of the macadamized road. Then we abandoned Government aid to the dirt road and gave Government aid to the iron road. The great railroads that reach across this continent were built with Government aid, because they were 'establishing post roads.'

FEDERAL AID IN ROAD BUILDING.

"Now, my friends, we are coming back to the starting point. Another invention has come; the people of this country now are traveling in automobiles as well as in railroad trains. The mail, the most important single business in the United States, is being delivered at the farmer's door, instead of the farmer coming to the town and taking his mail out of the post-office box. We are coming back to the point where it is necessary again for the people of the United States to have a good system of public roads. The States have delegated the power to the Federal Government to aid in securing that system of public roads. Why did they delegate that power in the beginning? Because they realized the necessity of maintaining and establishing a road system. It is the duty of the Federal Government to vitalize that power. For that reason for many years I have been in favor of the Government of the United States either establishing post roads or lending its aid to the building of post roads throughout the country. It is the only way you can build them. If the Government had gone on in the work it commenced in the early part of the last century, when it started to build the Cumberland Turnpike; if it had continued that work up to to-day, without any great burden resting on the American people, we would have had as magnificent a system of roads in the United States as you can find in any of the continental countries of Europe. But we abandoned it because we thought the railroads had come to take its place. It is far more important to the great majority of the people of the United States to have a road that carries their produce from the farm door to the railroad station and from the store in the town back to the farm door than it is to further develop a great railroad that will carry them to New York or San Francisco. The exception is the man who travels any great distance on the railroad train; it is the everyday life of the mass of the American people to travel along the dirt road from their homes to the railroad stations.

EUROPEAN HIGHWAYS.

"There is not a country in Europe that has established a system of national highways that has not done so with the aid of the central government. There were no good roads worth speaking of in England as long as they maintained the antiquated system of local taxation alone to develop a road system, and it was not until the Parliament lent aid to the building of good roads that a great system of roads was built up in England. And the same is true of France; it took national aid to establish a system of roads in France. To-day they have the greatest system of roads in the world.

COURSE OF PROCEDURE SUGGESTED.

"I know that the opposition to this argument is based on the fact that it will cost money, and I do not deny the argument. If you are going to build a great system of roads in the United States it will cost millions of money, but you can not expect to build them in a day; it will take decades to complete the work; you will never build them if you do not make the start.

"We can begin by giving national aid to assist the States, or we can commence by building several great national highways, like the Cumberland Pike, that was completed a century ago and yet remains as a monument to the wisdom of our fathers.

"As to which is the best system it is not necessary for us to determine now. The question for the people who are in favor of good roads to-day to determine is the question as to whether or not the Federal Government shall again undertake the great work, and after that is determined then you can decide as to which is the proper plan to carry out.

NECESSITY FOR A RATIONAL WORKING PLAN.

"I shall not take up your time, but I want to make just one suggestion to you in a practical way. Your association advocates one way for the building of these great highways; you find that another good-roads association advocates some other plan, and yet another association another plan. I understand that there are four great associations in this country which favor the building of national highways, and I do not believe that there are any two of them that have agreed on the same plan. Now, as long as that condition exists you are not going to build on any plan. I have this one suggestion to make to you, and it is not my own thought—it has been suggested to me by one who is wiser than I am—that instead of advocating one system to-day by this association and another system to-morrow by another association, go to the Congress of the United States and say to them, 'Appoint a joint committee to consider the building of post roads in the United States'; give them authority to hear everybody that wants to come before the committee; give them authority to find a verdict as to which is the best way to start this great national movement by proper legislation, and then you have concentrated the power in the hands of the men who in the end must exercise it; you have centralized that power where it can be used for action. They may not agree to what you want or I want, but it will be along some line that will produce results.

HANDICAP OF BAD ROADS.

"Just one word in conclusion. My friends, I remember once being on the other side of the Atlantic Ocean, and I saw a great white fleet of ships, that had traveled around the world, sailing into a foreign port, the national emblem of our great country was flying at the masthead. As they came steaming up the harbor I thanked God I was an American and felt proud that we had the greatest fleet that ever sailed around the world.

I remember once standing along the line of a railroad system in a distant country, and as I saw a train of freight cars being hauled along the track I noticed the locomotive that was pulling the cars, and it was a Baldwin locomotive, built in America, builded by our own people, carrying the commerce of the world, and I felt proud that I was an American and thanked God that I was born under the Stars and Stripes of my country. But then I went up into the mountains of Switzerland and in Italy, and I saw those magnificent turnpikes, graded roads, running up the mountain sides, smooth as this floor, guttered on the sides, carrying off every drop of water, perfectly smooth, where the people even in that mountainous country could carry their produce to market at the lowest possible outlay; then I thought of the terrible roads that I had seen in my own home State, that I had seen in almost every State of the Union, and for once, and the only time in my life, I had to bow my head with shame and could not declare that so far as our road system was concerned that I was proud of being an American citizen."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment of the gentleman from West Virginia [Mr. HAMILTON].

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

The name of John Eastman, late of Company H, Fourth Regiment New York Volunteer Heavy Artillery, and pay him a pension at the rate of $24 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

Mr. TRIBBLE. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. On page 24 I continue the case. The report says:

It appears from the proof filed in the case that the claimant was first married in Massachusetts on August 14, 1850, to one Ivory G. Phillips—

And that she was never divorced. Now, Mr. Chairman—

Mr. RUSSELL. Mr. Chairman, I rise to a point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. RUSSELL. The gentleman from Georgia [Mr. TRIBBLE] is not discussing the paragraph under consideration.

The CHAIRMAN. Under the five-minute rule a Member must confine himself to the paragraph read. The Chair holds that the point of order is well taken.

Mr. TRIBBLE. Mr. Chairman, I will leave that discussion, then. The discussion on the floor of this House to-day shows to every man present the laxity of the committee in reporting bills—

Mr. ANSBERRY. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order that the gentleman is not discussing the paragraph.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair sustains the point of order. The gentleman must confine himself to the paragraph just read.

Mr. RODDENBERRY. The Chairman having ruled upon the question—

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Georgia [Mr. TRIBBLE] is recognized.

Mr. TRIBBLE. I simply wish to ask a question. No such rule as this has been invoked in this House before. If the name of John Smith were not mentioned in a paragraph, we can not mention the name of John Smith?

The CHAIRMAN. The rule of the House is that under the five-minute rule a Member must confine himself to the subject of the amendment offered. That has always been the rule of the House. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

The name of John F. Rankin, late of Company C, Fourth Regiment Tennessee Volunteer Cavalry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $36 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

Mr. RODDENBERRY. I move to strike out the words "thirty-six dollars," in line 11.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 3, line 11, strike out the word "thirty-six."

Mr. RODDENBERRY. I ask the attention of the author of the bill, or the chairman of the subcommittee, to the fact that it appears in this case that John F. Rankin is 71 years old, and served as a musician in Company C, Fourth Regiment Tennessee Volunteer Cavalry, two years and seven months; that he is now a pensioner at $22 a month on account of slight deafness. The medical testimony shows that the applicant has a small, rough, and hilly farm, which he rents, and that his small income from this source and his pension constitute his sole support. It is recommended that he be allowed an increase to $36. Now, mark you, here is a musician, owning a little farm and having a small income, and we have just passed an item where another soldier was 71 years of age, served three years, not as a musician, but as a fighter and a soldier, has no property at all, suffers from divers and sundry afflictions, and the proposition is to give him $24 a month. What I would like the gentleman to explain is why the soldier who served three years and fought, and who has no property, who is absolutely helpless, gets $24, and the horn tooter, who is now getting $22 and has a farm, gets $36. And there is deep silence upon the face of the waters.

Mr. AUSTIN. When the gentleman concludes his remarks I will reply to him.

Mr. RODDENBERRY. I have no criticism of the particular claim. I am asking now why the discrepancy, why the discrimination, and why the partiality? Now, gentlemen, I recognize that in a multitude of measures you can not have absolute uniformity. I likewise recognize that there may be some good reason why the hornblower should have $36, and why the musket bearer should have $24, although the musket bearer walks no longer save upon crutches, and has no rough hillside to give him a resting place. But why do not you show it? But the hornblower? How about him? The report should show some information before you should expect enlightened men to vote for it.

Mr. RUSSELL. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Georgia yield to the gentleman from Missouri?

Mr. RUSSELL. May I ask the gentleman from Georgia a question?

Mr. RODDENBERRY. Yes.

Mr. RUSSELL. To what two cases does the gentleman refer? The Rolain case?

Mr. RODDENBERRY. That, and the one relating to John Mulligan, on page 4 of the report, the last item on the page. I will now ask my friend to explain that case. He is getting $24. The report does not show whose bill it is, but when you go back home, whoever is the author of the bill, you tell that old soldier why you could not get the $24 for a fighter, while somebody else got $36 for a hornblower.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. RUSSELL. Just a word, Mr. Chairman. I think I can explain it to the gentleman. I just want one moment, Mr. Chairman, a word on behalf of the committee, because I feel that the committee is more or less arraigned in every one of these assaults upon this bill.

Mr. RODDENBERRY. I do not mean to arraign the committee. I am arraigning the bill.

Mr. RUSSELL. I want to show, Mr. Chairman, the reason which the gentleman has not discovered in these cases. John Mulligan, to whose case the gentleman refers, is about of the same age as John F. Rankin. Mulligan is 71 years of age, and Rankin is 71 years of age. Both served about the same length of time. Mulligan's injuries did not result from his service. He is drawing a pension under the age law, while Rankin is drawing a pension because of injuries from which he now suffers, resulting from his service in the Army. That is a distinction that has been recognized, both in the Bureau of Pensions and in the Committee on Invalid Pensions and by this House. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

On page 3, line 11, strike out the word "thirty-six."

Mr. AUSTIN. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. RODDENBERRY] demanded an explanation from either the gentleman having this bill in charge or from the author of this item carried in the bill. It gives me pleasure to say to the gentleman that I am the author of the bill to increase the pension of John F. Rankin, a man whom I have favorably known for perhaps 20 years. While I do not hope to satisfy the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. RODDENBERRY], or the gentleman from Texas [Mr. CALLAWAY], who seem to be absolutely reckless and unwilling to believe that the pension roll is a roll of honor, yet there are Members on the floor of this House to whom I wish to speak in reference to the merits of this particular case.

This man, as the record and report show, is more than 70 years of age. He rendered faithful service in the Union Army for almost three years, enlisting from one of the East Tennessee regiments, raised right in the heart of the Southern Confederacy, where it cost something to be loyal to the Union. Mr. Rankin is a poor man, honest, worthy, and deserving, and the medical testimony in his case shows that his disabilities are not single, but triple, and that owing to the nature and character of the disabilities from which he suffers he is precluded from making a living by manual labor.

Something has been said about the particular service that he rendered, namely, that he was a musician. Those were two years and seven months of faithful service for your country, and for my country. It often required music to enthrall and rally the boys under the Stars and Stripes, and it took music to rally the boys under the stars and bars. That magic music—Dixie—carried many boys into the Southern Confederacy, under the southern flag.

But the man who left his home to fight for the flag of the Union and the man who left his home for the Southern Confederacy both displayed heroic courage, whether he was a musician or an officer or a private, and I believe that justice reigns in the breast of men in this House, regardless of which side of this Chamber they sit upon. [Applause.] I despise and hold in utter contempt this constant arraigning and abusing the Union soldiers in this House and in certain publications, and this constant challenging of the motives and intentions of my colleagues in favorably reporting and voting for these bills, and I resent it. My colleagues upon this side and upon that side are performing their duty under their oaths just as well as the Member from Georgia [Mr. RODDENBERRY] and the Member from Texas [Mr. CALLAWAY]. My worthy colleagues on this side and upon that side have the honor and the glory of our common country at heart, and ill does it become the gentleman from Georgia or the gentleman from Texas to impugn the honor and the patriotism of their action in this House. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

On page 3, line 11, strike out the word "thirty-six."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The question was taken, and the amendment was rejected.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

The name of Ward L. Roach, late of Company B, Second Regiment Indiana Volunteer Cavalry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $24 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

Mr. RODDENBERRY. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the word "twenty-four," in line 19, page 3.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

On page 3, line 19, strike out the word "twenty-four."

Mr. RODDENBERRY. Mr. Chairman, I take this paragraph up because I feel very much encouraged that gentlemen who are the authors of bills, for the first time in two years since I have been a Member of this House, venture to rise and tell the merits of their case.

Here is a man, Ward L. Roach, 73 years old, a private in his company, who has been drawing a pension for many years. At the same time he is a justice of the peace. He has an income from his office as justice of the peace—a minimum of $200 a year—and his present pension is $180 a year. The committee recommend that he be given $24 a month.

We have just passed an item which gives a pension of $20 to the widow of a Union soldier, which widow married the soldier during the war, and is old and feeble and is charged with the support and maintenance of an infirm mother. I would like to have the author of the bill or some member of the committee explain why it is that it is just to give a man who is a justice of the peace, so possessed of his faculties, so physically incapacitated that he can preside in that capacity and earn $200 a year at the minimum, an increase of pension from $180 a year to $288 a year, while you only give to the widow of this soldier who fought, who is helpless and dependent, and who, in the language of the report, is a war widow, old and penniless, without resources, but $20 a month? I want to know what explanation the author of this bill will give to this old widow and to his constituents, when she in her distress, her poverty, and her dire condition gets but $20 a month, while right on the same page a vital, living judge, a justice of the peace, getting $200 a year for his services and $180 a year pension, gets an increase to $24 a month? Gentlemen, you may not undertake to explain satisfactorily to me, and the inquiry I make may meet with your silence, but God spare you when the wrath of your constituents meets you at the next election.

Mr. ANDERSON of Ohio. Mr. Chairman—

Mr. RODDENBERRY. I yield my time to the gentleman.

Mr. ANDERSON of Ohio. I am glad the gentleman from Georgia has found one claim where he approves of the committee's action, when he stated that this poor widow is entitled to $20 a month.

Mr. RODDENBERRY. You ought to make it $30.

Mr. ANDERSON of Ohio. Would you vote for it?

Mr. RODDENBERRY. I will vote for it.

The question being taken, the amendment was rejected.

The Clerk read as follows:

The name of Joseph C. McGarragh, late of Company B, Sixty-fifth Regiment Indiana Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $36 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

Mr. RODDENBERRY. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the paragraph. There are very many of these items to which I should be glad to address myself, but I am absolutely unable physically to continue at great length on these different items. Therefore I leave it to such gentlemen around me as may want these matters investigated to pursue the subject.

Mr. TRIBBLE. May I ask the gentleman a question?

Mr. RODDENBERRY. I yield to the gentleman.

Mr. TRIBBLE. Does it not occur to the gentleman that he is the only one that can get the floor on this side of the House?

Mr. RODDENBERRY. I can not accede entirely to the views of my colleague.

Mr. AUSTIN. I suggest that the gentleman yield to his colleague.

Mr. RODDENBERRY. Here is a pensioner 71 years old who has been drawing a pension for years and years, and the committee, with the hand of favoritism, with the mighty power of an unrestrained and well-nigh unresistant majority, propose to give this soldier, 71 years of age, $36 a month, when the very item before it is for an old, decrepit, infirm man, with long service in the Army, now tottering under the weight of 79 years, who gets but $30 a month. There is written into this bill discrimination, favoritism, partiality, and pull—I do not know whether it is political pull or patriotic pull—which enables one man to get $36 when he is only 71 years of age and this poor old man, 79 years old, with the heavy weight of years resting upon him, gets only $30. When he gets only $30 the pensioner next below him in this bill, no more infirm, no more patriotic, no more valiant, gets $36 a month. I want the author of the bill, who acquiesces in the finding of the committee, to explain why it is that his constituent gets only $30, when he is high onto 80 years of age, while on the same page another man draws $36, when he is not as old and is no more infirm. If you do not answer here, you can not escape explaining when you go home. You will not answer me, but when you go home answer your constituent, his sons, and his grandsons, and his kindred throughout the bailiwick.

Mr. HAMILTON of West Virginia. As I read it, it only provides for $30 in the bill.

Mr. RODDENBERRY. On the top of page 11, $30 is recommended, so the report says.

Mr. HAMILTON of West Virginia. Then I do not understand the gentleman.

Mr. RODDENBERRY. All of which goes to show that the chairman of the committee himself, the way this legislation is ramrodded through, does not know which bill he is voting on, I tell you it is unjust legislation; it is not intelligent legislation, it is not fair legislation when a man of ability, a man of skill, a man of learning, a member of the committee investigating a claim stands here and does not know what pension he is voting on. But it is no reflection on him. It is the iniquitous railroad system.

Mr. HAMILTON of West Virginia. I wanted to know what paragraph the gentleman indicated.

Mr. RODDENBERRY. This is roughshod, ill-digested, legislation that the powerful majority rushes through over a helpless colleague who is able only to make a few more objections. [Laughter.]

Mr. HAMILTON of West Virginia. Mr. Chairman, a parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. HAMILTON of West Virginia. What line and page was the gentleman's amendment offered to. I was unable to hear.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment again.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 4, line 17, strike out the paragraph consisting of lines 17, 18, 19, and 20.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Georgia.

The question was taken, and the amendment was lost.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

The committee informally rose, and Mr. BARTLETT having taken the chair as Speaker pro tempore, a message from the Senate by Mr. Crockett, one of its clerks, announced that the Senate had agreed to the amendments of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. 4151) to authorize the Minnesota & International Railway Co. to construct a bridge across the Mississippi River at or near Bemidji, in the State of Minnesota.

The message also announced that the Senate had agreed to the amendments of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. 339) providing for the reappraisal and sale of certain lands in the town site of Port Angeles, Wash., and for other purposes.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed the following resolution:

Resolved, That the Secretary be directed to request the House of Representatives to return to the Senate the bill (S. 4238) to provide for the use of the American National Red Cross in aid of the land and naval forces in time of actual or threatened war.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed the following resolution, in which the concurrence of the House of Representatives was requested.

Senate concurrent resolution 18.

Resolved by the Senate (the House of Representatives concurring), That the Secretary of War be requested to make a supplemental or additional report or estimate concerning the work of levee construction in the improvement of the navigability of the Mississippi River on the east bank thereof, from Vicksburg to Bayou Sara, for use in connection with S. 4253, being a bill to aid in construction of levees and embankments on the east side of the Mississippi River.

PENSIONS.

The committee resumed its session.

The Clerk read as follows:

The name of Henry Meerdink, late of Company D, Thirty-fifth Regiment Iowa Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $30 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

Mr. TRIBBLE. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. I say, sir, that the spectacle we have seen here to-day on the floor of this House, it seems to me, should convince everyone that the methods that have been adopted in the past and the methods adopted at the present time by this committee are lax, and that the country will not stand for it.

Mr. ANSBERRY. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order that the gentleman is not talking to the amendment.

Mr. TRIBBLE. I am talking about this case.

Mr. ANSBERRY. The gentleman is not speaking to his amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair sustains the point of order and the gentleman will proceed.

Mr. ANSBERRY. I make the point of order that the gentleman can not proceed unless he proceeds in order.

Mr. TRIBBLE. I will give notice that the gentleman will not save any time by that point of order. I will be here all the time, during this session and the next, and I may be here in other days, perhaps, in future sessions; and I should not be surprised that some of you will be at home when I am here. I am not afraid of my pension stand. I have not attempted to criticize anybody in my entire discussion of the pension legislation. If you take my first speech of December 9 and read it—

Mr. ANSBERRY. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order that the gentleman should proceed in order.

Mr. TRIBBLE. I put the gentleman on notice that he will save no time by his gag rule that he is invoking from the Chair.

Mr. ANSBERRY. The gentleman only shows his lack of knowledge of the rules by calling it a gag rule.

Mr. TRIBBLE. Now, Mr. Chairman, they ask in this paragraph to extend the pension to a woman whom the gentleman from Missouri, Gov. RUBEY, says bears a good record.

Mr. RUBEY. Mr. Chairman, a parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. RUBEY. What paragraph is being discussed?

Mr. TRIBBLE. Page 24 of the report.

Mr. RUBEY. But we are not passing the report.

Mr. TRIBBLE. I beg the gentleman's pardon, this is not the case of the gentleman from Missouri. In the case before the House they propose to pay a pension to a woman who never obtained a divorce from a previous husband. I notice throughout this report of the committee, and if gentlemen will read it they will see, that they quote from Members of Congress. They say in their findings that Congressman So-and-so made certain statements in regard to such and such a party. I submit, Mr. Chairman, that it is not a fair investigation by the committee. If the Congressmen want their testimony to go in this record then it ought to be put here in affidavit form and not in the way it is. I challenge gentlemen to read the report through from one end to the other, and if they do they will find frequent occurrences of Congressmen's statements. They would not be received in any court in this land as testimony.

Mr. RUBEY. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. TRIBBLE. I will.

Mr. RUBEY. Would the gentleman take a statement made by one of his colleagues and place in it as much credence as he would in his sworn affidavit?

Mr. TRIBBLE. There is not a colleague in this Congress whose statement I would not take.

Mr. RUBEY. Then, why does the gentleman want his affidavit?

Mr. TRIBBLE. There is not a court in this country that would take a Congressman's statement, even though he holds the distinction of being a Congressman, without his putting it in legal form, and all I am asking for is legal form, and I have the right to do that.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Georgia has expired.

Mr. RUBEY. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. The testimony in this report is made not for a court, but it is made for the information of Members of this House.

Mr. TRIBBLE. May I ask the gentleman a question?

Mr. RUBEY. Yes.

Mr. TRIBBLE. Is it not a fact that for 50 years this pension legislation, both special and general, has gone through this House, and not a man, until the present session, has raised his voice to contest a single case?

Mr. RUBEY. Unfortunately for me, I will say that I—

Mr. TRIBBLE. Then, is the gentleman passing on pensions as a court, or is he just throwing down the bars and letting everybody come in without even allowing a Member of Congress to contest or investigate?

Mr. RUBEY. Is that a question or a speech?

Mr. TRIBBLE. The gentleman can take it as he pleases.

Mr. RUBEY. Mr. Chairman, replying to that, I will say that, unfortunately for me, I have not been a Member of Congress during the last 50 years, but the records of this Congress show that during the preceding two years there were passed through this Congress over 9,000 private pension bills in a Republican Congress, and during that time not a Democrat from Georgia or from any other Southern State got up here and tried to prohibit it or tried to delay Congress in passing these bills; but the moment we get into control, the moment the Democrats get into the majority and try to do the right thing for the old soldier, we have men on our own side of the House—only two or three—who are trying to obstruct legislation, who are trying to do these things, not for the general good of the whole country but for the purpose of sending back home some speeches that will help them in their respective districts. [Applause.]

Mr. TRIBBLE. Mr. Chairman, may I ask the gentleman a question?

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman yield?

Mr. RUBEY. Yes.

Mr. TRIBBLE. The gentleman says that I am making no effort, and the other gentleman from Georgia is making no effort, for the good of the people we represent. I ask the gentleman if this Democratic Congress has not gone along here and refused to appropriate anything for public buildings; if it has not refused to appropriate anything for battleships, the defense of our homes; and I ask the gentleman if it has not gone along here and cut down, section after section, the agricultural bill, taking from the farmer that which should go to him in order that this pension legislation should be paid? The gentleman's charge is not sustained by the facts. The people of my district and the country at large appreciate the sincerity of this fight.

Mr. RUBEY. Mr. Chairman, if the gentleman from Georgia will give us an opportunity to legislate, before this Congress adjourns we will do the things that the people of this country want done and leave undone the things that they do not want done.

Mr. TRIBBLE. I will ask the gentleman another question.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Missouri yield to the gentleman from Georgia?

Mr. RUBEY. Certainly.

Mr. TRIBBLE. Have not gentlemen had the opportunity right here on the floor of the House, and is not the agricultural bill grinding along day after day right now, and do not the gentlemen come in here and join forces and cut down the agricultural bill in order that gentlemen may pay the pensions that they are asking for their districts?

Mr. RUBEY. No; absolutely we do not.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Missouri has expired.

Mr. BOOHER. Mr. Chairman, I have heard a good deal of discussion to-day on pension matters. I have heard the two gentlemen from Georgia [Mr. RODDENBERRY and Mr. TRIBBLE] talk about patriotism and love of the old soldier. I have heard them declare time and time again that they believe in pensioning the worthy soldier, and during all of this discussion they have shown a disposition not to be satisfied with the report of one of the great committees of this House upon the very thing they claim to be so patriotically in favor of; and they manifest more bravery and more patriotism when they can attack a bill that comes here proposing to put a poor old woman, the widow of two soldiers, on the pension list than they do in attacking the pension of a soldier—

Mr. HOWARD. Mr. Chairman, I rise to a point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. HOWARD. I make the point of order that the gentleman from Missouri is not confining his argument to the section under discussion.

Mr. TRIBBLE. Mr. Chairman, I hope the gentleman from Georgia will withdraw that objection.

Mr. HOWARD. I will not do it.

The CHAIRMAN. The point of order is sustained and the gentleman from Missouri will proceed in order.

Mr. RODDENBERRY. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order that the gentleman is entirely within his rights.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Missouri will proceed in order.

Mr. BOOHER. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. TRIBBLE] objects to a pension being paid to the widow of an old soldier, and I was talking about the bravery of men who can attack the report of the committee when it proposes to pension the widow of a soldier who served his country long and well at the front.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman yield to the gentleman from Georgia?

Mr. BOOHER. No. I have heard these gentlemen say that we may go back to our districts, and when we hear from the people back there, there will be vacant seats on this side of the Chamber. I want to say to the gentlemen that they may go back to my district in Missouri, and if they will go out in the open and attack the reputation and the character of the widow of an old soldier, when the committee has reported in favor of her, the good women of my district will drum them out of the country; and if they have the same kind of women in the South, as I know they have, they would receive the same treatment there. [Applause.] Why, the great State of Missouri sustains a Confederate soldiers' home by taxation. She sustains a Union soldiers' home by taxation, and a Republican member of the legislature of that State introduced a bill taking over the Confederate Soldiers' Home as a State institution. We tried to sustain it by popular subscription, but the burden became too great, and without a dissenting vote in the legislature it was taken over as a State institution. [Applause.] We are threatened now that if we vote to give a pension to some poor old widow woman of $12 a month that this Government is going to sink beneath the weight which that pension will place upon the backs of the people. I am willing to take my share of the responsibility. [Applause.] I have a brother who lies buried over there in the soil of Virginia. He died in defense of the flag we love so well. I am speaking from that point of view, and I say to my friends from Georgia that they are mistaken in the patriotism of the people of this country. [Applause.] You are mistaken when you try to compel this House to believe against your better judgment that this kind of conduct will meet the approval of even your own constituents. I know it will not meet the approval of the people that I represent here and a vast majority of the people whom the Members of this House represent. I believe in private pension bills. I believe in them more than I did in the Sherwood bill when I voted for it.

I believe the way to help the needy cases, to help the old men and old women who need support in their last days, is through private pension bills, and I am glad that the Democratic members of the Committee on Invalid Pensions are not behind the Republican Committee on Invalid Pensions in taking care of these old soldiers. [Applause.] We can go back to our people and say that we have maintained the record of taking care of the needy and dependent soldiers and their widows; and that is the way the people look at this matter. I am not talking from a sentimental standpoint, but from the standpoint of doing right by these old men and women.

The gentlemen from Georgia have the undisputed right to oppose the granting of pension of every kind, and no one questions their right to do so. But to assail the reputation of this old widow requires neither the exhibition of courage or patriotism, and I can not help but think my friends are making a very grave mistake.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. CLINE. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last two words, for the purpose of making an observation in reply to a statement of the gentleman from Georgia, who reproached us for not introducing a river and harbor bill and a public buildings bill in this House.

Mr. TRIBBLE. I beg the gentleman's pardon. I said nothing about rivers and harbors bill.

Mr. CLINE. Do not take up my time. I want to call the attention of the gentleman from Georgia to what this Congress has done for Georgia in the last five years. It has paid into the Public Treasury internal revenue estimated at $2,325,000. They have taken back in river and harbor improvements $2,632,000. There has been paid to the citizens of Georgia by the Federal Government in pensions $2,116,000, and now we are just erecting and completing 30 buildings in 30 cities of the State of Georgia at a cost of $4,000,000. [Applause.]

Mr. HOWARD. Mr. Chairman, I raise the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. HOWARD. I make the point of order that the gentleman is not discussing the paragraph of the bill under consideration. The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Indiana will proceed in order.

Mr. CLINE. I will do so, with pleasure.

Mr. TRIBBLE. Mr. Chairman, I insist upon the point of order if the gentleman will not allow me to ask him a question.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman yield to the gentleman from Georgia?

Mr. CLINE. Not at the present time. Mr. Chairman, for every dollar that the State of Georgia has paid into the public Treasury of the United States they have taken out nearly $5.

Mr. HOWARD. Mr. Chairman, I raise the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. HOWARD. That the gentleman is not discussing the paragraph of the bill that is under consideration.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Indiana will proceed in order.

Mr. HOWARD. And that his argument is not germane.

Mr. TRIBBLE. Mr. Chairman, I raise the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. TRIBBLE. The Chairman instructed me that I was out of order, and I call upon the Chair to pass upon the question of whether the gentleman is now out of order.

I do not propose for the gentleman to assail my State, and not be heard from, if that is the purpose of the gentleman.

Mr. CLINE. I am just referring to the bare question and making answer to the very proposition the gentleman invoked.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair sustains the point of the gentleman. The gentleman will proceed in order.

Mr. CLINE. For every dollar expended—

Mr. HOWARD. Mr. Chairman—

The CHAIRMAN. The House will be in order. The time of the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. CLINE] has expired. [Laughter.]

Mr. HOWARD. Mr. Chairman, I rise to a point of order.

Mr. CLINE. Mr. Chairman, may I be allowed to extend my remarks in the RECORD on this point?

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

Mr. HOWARD. Mr. Chairman, I object.

Mr. EDWARDS. Reserving the right to object, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman may proceed in order, to finish his remarks, for five minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Georgia [Mr. EDWARDS] asks unanimous consent that the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. CLINE] may be allowed to proceed for five minutes. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. HARDWICK. I do not believe that my friend from Indiana [Mr. CLINE] intends to make an assault on the State of Georgia here to-day.

Mr. CLINE. Oh, no; I have no such purpose and have made no assault. I am just answering the gentleman.

Mr. TRIBBLE. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order I ought to have the right to answer the gentleman. The Chair will not allow me to discuss those questions. I propose to answer the gentleman if he assails my State.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Indiana [Mr. CLINE] is recognized for five minutes. Does the gentleman yield to the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. HARDWICK]?

Mr. CLINE. I do not want to violate the rules of the House. If the gentleman insists on the point of order, I will take my seat.

Mr. HARDWICK. Will the gentleman yield for just a moment?

Mr. CLINE. Certainly.

Mr. HARDWICK. I did not understand that my friend was assailing the State of Georgia.

Mr. CLINE. Bless you, I want Georgia to get everything she can get for rivers and harbors and public buildings, but I do not want her to come back and take the well-earned support from the old soldiers who spent four years to teach the State that it was wrong and bring her back into the Union.

Mr. HARDWICK. I want to thank the gentleman in behalf of the delegation from Georgia for the very splendid tribute he has paid to the members of that delegation for the efficiency and zeal with which they serve their constituents. I want to thank the gentleman also because in all of these things we have received he has helped us to get the appropriation.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman is not proceeding in order, and I ask that the gentleman from Indiana may proceed for five minutes with general debate, and that the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. TRIBBLE] be permitted to answer in five minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The pro forma amendment will be considered as withdrawn, and the Clerk will read.

Mr. TRIBBLE. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to have printed and inserted in the RECORD, in connection with the section under discussion—

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman—

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois is recognized.

Mr. MANN. I ask that the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. CLINE] may be permitted to proceed in general debate for five minutes, and that the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. TRIBBLE] be permitted to answer in five minutes.

Mr. ANSBERRY. To that I object.

Mr. RODDENBERRY. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the paragraph. In the consideration, Mr. Chairman and gentlemen, of this very important paragraph I desire to say by way of kind reply to my friend from Missouri [Mr. BOOHER] that neither of the gentlemen from Georgia made any reference to the widow of the soldier which can not be found in the exact language of the report of the committee, the report itself showing that this widow "took up with" a man. We only quoted the report. I want to say to my friend, now, from Indiana [Mr. CLINE] that we are glad to have the report as to what is transpiring in the State of Georgia, but I will also admonish him that we do not advocate giving one appropriation in order to get another.

Mr. ANSBERRY. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order that the gentleman is not addressing himself to this amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will proceed in order.

Mr. RODDENBERRY. Mr. Chairman, I desire to proceed deliberately and in order and say that under this section, which provides an appropriation and deals with the amount of pensions that go to the various sections of the country, although it may be true, as stated, that the disposition of these pensions and other appropriations are not in exact balance, yet if it were not for the balance of trade of $200,000,000 that comes from the South in the way of the cotton product we would have a panic in this country—

Mr. ANSBERRY. I make the point of order.

Mr. RODDENBERRY (continuing). That Morgan, Guggenheim, and all the rest of them could never stop.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Ohio [Mr. ANSBERRY] makes a point of order.

Mr. ANSBERRY. The gentleman is not proceeding in order.

Mr. RODDENBERRY. Relating to this item in this paragraph, which I move to strike out, Mr. Chairman, I desire to say it adds a tax equally on every citizen of the country, and the great southern country that maintains the balance of trade in favor of this Government is willing to pay its just and full proportion for its soldiers, and, if necessary, we will increase the amount of any item that deserves it.

Mr. ANSBERRY. Mr. Chairman, a point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Ohio will state his point of order.

Mr. ANSBERRY. My point of order is that the gentleman is not proceeding in order.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will confine himself to the motion and proceed in order.

Mr. RODDENBERRY. Mr. Chairman, I am proceeding in order in the discussion of this paragraph, inasmuch as it deals with a public expenditure. I welcome it if it is a deserving case. We can afford it, considering our vast resources, our vast commerce, including our vast exportation of that commodity which keeps the balance of trade in our favor. We will bear all the burdens of the country with you and ask no favors, and will do justice to every single interest of this country.

Mr. TRIBBLE. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to include in this discussion the report in this case.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Georgia [Mr. TRIBBLE] asks unanimous consent to insert the report in the RECORD. Is there objection?

Mr. ANSBERRY. I object.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the motion to strike out the section.

The question was taken, and the motion was rejected.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

The name of Belle A. Corbin, widow of John A. Corbin, late of Company G, Ninety-sixth Regiment Illinois Volunteer Infantry, and pay her a pension at the rate of $12 per month.

Mr. TRIBBLE. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. I rise to inquire if this case, which is mentioned on page 75 of the report, comes within the rule of the committee? We have had a good deal of trouble to-day to find out what the rules of the committee are. The Members of the House no doubt observed the fact that one member of the committee got up here and in vigorous language spoke about his integrity having been impugned because it was charged that there are no written rules, that the committee has no written rules, and then, another Member brings forth the rules and shows to the members of the committee in the presence of the House written rules on certain questions. I would like to know if this case comes within the rules, if they have any. I state emphatically that the law is against this claim, and challenge denial.

Mr. HAMILTON of West Virginia. What claim is it?

Mr. TRIBBLE. It is mentioned on page 75.

Mr. RODDENBERRY. It is at the bottom of page 30 of the bill.

Mr. TRIBBLE. Mr. Chairman, Belle A. Corbin was the wife of a soldier, and as the wife of a soldier, who has pensionable right, under the laws of the United States, she has a right to draw a pension. But, Mr. Chairman, she married again, and she surrendered her right to a pension. After she had lived with the man whom she married the second time she decided that she would rather have a pension than the man, and she deserted him, secured a divorce, and now comes in here and asks this committee to grant her a pension, and they give it to her. Now, is that within the law? It is against the law and the statutes of the United States, and you gentlemen must know it, although it may be within the rules prescribed by the gentlemen of this committee, but your rules are not law. I am calling for the enforcement of the law.

Now, I think that I have a right to know, Mr. Chairman, and the right to investigate, when these cases come before this House, and ascertain whether or not the committee is acting within the spirit of the law and within the letter of the law. Why, we have been criticized by gentlemen here, who refer to the gentleman from Georgia as being the first ever to rise and undertake to obstruct legislation for pensions in this House. In the name of God, is it not time for some man to have the nerve and the manhood to get up and contest such claims as are brought before this House some time or other?

The CHAIRMAN. The pro forma amendment will be considered as withdrawn. [Cries of "Read!" "Read!"] The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

The name of William F. Marshall, late of Company I, Thirty-sixth Regiment Iowa Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $40 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

Mr. RODDENBERRY. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the paragraph, for the purpose of calling the gentleman's attention to a certain matter. I shall not detain the committee unduly.

Mr. RUSSELL. What is the name of that case?

Mr. RODDENBERRY. It is on page 31, line 12. I will not detain the committee; but I think the attention of the committee and of the House ought to be called to this fact: Here is the name of William F. Marshall, a soldier, and if you will look at the committee report you will see that there is a lack of uniformity in the rates. He gets $40 a month, and just before it there is a widow. She is given only $12 a month. I can not understand why a widow is not just as dependent and just as helpless as a man and why she should get only $12 a month and he should get $40 a month. And just before that there is a soldier, and he is given $50 a month. It presents this situation:

Here is a Congressman's soldier who gets $50, while another gets $12; and here is a widow who gets $12, and another gets $30. It does seem to me that in the careful, painstaking wisdom of the committee there ought to be some remedy for that. I am not seeking to delay the committee or to make a vexatious objection.

Mr. RUSSELL. I know the gentleman is asking the question in good faith. Now, does not the gentleman from Georgia know that it is the policy of Congress and of the Pension Department, and always has been—whether right or wrong, I do not now assume to say—not to pay widows of soldiers as much as the soldiers themselves who did the fighting are paid?

Mr. RODDENBERRY. That is quite true.

Mr. RUSSELL. That is all there is in that point.

Mr. RODDENBERRY. But does not the gentleman think it would be more equitable, more just, and more patriotic to take a bill like this, with all its variations from $12 to $50 a month, and recommit it and let a proposition come in to equalize the items and give all soldiers $24 or $30 a month and all widows $20 or $24 a month? Does not that look as though it would be reasonable? It seems to me that the natural sense of equity, justice, and fairness of that proposition would cause it to address itself with future and present favor to the committee.

Mr. RUSSELL. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman from Georgia vote for a bill like that?

Mr. RODDENBERRY. I would be glad to recommit the bill with instructions to the committee.

Mr. RUSSELL. That does not answer my question. Would the gentleman vote to pay all soldiers $24 or $30 a month and all widows $20 a month? Would the gentleman vote for a bill like that?

Mr. RODDENBERRY. If I get the opportunity I will move to recommit the bill with instructions to the committee to report immediately $24 a month for all soldiers and $20 a month for all widows in this bill; and if you will permit it to be recommitted and reported to the House I will vote for it, because it will save the country many thousands of dollars over the present provisions of the bill and be more equitable.

Mr. RUSSELL. That was the nature of the Sherwood bill, so far as the soldiers were concerned. Did the gentleman vote for that bill?

Mr. RODDENBERRY. No; I did not, but that bill covered the cases of people worth $100,000 apiece. They ought not to be pensioned.

Mr. RUSSELL. I think not myself. I agree with the gentleman on that.

Mr. RODDENBERRY. The gentleman and I agree. Then, there was in that bill a provision that a soldier in a soldiers' home might draw $30 a month. That was not fair. There were other insurmountable objections.

Mr. ANDERSON of Ohio. The gentleman says he would like to recommit the bill and give all soldiers $24 or $30 per month. Will not the gentleman take into consideration a soldier who has reached the age of 62 years as against the case of a soldier who is 80 years old, as this old soldier is at the present time? Will the gentleman not take into consideration a soldier who served 90 days as against a soldier who served over 4 years? Will he pension all soldiers alike, regardless of age, service, or disability?

Mr. RODDENBERRY. No. I would draft a bill covering soldiers—

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Georgia has expired.

The question being taken on the motion to strike out the paragraph, it was rejected.

The Clerk read as follows:

The name of Albert Barfield, alias Albert Pound, late of Company C, Twenty-fourth Regiment United States Colored Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $24 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

Mr. ANSBERRY. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out "twenty-four," in line 19, and to insert in lieu thereof "thirty." I desire to call the attention of the committee to the fact that this man, evidently a colored soldier, is suffering from curvature of the spine, partial paralysis, and total blindness. In my opinion he should be paid $30 a month.

Mr. ANDERSON of Ohio. Which one is it?

Mr. ANSBERRY. Albert Barfield, on page 31, line 16. On this particular proposition I am quite in line with my patriotic friend from Georgia [Mr. RODDENBERRY], who has done so much this afternoon to point out errors in the bill.

Mr. ANDERSON of Ohio. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TRIBBLE. Certainly.

Mr. ANDERSON of Ohio. I would like to advise my colleague that it has been the practice of the committee not to grant an increase exceeding $24 where the soldier served less than a year. While I would vote for the increase in this case to $30, or in all similar cases, it is against the practice of the committee.

Mr. TRIBBLE. Mr. Chairman, I desire to say this in regard to the gentleman's amendment: This fight on special pensions started principally on the motion of a gentleman on the other side over there to increase a pension on the floor of the House from $25 to $70. To this I have called attention in previous remarks. The attention of the country was called to that particular fact. I have been assured by members of this committee to-day that no more Members will be allowed on the floor of the House to increase a pension without carrying it back to the committee and have the committee act on it first.

Mr. ANSBERRY. Mr. Chairman, I will withdraw the amendment. I only wanted to test the gentleman's patriotism.

Mr. RODDENBERRY. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the paragraph. So far as this gentleman from Georgia is concerned, so long as I am a Member of Congress, I will not willfully, knowingly, and deliberately vote to give a nigger $24 or $30 and the widow of a white soldier only $12—never.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Georgia to strike out the section.

The question was taken, and the amendment was rejected.

The Clerk read as follows:

The name of Edward B. North, late of Company G, Ninety-fifth Regiment Ohio Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $36 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word to see if we can get some information in the committee as to what the committee is going to do. May I respectfully inquire of the two gentlemen from Georgia, Mr. RODDENBERRY and Mr. TRIBBLE, whether they have a number of other paragraphs in the bill which they desire to discuss?

Mr. TRIBBLE. Answering for myself, I will say that I have several.

Mr. RODDENBERRY. Unless matters arise in the future unexpectedly, I have only two. There are a number I would like to address myself to, but I am physically unable to do so. There are, however, two others that I do desire five minutes in which to call attention of the members of the subcommittee and the Members of the House to inconsistencies.

Mr. MANN. May I further inquire if it is the gentleman's intention to make a motion to recommit?

Mr. RODDENBERRY. It is.

Mr. MANN. And does the gentleman intend to insist on a quorum?

Mr. RODDENBERRY. Mr. Chairman, it is very important to have a quorum here on this legislation.

Mr. MANN. If the gentleman will indulge me, it seems to me it would be wise for the committee to rise. It is very evident that there is only one or two ways in which these private pension bills can be passed. One would be by a rule such as was brought in two weeks ago; another would be by a rule which would authorize the Speaker to recognize a member of the committee to make a motion for suspension of the rules to pass the bill. I should think likely, if the opposition is to be continued, that in the state we are in, as far as the business of the House is concerned, the House would be justified in agreeing to a rule which would authorize the Speaker on Fridays to recognize a Member for a motion to suspend the rules and pass the private pension bill. If that is to be the case and we are to have that or some other such method it might as well be applied to this bill at another session as to sit here for several hours to-night and then not be able to pass it. It is perfectly manifest that the House can not get a quorum to-night.

Mr. RODDENBERRY. May I inquire with reference to the motion to suspend the rules and pass the bill, if there is any rule of the House now that prevents a motion to suspend the rules on Monday, on suspension day?

Mr. MANN. There is no rule of the House, but with the exception of the war claims bill, which in the last Congress was passed under a motion to suspend the rules, the Speaker has never heretofore recognized a Member for a motion to suspend the rules to pass a private bill.

Mr. RODDENBERRY. I have no doubt that the gentleman from Pennsylvania could assist the gentleman of the Rules Committee on this side in the preparation of such a rule.

Mr. MANN. It would not require the ingenuity of the gentleman from Pennsylvania. Any gentleman who has been in the House for two or three terms, who has seen a large share of the legislation of Congress pass through the House under motion to suspend the rules, without which Congress would be soon tied up on legislation so that it could not extricate itself, would readily recognize the fact that a large share of the business is passed under suspension of the rules, and would readily suggest that that would be the proper way to make a motion to pass a bill which two-thirds of the House desires to pass after short discussion.

Mr. RODDENBERRY. Mr. Chairman, I was altogether of the opinion of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN], that without any assistance we on this side could prepare rules of this sort, until it was brought to my attention two weeks ago that recourse was had to the great learning and ability of the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. DALZELL], and he safely guided us through into the land of gadom.

Mr. LAMB. Oh, the gentleman from Pennsylvania, having been long a member of the majority of the House that did business, that passed more good legislation than any other legislative body in the same length of time, knows how it is done.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Illinois has expired.

Mr. HAMILTON of West Virginia. Mr. Chairman, what is before the House?

The CHAIRMAN. Nothing. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

The name of James D. Burcham, late of Company E, Sixth Regiment Tennessee Volunteer Cavalry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $30 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

Mr. RODDENBERRY. Mr. Chairman, is it in order at this stage to suggest the absence of a quorum?

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will count. One hundred and sixteen Members present, a quorum.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I ask that the Chair count again. I am not willing to have the Chair guess at what is a quorum in this committee under any circumstance.

The CHAIRMAN (after counting). One hundred and eighty-eight Members present. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

The name of Joseph Carter, jr., late of Company B, Tenth Regiment New Hampshire Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $30 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

Mr. RODDENBERRY. Mr. Chairman, I move that the committee do now rise.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Georgia that the committee do now rise.

The question was taken, and on a division, demanded by Mr. RODDENBERRY, there were—ayes 24, noes 70.

Mr. TRIBBLE. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order that there is no quorum present.

Mr. RODDENBERRY. Mr. Chairman, I ask for tellers.

The CHAIRMAN. All those in favor of ordering tellers will rise and stand until counted.

Mr. ELLERBE. Mr. Chairman, a parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. ELLERBE. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from Georgia on my left [Mr. TRIBBLE] makes the point that there is no quorum present. After he had done that, the gentleman from Georgia on my right [Mr. RODDENBERRY], who has been very silent to-day, demanded tellers. I ask now if it is not, first, the proper thing to do for the Chair to decide the point of no quorum?

Mr. TRIBBLE. Mr. Chairman, I insist on the point of order that there is no quorum present. I insist that the division disclosed the fact of the absence of a quorum.

Mr. GARRETT. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order that that point of order is dilatory.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair has just counted a quorum.

Mr. TRIBBLE. Mr. Chairman, when the Chair counted it again on a division, the absence of a quorum was disclosed.

The CHAIRMAN. The number of those who stood up on the division did not constitute a quorum, but a number of gentlemen did not stand up. There was a quorum present. Those in favor of ordering tellers will rise and stand until counted. [After counting.] Twelve gentlemen, not a sufficient number, and tellers are refused, and the Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

The name of Frederick Markgraf, late of Company F, Sixty-eighth Regiment Illinois Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $20 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

Mr. RODDENBERRY. Mr. Chairman, a parliamentary inquiry. From what page is the Clerk reading?

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk is reading from page 35.

Mr. RODDENBERRY. Mr. Chairman, is it in order for the Chair to ascertain if the Clerk made a mistake and skipped page 34?

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair presumes that the Clerk has read consecutively. The Clerk will proceed with the reading.

The Clerk read as follows:

The name of David Gilchrist, late of Company B, Thirty-sixth Regiment Ohio Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $36 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

Mr. TRIBBLE. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. We come now to the item of Nancy Gaven, on line 21, page 36 of the bill. I find, on referring to the report, that the officers of the church federation of charity of Lebanon, Mo., in pleading for the restoration of this woman's name to the pension roll, believe in her good faith, so they say. Mr. Chairman, on the floor of the House to-day you have been told in eloquent language by the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. RUBEY] that this woman has been a pauper on the town of Lebanon. You have had a description of a pitiful scene which was enacted before him before he left his home. So deplorable is the condition of this woman and her family that the church federation at Lebanon, Mo., has for years and years and years, according to the statement of the gentleman from Missouri, had her in charge and supported her and her family as paupers.

Mr. RUBEY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TRIBBLE. Yes.

Mr. RUBEY. I say to the gentleman that he is absolutely mistaken.

Mr. TRIBBLE. What did the gentleman say?

Mr. RUBEY. In my remarks I did not use the word "pauper" at all.

Mr. TRIBBLE. Will the gentleman repeat what he said?

Mr. RUBEY. Mr. Chairman, I am not going into a discussion of that matter at all. When the gentleman gets through with his remarks let us go on and finish the bill. I have made my speech before this House, and I am willing to stand by it. [Applause.]

Mr. TRIBBLE. I withdraw the word "pauper," Mr. Chairman, and I will substitute for it the word "dependent"—that she was dependent on the people of Lebanon and the church federation.

I want to say to you that I think it is getting to be a pretty severe hardship when the people of Georgia, to whom they refer, are not only called upon to carry the pension list of some of the Western States, but to carry on that list the dependent paupers who are not entitled to pensions. Now, Mr. Chairman, what are the facts? I weigh well my words, and I do not mean to criticize the committee, but I say they have not investigated these cases. These cases, I presume, come up in the committee room as they usually do in committee rooms, and the members of the committee are busy. They have passed up to this time about 600 cases. The gentleman can not get up on the floor of this House and say that they have inspected and passed upon the claims of these pensioners by personal investigation. Therefore I am not criticizing the committee. I have never in any of my pension speeches or remarks on the floor of this House criticized any man or set of men. You can read my speeches from the beginning, and you will find that that is true. What are the facts of this case? I will give them.

The husband, according to the report of the committee, A. J. Moore, died on March 19, 1865. Listen Mr. Chairman. This does not come from the mouth of my friend from Missouri [Mr. RUBEY]. I know he is an honest man, if there is an honest man on the floor of this House. He is my friend, and I love him; but these words do not come from him. But these words go to the country, and the country stands upon this record; and what does the record say. It says:

Shortly thereafter Nancy took up with Gaven, also a soldier, and, having become a Catholic, married him by ceremony February 15, 1878.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman's time has expired. Without objection, the pro forma amendment will be withdrawn.

Mr. TRIBBLE. Now, there is the record.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

The name of Mary E. Martin, widow of George G. Martin, late Lieutenant colonel First Regiment United States Colored Volunteer Infantry, and pay her a pension at the rate of $30 per month in lieu of that she is now receiving.

Mr. TRIBBLE. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. Now, I want to conclude my remarks as to Nancy Gaven.

Mr. ANSBERRY. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order that he can not conclude his remarks concerning this person while we are on another item.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Georgia will proceed.

Mr. ANSBERRY. He wants to talk about a case which we have passed.

Mr. TRIBBLE. If the House—

Mr. ANSBERRY. I did not want you to discuss a paragraph which has been passed.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Georgia [Mr. TRIBBLE] may proceed in order.

Mr. TRIBBLE. I respectfully submit it has been stated on the floor of this House here to-day that the committee had no disposition in the world to shut out the light of truth.

Mr. ANSBERRY. I am still of that opinion, but I do not regard the gentleman as the light of truth by any means.

Mr. TRIBBLE. I do not claim it, but I have not read a word but what is in the books and the record.

Mr. ANSBERRY. Have we not passed that item?

Mr. TRIBBLE. Yes, sir. We have passed that.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

The name of Mary De Krieger, widow of Peter W. De Krieger, late of Company C, Tenth Regiment Illinois Volunteer Infantry, and pay her a pension at the rate of $12 per month.

Mr. TRIBBLE. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. Now, Mr. Chairman, I call attention to a case on page 103 of the report, where a woman is to receive a pension from the committee, and I desire to call attention to the record in the office of the Pension Bureau. The applicant filed a claim under the act of June 27, 1890, on March 27, 1891, which was rejected July 24, 1899.

Mr. ANDERSON of Ohio. Has the gentleman reference to Charles Pettys?

Mr. TRIBBLE. No, sir; to Mary De Krieger.

On July 24, 1890, the case was reopened and rejected again, after special examination March 11, 1907, on the ground that the evidence failed to establish legal presumption of the soldier's death.

They took an appeal the last time. Upon appeal this rejection was affirmed July 13, 1907, and the department agreed with the basis of the rejection by the bureau.

Now, Mr. Chairman, the point I make is, this committee comes in here and sets up this precedent in this bill. It is not a new one, I admit, but I say it is contrary to the law of the United States.

I say that no woman can draw a pension under the statute laws of the United States, unless it affirmatively appears that her husband is dead and that he had pensionable rights. Now, this committee takes this case from the bureau when the bureau refused it, and with their power, with force at arms—the power that they have—they say to the bureau, “You are wrong, and we are going to give this woman a pension.” Upon what evidence? How many members of the committee have heard of this case? I would like to know how many members of the committee have read this case. What is the testimony that is furnished to the committee? The testimony furnished to the committee was the testimony of a gambler—a gambler who went by an alias. The gambler is said to have lived in one town, and a man by the name of Daly lived in another town, far removed, and the gambler got his information from Daly. According to the report of the Pension Bureau, Mr. Daly also bears an alias. Mr. Daly says that one man, by the name of Johnson, presumed by him to be the woman's husband, from information furnished him, is dead, and here is another alias, not the name of the woman's husband, but a man by the name of Johnson. And yet Darby tells the gambler that Johnson is dead. What reason has anybody to conclude that Johnson is De Krieger. In the name of God, do you propose to go on and pick out any kind of a name and any kind of proof and insert it here in order that somebody may get a pension?

Now, here is a statement to the effect that, owing to some defect in Cobb's statement, a man with an alias, taken after 30 years, the bureau had declined to take his uncorroborated statement. Now, Mr. Chairman, the bureau says:

One Charles Cobb, a gambler, informed one Patrick H. Daly, whom he met in Cheyenne (Daly being from Quincy), that soldier, whom he knew as Johnson, died in a prospecting tour in the fall of 1876 in Colorado, he, De Krieger, alias Daly, being one of a party of four, Cobb also being of the party. Owing to some discrepancies in Cobb's statements, taken 30 years after the reputed death, the bureau declined to accept his uncorroborated statement.

This committee does not furnish the House with the untruthful things Cobb furnished the bureau, referred to, but calls on this House to give her a pension with this kind of evidence, rejected by the bureau.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. HUGHES of New Jersey. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman has no time to yield. His time has expired.

Mr. HOWARD. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last two words.

Mr. Chairman, I am inclined to disagree with my colleague from Georgia [Mr. TRIBBLE] with reference to this claim. I have looked over this case carefully, and I think this woman's husband is dead. In other words, I am sure he is dead, and the reason I am so certain that he is dead is because he has never made any application for a pension. [Applause and laughter.] If he enlisted, there is no question about the fact that he would already have applied for a pension. If he lived in the district of some one of my good friends over in Ohio or Illinois or Indiana, he certainly would have been on the pension roll. [Laughter.]

But this is rather a peculiar case. It seems from the evidence submitted to the committee that this man and his wife frequently fought; that upon several occasions from 1866 to 1870 they had numerous and sundry fist and cuff fights, and it must be apparent that the wife at length got the better of the old man in the melees along about in 1870, and he ran away, and because of that fact they have not heard of him, and because he ran off and never came back they assume that he is dead. [Laughter.]

Now, Mr. Chairman, seriously, it looks to me as though this case should have been more seriously investigated by the committee before they brought in their report.

Mr. TRIBBLE. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HOWARD. Yes.

Mr. TRIBBLE. My colleague has been solicitor general in Georgia, has he not?

Mr. HOWARD. Yes.

Mr. TRIBBLE. Did you ever draw a bill of indictment in behalf of a man who had an alias and believed him on oath?

Mr. HOWARD. I never did, and I never expect to. Now, it seems that somebody tried to boost up this old lady's claim. It developed that there were four gamblers, all hailing from that section of the country from which my distinguished colleague, Judge RUCKER, hails, and these gamblers, each with an alias, got together and submitted evidence to the Pension Bureau, and the Pension Bureau refused to believe their testimony and grant a pension to this woman. Now it appears from the statement of my distinguished colleague [Mr. TRIBBLE] that they bring in a bill for a woman, whose husband has never been affirmatively proven to be dead.

Mr. SHACKLEFORD. Will the gentleman yield?

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Georgia yield to the gentleman from Missouri?

Mr. HOWARD. Yes.

Mr. SHACKLEFORD. Does not seven years' absence, without knowledge of the absentee being in life, establish in law death?

Mr. HOWARD. Ordinarily that is the rule, roughly stated.

Mr. SHACKLEFORD. Why would not that policy apply here, which would apply in a murder case or in any other case?

Mr. HOWARD. It would apply here if they had not fought between the years 1866 and 1870. It is not reasonable to suppose that a husband would write his wife an affectionate letter under those circumstances.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. HOWARD. Mr. Chairman, I withdraw my pro forma amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The pro forma amendment is withdrawn. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

The name of Hugh Lappin, late of Company I, Seventieth Regiment, and Company D, Seventy-third Regiment, New York Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $36 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

Mr. RODDENBERY. Mr. Chairman, in regard to this particular pension, I move to strike out the paragraph. It is on page 44, line 11, page 104, of the report; the second item.

This alleged soldier, who I doubt not was a soldier as the record shows, now 72 years old, drew a pension of $6 a month for many years. Later, under existing law, he drew a pension of $12 for several years, and still later, under another law, he drew a pension of $15 a month for some time. Now, the committee recommends that his pension be increased to $36 a month, which is more than doubling it at one stroke, while just above it, on the same page, is the case of a widow, 64 years old, who is dependent, who married the soldier just after the war. The soldier died, and now the committee recommends $20 for the widow. I want to suggest to the gentleman that the difference between $20 and $36 shows a disproportionate amount that can not be defended. So I wish to suggest again to this committee that there are in this bill some items that should have been more carefully considered.

Mr. AKIN of New York. Is this going to be another case where the old lady put the dingbats on the old man?

Mr. RODDENBERY. It does not so appear. So far as I can see, the soldier is entitled to his pension and the widow is entitled to her pension, but it shows an inequality and excessive amounts, and I trust that the committee in future, in the exercise of their discretion, having many burdens to carry and many difficult problems to solve, will not treat lightly the attention that we have sought to call to these matters. We do not expect to have these items voted down. We well know they will pass the House, but it is in no improper spirit that the attention of the committee and the attention of the House is called to these excesses. Let us be more careful. Let us be no less just than the Republicans were, but more cautious than they were, more careful than they were. Not to save money at the expense of the soldiers of the country, but to save money from undeserving cases, so that we may well compensate the soldiers of the country and protect our taxpayers.

The Republicans have been reckless in expenditures, as we have charged for 15 years, and they have been reckless in granting pensions. The Republicans have manifested a recklessness that it is our Democratic duty to the country and to the soldiers to stop. It is our public duty as Democrats to deal justly with these soldiers, but to correct the errors into which the Republicans fell, and to avoid the recklessness in which they indulged, and let the country and the soldiers know that the Democrats, without regard to North, East, South, or West, will pension the deserving soldier, but will not recklessly and unguardedly let an excessive amount or an improper pension be appropriated from the Treasury of the country.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. RODDENBERY. I withdraw the pro forma amendment. The Clerk read as follows:

The name of Julia A. Rulo, widow of John Rulo, late of Company D, Thirtieth Regiment Indiana Volunteer Infantry, and pay her a pension at the rate of $20 per month in lieu of that she is now receiving.

Mr. CLINE. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out “twenty” and insert “thirty,” in line 23, page 44.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Indiana moves to strike out the word “twenty” and insert the word “thirty.”

Mr. TRIBBLE. Mr. Chairman, I renew my objection, and I renew the statement that I made previously that I have had assurance from members of this committee—

Mr. CLINE. Mr. Chairman, I believe I have the floor.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair thought the gentleman did not desire to speak, and for that reason he recognized the gentleman from Georgia.

Mr. CLINE. I do not want to make any extended remarks or to cast any reflection upon the committee, because it would be a violation of their rule to change this rate.

I do want to call attention to this woman. They were married in 1856. He served nearly four years in the service, and died in 1910. They lived together about 60 years. She is totally blind, partially paralyzed, requires the care and assistance of another person all the time, and I think her pension ought to be increased to $30.

Mr. TRIBBLE. Mr. Chairman, I realize the fact that the House will pass the gentleman's amendment. I make my objection in the face of the fact that they will pass it. But, gentlemen, it sets a precedent; another man will come in here and repeat the same thing that we had on the floor previously and which started this fight on pensions. Now, the gentleman's amendment can go to the committee and the committee can bring it back in two weeks from now, and we can consider it. The chairman of the subcommittee assured me that hereafter the committee would not entertain amendments on the floor of the House; that they would insist on amendments increasing pensions going back to the committee and having a hearing on them before they would entertain them on the floor of the House.

Mr. HAMILTON of West Virginia. Mr. Chairman, I will have to say, in justice to the gentleman who has just spoken, that I did assure him that the committee would do all in its power to defeat all amendments except committee amendments. Now, in justice to the committee, I hope this amendment of the gentleman will be defeated.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Indiana.

The question was considered, and the amendment was lost.

The Clerk read as follows:

The name of Della M. Williams, widow of David T. Williams, late of Company A, Seventy-sixth Regiment New York Volunteer Infantry, and pay her a pension at the rate of $20 per month in lieu of that she is now receiving.

Mr. RODDENBERRY. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last paragraph read. Here is a widow, according to the report, that presents a case in which it is recommended that she be allowed $20 a month. On the preceding page there was a soldier in the Army who is no more dependent, and the committee has just voted to give him a pension of $40 a month. There is a manifest disparity in those cases. Soldiers all through this bill are given $30 and $36 and some $40 a month. Right behind comes a widow who is only given $12 or $20 a month. Now, in the consideration of this measure there should be a just and sufficient reason given for discrimination and large amounts. Gentlemen here do not explain it.

The majority party in this House is charged, and our subcommittee is charged, with duty and public responsibility to deliberately and intelligently and justly consider these questions, and not grant a pension of $40 to one valiant soldier, $30 to another, and $15 to one infirm widow, and $30 to another. I submit to you, gentlemen, in all candor and all fairness, that we owe it to the country and to the soldiers and to the widows, in dealing with these things, to administer the pension laws justly. We ought to demonstrate what we claimed for 15 years, that we have more capacity for intelligent and fair and judicious legislation than our Republican friends. Are we pledged to imitate them? To be sure we have followed the distinguished ex-Speaker in one of our rules, but must we do it in our legislation? Can not we begin where they left off and where they recklessly expended money and dishonored the pension roll, can not we economize and clean it out and pay fair pensions to the real soldiers?

Let the people of this country understand that we are capable of doing justice to these old soldiers, and purge the roll of those who do not deserve it. It is our responsibility, it is our duty to the country, it is our duty to the soldiery, and our duty to ourselves.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection the pro forma amendment of the gentleman from Georgia will be withdrawn.

The Clerk read as follows:

The name of James E. Greene, late of Company A, One hundred and forty-eighth Regiment New York Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $30 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

Mr. RODDENBERRY. Mr. Chairman, I do not want to interpose except for a moment. The committee will notice that the last three pensions—James E. Green, $30 a month; Louis H. Walker, $24 a month; and George E. Wilson, $36 a month—

three soldiers in consecutive order, with different pension allowances, all with service in the Army. Now, it is equity that I desire to impress upon the committee, and the responsibility and duty of the Democrats to investigate and to correct this discriminating practice. Do not let gentlemen get impatient and disturbed about the future of the party because of the disposition we have indicated here for discussion. My Democratic brethren, rather than make much of dangers here, should turn to Kentucky, to that brilliant Democratic editor, of 50 years' party allegiance, who lately continually dips his scathing pen in gall and excoriates the name and fame of the governor of one of our States—a Democrat, who aspires to the Presidency. If you want harmony do not turn here, but go to the great Democratic editor and bid him lay down his bitter pen and with Democratic loyalty pay high respect and tribute to another potential national Democrat. You Democratic leaders of this side, who have the power and who control the destiny of our party—have it in the palms of your hands—I bid you leaders counsel yourselves together with the other Democratic leaders who are now striking at the very heart of the great commoner and let them pour the oil of peace and not the vitriol of discord upon his head, for, although he may never wear the crown of gold upon his brow, we should not press down upon him the wreath of thorns. [Applause.] Therein lies party harmony and the people's triumph.

The Clerk concluded the reading of the bill.

Mr. HAMILTON of West Virginia. Mr. Chairman, I move that the committee do now rise and report the bill with amendments to the House, with a recommendation that the amendments be agreed to and that the bill as amended do pass.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the committee rose; and Mr. FITZGERALD having assumed the chair as Speaker pro tempore, Mr. DIXON of Indiana, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that committee had had under consideration the bill H. R. 21230, and had authorized him to report the same back to the House with sundry amendments, with the recommendation that the amendments be agreed to and that the bill as amended do pass.

Mr. HAMILTON of West Virginia. Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question on the bill and amendments to final passage.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on ordering the previous question.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. RODDENBERRY) there were—ayes 80, noes 2.

Mr. RODDENBERRY. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order that there is no quorum present.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Evidently there is no quorum present. The Doorkeeper will close the doors, the Sergeant at Arms will notify absentees, the question will be taken on ordering the previous question, and the Clerk will call the roll.

The question was taken; and there were—ayes 170, noes 9, answered "present" 19, not voting 195, as follows:

Mr. FOSTER of Illinois. Mr. Speaker, I understand the gentleman from Wisconsin, Mr. KOPP, did not vote.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. He is not recorded as voting. Mr. FOSTER of Illinois. I voted "aye." I would like to withdraw my vote.

Mr. HAMILTON of Michigan. Mr. Speaker, I desire to inquire if the gentleman from Texas, Mr. STEPHENS, voted.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. He is not recorded as voting.

Mr. HAMILTON of Michigan. I am paired with the gentleman from Texas and I desire to withdraw my vote of "aye" and answer "present."

Prior to the announcement the following took place.

Mr. RODDENBERRY. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry. Is the Chair prepared to announce the result?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair is waiting until the Sergeant at Arms under the rule brings in absentees sufficient to make a quorum.

Mr. RODDENBERRY. Mr. Speaker, I understand, then, that a quorum is not present. I had heard no announcement of the result of the roll call.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. No announcement has been made and none will be made at present, or until the Sergeant at Arms executes his orders.

Mr. MANN. The Chair directed the Sergeant at Arms to notify absent Members, and we are simply waiting for them. That is all we can do.

Subsequently,

Mr. RODDENBERRY. Mr. Speaker, I rise to a point of order. The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. RODDENBERRY. I submit that under the rules of the House, when a call is made and a quorum does not appear, and the Speaker in the exercise of his rights directs the Sergeant at Arms to produce the Members at the bar, the Sergeant at Arms is required to detain those who are present and bring in the absentees. I make the point of order that Members are going out as fast as they come in.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair will state that so far as the Chair is informed the Sergeant at Arms is performing his duty.

Mr. RODDENBERRY. So far as the Chair observes?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. So far as the Chair is informed. Subsequently,

Mr. RODDENBERRY. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry. The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. RODDENBERRY. Is it in order for me to submit a few remarks?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair thinks not.

Subsequently,

Mr. RODDENBERRY. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry. The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. RODDENBERRY. While the Chair is waiting to obtain the presence of a quorum, would it not be in order, by unanimous consent to have some Members who introduced these bills explain the merits of their bills that they have not had time to explain as yet?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. That is not a parliamentary inquiry, and it would not be in order in the absence of a quorum.

Subsequently,

Mr. RUCKER of Missouri. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. RODDENBERRY] be allowed to address the House for 10 minutes.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. It would not be in order. There is no business before the House.

Mr. RUCKER of Missouri. I assume it would not be business. It would be simply a speech.

Subsequently,

Mr. RODDENBERRY. Mr. Speaker—

The SPEAKER pro tempore. For what purpose does the gentleman rise?

Mr. RODDENBERRY. Merely to observe, Mr. Speaker, that—

The SPEAKER pro tempore. It is not in order to make observations. The gentleman will be in order.

Subsequently,

Mr. RODDENBERRY. Mr. Speaker, may I ask the Chair if it may not be possible for us to obtain a quorum, so as to dispose of this matter before adjournment, in order that we may take up the Agriculture appropriation bill promptly in the morning and proceed with it?

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. UNDERWOOD). The Chair will state to the gentleman from Georgia that the House, according to the parliamentary rules of the House, is endeavoring to obtain a quorum, and the Sergeant at Arms is notifying absentees to appear before the bar of the House.

Mr. RODDENBERRY. I certainly hope the Sergeant at Arms will succeed, so that we can reach the consideration of the Agriculture appropriation bill.

The result of the vote was announced as above recorded.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. A quorum is present. The motion is agreed to, and a quorum being present, the Doorkeeper will open the doors, and further proceedings under the call will be dispensed with.

For the purpose of carrying out the provisions of this act, the sum of $5,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, is hereby specifically appropriated; said appropriation to be paid by warrants of the auditor general drawn upon the State treasurer, upon specifically itemized vouchers duly approved by the proper officers of said commission."

And whereas the Congress of the United States did on June 10, 1910, adopt the following concurrent resolution:

"Whereas the State of Pennsylvania has, by appropriate legislation, constituted a commission known as the 'Fiftieth Anniversary of the Battle of Gettysburg Commission,' to consider and arrange for a proper and fitting recognition and observance at Gettysburg of the fiftieth anniversary of the Battle of Gettysburg, with authority to invite the cooperation of the Congress of the United States and of other States and Commonwealths, and the said commission has extended an invitation to Congress and requested its cooperation in the matter: Therefore be it Resolved by the House of Representatives (the Senate concurring), That the President of the Senate and the Speaker of the House of Representatives be, and they are hereby, authorized and directed to appoint a committee to consist of three Senators and three Representatives to confer with the fiftieth anniversary of the battle of Gettysburg commission and report as soon as may be, the recommendations of said committee as to the proper action to be taken by Congress to enable the United States fittingly to join in the celebration of the fiftieth anniversary of the battle of Gettysburg; and the necessary expenses of said committee shall be paid one-half out of the contingent fund of the Senate and one-half out of the contingent fund of the House."

The following committee was appointed by the respective presiding officers:

Senate: Hon. GEORGE T. OLIVER, Hon. WELDON B. HEYBURN, Hon. ISIDOR RAYNER.

House: Hon. James A. Tawney, Hon. DANIEL F. LAFEAN, Hon. JOHN LAMB.

The Hon. GEORGE T. OLIVER has been selected as the chairman of the committee;

And whereas the above-named Hon. ISIDOR RAYNER has resigned and the Hon. CLAUDE A. SWANSON, a Senator from the State of Virginia, was appointed in his stead and is now a member of said congressional commission;

And whereas the General Assembly of the Commonwealth of Pennsylvania did on the 14th day of June, 1911, enact as follows:

"An act making an appropriation to the Fiftieth Anniversary of the Battle of Gettysburg Commission to enable the commission to further carry out the provisions of the act of assembly approved May 13, A. D. 1909, creating said commission and defining the duty thereof."

Whereas the act of assembly approved May 13, A. D. 1909, P. L. 1909, page 777, created a commission—

"To be known as the Fiftieth Anniversary of the Battle of Gettysburg Commission, whose duty shall be to consider and arrange for a proper and fitting observance, at Gettysburg, of the fiftieth anniversary of the Battle of Gettysburg; with authority to invite the cooperation of the Congress of the United States and of the other States and Commonwealths; the commission to make report of its action, with recommendations, to the next session of the General Assembly of Pennsylvania," and made a preliminary appropriation for the purpose of carrying out the provisions of said act; and

Whereas the commission has duly presented to his excellency, the governor of the Commonwealth, for transmittal to the present session of the General Assembly of Pennsylvania, such report of its action, with recommendations and plans, as far as it has been possible at this early date to adopt plans: Now therefore

SECTION 1. Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the Commonwealth of Pennsylvania in General Assembly met, and it is hereby enacted by the authority of the same, that to enable the commission to further carry out the provisions of the above-recited act in accordance with the said report, recommendations, and plans of the commission, the sum of $50,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, is hereby specifically appropriated; said appropriation to be paid by warrants of the auditor general drawn upon the State treasurer, upon specifically itemized vouchers duly approved by the officers of said commission: Provided, That the total amount to be expended by the Commonwealth of Pennsylvania in connection with this celebration shall not exceed $250,000;

And whereas at a meeting of the State and national commissioners held at Washington on January 12, 1912, it was agreed to recommend to Congress that the necessary steps should be taken for the participation of the General Government to cooperate with the State of Pennsylvania in such commemoration on the 1st, 2d, 3d, and 4th days of July, 1913: Therefore be it

Resolved by the Senate (the House of Representatives concurring), That preliminary to such legislation by Congress as may be necessary to enable the Government of the United States to be properly represented on such occasion the Secretary of War be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to confer with the Fiftieth Anniversary of the Battle of Gettysburg Commission of the State of Pennsylvania, and.

First. To cause to be made such surveys, measurements, and estimates as will be necessary in regard to providing for a sufficient supply of good water for the use of those who shall attend the celebration.

Second. To investigate as to the necessary and proper provision required to be made for sewerage, sanitation, hospital, and policing during such celebration.

Third. To estimate upon the tents, camp equipment, supplies, and rations that, in his judgment, will be necessary to properly accommodate and provide for those who shall attend such commemoration, and to estimate what provision will be necessary to be made for local transportation and care of those who may or probably will participate in such celebration, and to give an estimate of the cost, separately stated, of the several provisions necessary to be made.

Fourth. To estimate the quantity of camp equipment, such as tents, bedding, and cooking outfits, necessary to accommodate the people attending, together with the cost per unit of a suitable ration to be issued and as to the best method of providing and issuing such rations.

Fifth. To prepare a plan of camp arrangement suitable to the occasion.

Sixth. To report to Congress upon all of these matters within 30 days after the passage of this resolution.

USE OF AUTOMOBILES IN NATIONAL PARKS.

Mr. WARREN submitted the following resolution (S. Res. 246), which was read, considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to:

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, directed to submit to the Senate, as early as practicable, a statement giving the names of the national parks under the control of the Department of the Interior, if any, in which automobiles or other motor cars are permitted to be used, and the rules and regulations governing such use; also such plans, if any, as may have been or are under consideration by the Department of the Interior for permitting the use of automobiles or motor cars in the Yellowstone National Park; and the estimates of cost, if any have been made, which would be entailed by the possible construction of new roads or changes in the use of present roads should automobiles be admitted to said park.

AMERICAN NATIONAL RED CROSS.

Mr. DU PONT. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the motion entered yesterday by me to reconsider the vote by which the Senate passed the bill (S. 4238) to provide for the use of the American National Red Cross in aid of the land and naval forces in time of actual or threatened war.

The motion was agreed to.

PENSION BILLS.

Mr. McCUMBER. Mr. President, I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the bill (S. 4314) granting pensions and increase of pensions to certain soldiers and sailors of the Civil War and certain widows and dependent relatives of such soldiers and sailors.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The pending question is on the amendment offered by the Senator from Georgia [Mr. SMITH], which will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 21, lines 24 and 25, and lines 1 and 2 on page 22, strike out the item relative to Frank A. Wardwell.

Mr. McCUMBER. Mr. President, in the consideration of previous pension bills, especially those of a general character, there have gone into the Record so many inaccurate statements that I felt called upon, believing that it would be to our advantage, to secure from the Commissioner of Pensions several sets of figures covering different aspects of the pension question, with the end in view that when we came to the consideration of the general pension bill we might have before us all, or practically all, of the information in as accurate a form as it is possible to get it for use in the discussion of that bill. Therefore we had prepared what is known as the Military and Naval Pensions of the United States, which was compiled for the use of the Senate Committee on Pensions, and we had it printed as a public document so that each Senator might have access to it. I can now fully understand how essential it was that we should have some data upon which we could rely in the examination of House bill No. 1 when it came before the committee. We found very many inaccuracies from our standpoint and therefore thought it best to get these figures before the Senate so that they might be used in the discussion, not only of that particular bill, but also in the discussion of any other measure relating to pensions.

To show how necessary was this precaution I have but to call attention to a statement made by the Senator from Georgia [Mr. SMITH] in his discussion yesterday, in which he quoted from a letter of a private soldier in a certain company certain information, which the Senator from Georgia undoubtedly relied upon or else he surely would not have stated it to the Senate; but it is so inaccurate that I am certain, when the Senator's attention is called to it, he himself will be glad to have the correction made.

I call attention to the following statement of the Senator from Georgia in yesterday's Record:

I have here a table of figures prepared by Mr. Henry S. Wells, private, Company K, Twenty-seventh New York. It discloses the fact that we have on the pension roll 121,181 men who were in the service only 90 days.

I did not in every instance have an opportunity clearly to understand all of the statements made by the Senator yesterday, or I should undoubtedly have called his attention to this inaccurate statement at the time. If the Senator will turn to page 9 of this record of "Military and Naval Pensions of the United States"—

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I have not a copy of it.

Mr. McCUMBER. I will try to see that the Senator is furnished a copy—he will find the number of soldiers given who served 1 month, 2 months, 3 months, and every number of months up to 72, and he will find that of those who served less than 4 months, which would include those who served 3 months and those who served less than 4 months, there were 9,924 men, as against his estimate of 121,181. As the figures which are the basis of his calculation bear the relation to the actual figures of 9 to 121, the Senator can easily see that his calculations, based upon the erroneous figures, must be very wide of the truth. I call his attention to this and to the fact that we have the official record, which will assist him, undoubtedly, in the discussion of this case if he wants any data about service or age or anything of that kind.

It is probably due also that I should at this time, before the Senator from Georgia proceeds with the discussion, call attention to another statement made by the Senator in dealing with the case of Mr. Wardwell. The Senator said that Mr. Wardwell never fought in any battle at all. I am not certain whether he did or not, and I might be doing him an injustice if I admitted that he did not. I simply know that—

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Let me correct the Senator to this extent—

Mr. McCUMBER. Just a moment; let me finish the sentence—I simply know that, according to the record which I have, he served upon certain vessels, and that one of those vessels was engaged in the bombardment of Fort Fisher; but whether he was on that particular vessel at the time of that bombardment I can not say. I only say that I do not know whether he was in any engagement at all, and I do not think the Senator from Georgia would say definitely that he was or that he was not. I now yield to the Senator from Georgia.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I did not undertake to say that he had never been in a battle or that the vessel had never been in one. I did not mean definitely to state that he had not been, but I definitely stated that no proof had been submitted to show that he had been in a battle, and that from his very late enlistment and the condition of the war it seemed to be probable that he had not been.

Mr. McCUMBER. I think the Senator, in looking over the Record, will find in one place at least that he made the statement directly; but it was only as a matter of argument, and I fully understood the position of the Senator, that from his standpoint we should have positive evidence that the soldier did engage in battle before allowing him a pension.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. That was my position.

Mr. McCUMBER. I did not at all wish to convey the idea that I supposed the Senator from Georgia was attempting to show positively that this applicant was not engaged in any battle.

Again, the Senator stated that this claimant does not earn his living by manual labor; that he is the editor of a paper; that therefore as editor of the paper, as anyone would understand, he did not earn a living by manual labor, and it was not necessary that he should perform any manual labor. The Senator, of course, makes the statement in order to meet and counteract whatever force there may have been in the report that the claimant was unable to perform manual labor. I stated, Mr. President, to the Senator the vocation of this particular claimant, that he was running a little country paper, and the Senator probably knows—I do not know whether it is the same in his State as it is in mine—that in the case of these little country papers you will find the editor setting the type; that in a great many instances he does not have enough business even to justify more than one typesetter. I do not know whether the Senator would call that manual labor or not; certainly it does not require a great deal of physical strength, but it does require eyesight, and as this claimant is almost blind, absolutely too blind to pick up type and set it, so far as this particular case is concerned his affliction is such that it prevents him from performing the duties necessary for carrying on his own business and conducting it profitably.

Mr. President, I simply called attention to the figures concerning the 90-day men that were given by the Senator to show how unsafe it is to rely upon estimates made by anyone other than some official in the Bureau of Pensions as a basis for making a calculation.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. In quoting the figures that I did, I stated the authority upon which they were made. I did not pretend to have worked them out for myself. I have not been able to give that amount of detail time to the consideration of this question that would have enabled me to do so, and I have now for the first time this report from the Interior Department. I will take pains later on to examine the figures of this soldier, and see whether his comparisons of the pension paid to actual soldiers and to soldiers who rendered no actual services are correct.

With reference to the suggestion just made by the Senator from North Dakota as to what this particular pensioner should make from his newspaper, I would say that the owner or one of the joint owners of such a paper, a paper of 900 circulation, charging $2 per paper for circulation. The income from such a paper would give a fairly comfortable support of a thousand dollars a year to each of the parties.

We have no evidence in this case which goes into details. We have not an affidavit from anybody as to the physical condition of this gentleman who is to receive a special pension. We have a certificate from a doctor in general terms that the applicant is not able to do manual labor, but he does not say that he is not able to do work on his paper. There is nothing submitted to the Senate that could be regarded as evidence at all—

Mr. McCUMBER. Mr. President—

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Georgia yield to the Senator from North Dakota?

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Certainly.

Mr. McCUMBER. If the Senator from Georgia should come before me or before the committee of which I am chairman and state to those drafting the report that he is personally acquainted with Mr. Wardwell, or whoever the claimant might be; that he had known him for a great many years; that he had seen him only a short time ago and knew his physical and financial condition, and would give it to me, I would take his word absolutely upon that; and I am certain he would accept the word of any other Senator upon such a matter, although it was not placed in writing.

I will say that was the case in this particular case.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I certainly would accept the word of the Senator from North Dakota on any statement he would make to me and be absolutely sure that what he stated he believed to be correct. But I do not see how I could tell myself just what some friend of mine running a paper in Georgia was making unless I examined his books. I do not see how I could tell how prosperous he was. I would be compelled simply to take that which somebody told me. Here is a case where parties are seeking to take money out of the Treasury. It is the money of all the people. That money does not get into the Treasury in some mythical way. That money comes out of the pockets of the American citizens. They must pay it into the Treasury before it is paid out. Before it is taken out of the Treasury and given to some individual, evidence, even though it is ex parte, evidence in the shape of an affidavit, ought to be produced from the petitioner for an increase of pension that he is making nothing, that he requires the money, and that he is not able to do the work of running his paper.

Mr. McCUMBER. Mr. President, I will state to the Senator that we always require an affidavit or affidavits or a statement made by some Senator or some person who absolutely does know the condition.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Far be it from me to express a word of criticism against the committee, and certainly not any with reference to the chairman of the committee, and I do not wish to be put in the attitude of entertaining a critical feeling, but I say that when a Senator comes to examine the evidence he naturally would expect to find something in the record that would sustain his vote. Now, I desire to have read an amendment which I propose to offer to this entire bill, as an addition to it.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment will be read.

The SECRETARY. It is proposed to add at the end of the bill the following provisos:

Provided, however, That no one of the said special pensions contained in this bill shall be paid to anyone of the parties herein named until the Pension Bureau has made investigation and found the said party to whom the same is to be paid did not enter the service in consideration of a bounty or for a payment made to him to serve as a substitute; and

Provided further, That no one of the said pensions shall be paid until the examination has been made in the Pension Bureau and it has been found that said party has actually served in the Army or the Navy and was engaged in some battle in connection with said service.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. At the time my remarks were suspended yesterday I had called the attention of the Senate to the fact that the report of the Commissioner of Pensions shows that the Government has already paid in pensions to the soldiers of the Civil War over $4,000,000,000. The Senator from New Hampshire, who had served, as I understand, upon the Pensions Committee, expressed his surprise and interrupted to give me an opportunity to correct the statement. It is not to be wondered at that he was surprised. The amount is indeed startling, and yet here is the report of the Commissioner of Pensions, which shows that prior to the 1st of July last year our Government had paid to pensioners of the Civil War alone $3,985,719,000. Since the 1st of last July—8 months—the additional payment has been about $100,000,000. So that up to the present time the payment has been nearly $4,100,000,000.

What I desire to urge as objection to these special pensions, and especially to this particular special pension, is that with this enormous sum paid out by our Government the distribution has not been carried out properly with respect to the men who did the fighting; that the men who actually stood in the ranks and served in battle have not received their fair proportion of this enormous sum of money.

There is not a dollar that has been paid, especially to the rank and file of the men who served and who carried from the battle injuries of service origin, that any American citizen begrudges for a moment. I refer to those who really rendered long service—the boys who volunteered in the early part of the war and stood the fatigues and the dangers and the hardships. What I am urging is that the distribution has not been equitable and that the distribution is not now equitable. The sum has been immense, but it has been scattered too much away from the men who did the fighting to the men who did not do it.

The report of the Commissioner of Pensions shows that special pensions draw annually from the Treasury $6,611,357, and that nearly half of the names on the special pension rolls were placed there by the last Congress. If we go back three or four Congresses, we find that a few hundred were placed on the special pension roll each year. Last year there were 9,600 in round numbers.

I wish to urge that instead of adding names by special pension bills at the rate of $30 a month, we should determine what amount of money the Government can spare for pensions. Suppose we determine that $150,000,000 a year can be spared for the soldiers of the Civil War. Then the course to pursue is to take up the question of distribution. Let the fight not be simply on the Treasury. Let the fight be one of distribution, and put the money where it properly should go, and give the money to the boys who did the fighting. If the income-tax law had been sustained and we had a system by which the Treasury could be more easily replenished, perhaps over $150,000,000 a year could be given, but with all due regard to the other obligations of the Government I hardly think that more than that should be insisted upon.

Now, I believe we could take $150,000,000 and almost double the pay of the boys who did the most fighting, if we trim a class who did not do any fighting or practically none, and a class that does not follow in the same line with the rank and the file.

Now, take the names on our rolls of those who are abroad; the names of people who are not citizens of the United States and who probably never were, who never went into the Army like the boys from Indiana and Ohio, because they thought they ought to, because they regarded it as a duty, but only went into it as soldiers of fortune. I do not mean to criticize them in any sense. They went in for what was in sight and went home thereafter. I do not think there would be any impropriety in striking that million dollars from the pension rolls and having that million dollars additional to give to the boys who belong to this country.

Take the list of those who went in for bounties; take the list of those who went in as substitutes; take the list of those who are in homes, being amply provided for by the Government in homes. Take the list of those who have ample means already themselves. If it were put to them that the Government had $150,000,000 to distribute among the soldiers and that if they with their ample means did not take a part of it that much more would go to the other soldiers, they would not hesitate a moment to let it go, if this course were pursued of setting apart all the Treasury can stand for pensions.

Mr. BROWN. Mr. President—

The VICE PRESIDENT. Will the Senator from Georgia yield to the Senator from Nebraska?

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Certainly.

Mr. BROWN. Does the Senator mean to advance the doctrine that in these pension matters the first thing to do is to inquire how much the country can spare to pay the pensions?

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. That is exactly what I was suggesting.

Mr. BROWN. If we on inquiry should find the country can spare nothing, the Senator would then be in favor of no pensions?

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Not at all.

Mr. BROWN. I do not understand the position of the Senator.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Then I will try to make myself clear to the Senator. What I said was to take up the various obligations that were in front of us and adjust our distribution to the various responsibilities, determining according to our revenues what part we could justly distribute to each particular cause. I did not for a moment mean, I wish the Senator to understand, that the pensioners were to come last. I put them along with all the other responsibilities of the Government, that we should look at our income, look at our various responsibilities, and make a fair distribution budget.

Mr. BROWN. Mr. President—

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Georgia yield further?

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Certainly.

Mr. BROWN. Then the Senator recognizes an obligation on the part of the country to pay what it can afford to pay to the old soldiers who deserve attention and care.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I certainly do.

Mr. BROWN. Then the Senator would measure the amount we give him, first, by our capacity to pay it, and, second, by how much we owe him individually?

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I would not put it exactly that way. I do not regard it as an ordinary obligation. I regard it as a payment that could most properly be made and the propriety of which everybody recognizes.

Mr. BROWN. An obligation that we owe, whether we pay it or not, depends on whether or not it is a just obligation. Is not that true? If the obligation is just it ought to be paid, whether we have the money to pay it now or not. If it is unjust it ought not to be paid, no matter how little it is nor how well we could afford to pay it. Is not that true?

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Yes; but there are different kinds of obligations. There is no fixed obligation in dollars and cents due to pensioners except as we recognize it by statute. I regard it as eminently proper that we should consider obligations to the soldier for his service to the country. It is not an obligation of the same character as a promise to pay a specific and definite sum.

Mr. McCUMBER. Mr. President—

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Georgia yields?

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Oh, yes.

Mr. McCUMBER. Mr. President, what does the Senator consider as the basis of obligation on the part of the Government? Does he not consider that the obligation is one growing out of gratitude for a service performed?

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Yes.

Mr. McCUMBER. The Senator will agree therefore that it is an obligation of honor and an obligation of gratitude. Would not the Senator measure that obligation in a way that would mean on the part of the Government that no man who served his country in those trying times; that no man who took a part in that great struggle for the preservation of his country; that no man who suffered hardships and the privations in that great struggle, should in his old age ever know the pangs of hunger or destitution? Would not the Senator therefore measure the quantity of money that should be expended to carry out that obligation by the requirements of the old soldiers in their later days, considering the disabilities of age and expend such an amount that none of them shall ever be forced into the poorhouse, or even into soldiers' homes, if they do not desire to go there?

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. The Senator's question involves several different propositions and is not easily answered in a few words. I will illustrate my view on the subject by reference to this particular case. A part of the question involves the privation and seriousness of the service of the old soldier. Take this case. There is no evidence of any privation at all. Here is an editor and owner of a paper in North Dakota, who was a sailor for awhile, who suffered no privation as an incident of the war, so far as this record shows. I regard the burden as resting upon the applicant for the increase of pension, and I am treating him as not entitled to any status favorable to himself than he shows. I do not mean to state it as a matter of fact, but in this case I have the right to presume that he has made the best case he can. Taking that position, he stands before the Senate with absolutely no privation that he ever had as an incident to service. He never was in a battle. He was just a sailor on a vessel. He did not fall in the class the Senator has described, so far as this record shows.

Mr. McCUMBER. Mr. President—

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Georgia yield further?

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Yes.

Mr. McCUMBER. Would the Senator limit the granting of pensions to those cases where the disability from which the soldier is suffering was incurred in the line of service?

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. No, not entirely, but where a man really has not been at the front and has not been in battle, and has done nothing but occupy a nominal position as a soldier, I do not see that he is any more entitled to recognition as a soldier than if he had not been in the Army at all.

Mr. McCUMBER. The Senator of course understands that the law of June 27, 1890, and the law of February 6, 1907, grant pensions upon a service of 90 days or more, and while one is based upon age and the other on the service of 90 days only, neither of them recognizes service disability, but grants the pension alone because of the supposed disability at least of the claimant. Now, does the Senator consider that that is an unjust basis for the granting of pensions?

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I am not compelled to go that far for the present discussion. I certainly think it goes too far when this bill proposes to take a man in that class and give him $18 more a month than the general law gives.

Mr. McCUMBER. Without reference to the division, does the Senator think we are now paying excessive pensions on the whole?

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I think we are paying perhaps not enough to some and more perhaps to some than they are entitled to.

Mr. McCUMBER. That does not quite answer the question, but possibly I am asking a question that is a little difficult to answer. I think the Senator probably could state in general terms whether he thinks $152,000,000, or about that, which we are now appropriating to pay the ex-soldiers, is more than we ought to appropriate.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Well, I do not say that. I have not opposed the Government paying them that much. I want to say to the Senator that what I have in my mind, lacking, perhaps, the details of the information I ought to have, is that a distribution should follow more the length of actual service on the battle field than is done.

Mr. McCUMBER. Mr. President, I should like to ask the Senator another question right in connection with that, because it will elucidate his idea as well as give us general information on his views. I am asking these questions from the Senator rather, perhaps, than from anyone else because he at one time occupied the position of Commissioner of Pensions.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. No; Secretary of the Interior.

Mr. McCUMBER. I mean he was Secretary of the Interior, under whom the Commissioner of Pensions serves. Is it the Senator's idea that we should grade our pensions according to the length of service of the soldier?

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I do not know that it can be entirely done in that way. I will say to you very frankly that this letter from which I read is addressed to you, and I suppose you have seen it. It is a letter published in the Quincy Journal, of Illinois, by a soldier, from which I read yesterday.

Mr. McCUMBER. My attention has never been called to such a letter.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. It is addressed to Hon. P. J. McCUMBER, chairman of the Senate Committee on Pensions, and so forth.

Mr. McCUMBER. I have never seen the letter. He evidently addressed it to me and then published it without sending it.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. From this letter and from a number of letters that I have received from men who have given years of active service, men who seem to have been in the midst of the fight in Virginia and elsewhere from the very first to the last of the war—

Mr. McCUMBER. I know that the Senator has given this matter a great deal of consideration, and I know that he experiences, like all of us do, the inability for us to arrive at any standard that will work with exact justice.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I realize that.

Mr. McCUMBER. And that is the reason why I introduced a double standard in the amendment, at least, of the bills which we have now before us. The Senator is aware that other things being equal, of course, the man who served his country the greater number of months is entitled to greater gratitude and consideration than one who served a much less number of months. On the other hand, the Senator knows, as we all do, that the real butcher work in the Civil War was during the last year, when the country demanded "On to Richmond," and when the fresh troops were rushed into the hardships of the battles of the Wilderness, many of them taking part in those battles before they had been even 30 days in the service. Taking all those matters into consideration, I think the Senator will agree with me how difficult it is to accept any standard and say that we shall measure the amount of pensions by the number of months that were served and make that a sole standard.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I do not question the fact that the men who work on these pension bills have tried to make them with the purpose of meting out justice, but as they stand to-day, if the figures furnished by this ex-soldier are in any sense approximately correct, it does seem that the very short-time man, who barely got into the struggle and perhaps never got out into a battle at all, who never suffered from a hardship at all, is in many instances receiving practically the same treatment as the soldier who stood the fight from the first.

Now, take the boys who went down to Cuba. I would rather talk about them, because there are as many of them my constituents in proportion to the population of the State as from any other State. I think the idea of classing those boys with the old soldier who went in the first of the war and fought the four years through would be utterly unreasonable. I do not mean to say that you are doing it, although I was shocked at the amount that has already been paid for pensions on account of the Spanish War.

Mr. McCUMBER. And the Senator understands that those soldiers who were called upon to fight the bolo men of the Philippine Islands are receiving far greater compensation for injuries suffered by them than the soldiers of the Civil War, who fought white men armed with guns and fought them hard, received after the close of the Civil War.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I want to say to the chairman of the committee that it will give me a great deal of pleasure to cooperate with him, as then I would be free from any embarrassment in checking the Spanish-American War pensions. I have declined to introduce special pension bills for quite a number of my friends, who thought they ought to get special pensions for the Spanish-American War, and it is not because I do not believe in showing gratitude. I just believe that there is a place where somebody ought to stand and look a little after the interests of all the people who have to contribute the money to the Treasury; and when they are my own friends I am not at all embarrassed in standing up against it.

Mr. McCUMBER. I make my statement not with any desire to check those who served their country in any war—

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I know that.

Mr. McCUMBER. From receiving just compensation for their services, if any of them were injured, but like the Senator from Georgia, I would make a mighty big distinction between those soldiers and the soldiers who fought the Civil War.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Of course, if they were actually injured in the Spanish-American War, having actually received an injury, they would stand just exactly on as good a footing as a man injured anywhere else.

Mr. SHIVELY. They do now, do they not, under the law?

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Yes; if they were injured.

Mr. SHIVELY. If actually injured, through wounds or disease, they receive precisely the same pension that the survivors of the Civil War receive for like injuries.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I do not know. I was just surprised to see that the figures already run up to over $30,000,000.

Mr. McCUMBER. The Senator understands, does he not, that the soldier who was injured in the War with Spain or in the Philippines receives as much now as the soldier receives at the present time who was wounded or injured in the Civil War, and it amounts to from 4 to 10 times as much as he received a few years after the Civil War?

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I know that immediately after the Civil War there was quite an indisposition on the part of a great many soldiers to receive any pensions at all, and there was, perhaps, no condition of the Treasury to put the country in a condition to encourage them in receiving what naturally the Government would have been glad to have paid.

Mr. McCUMBER. I think the Senator is right in both cases. There was the indisposition on the part of the soldier because he was still a young man then and able to earn a livelihood. Therefore he did not call for a pension until his waning strength required him to do so. And on the part of the Government that it was absolutely unable to pay very much in the first instance, and as it has increased in wealth and prosperity, it has attempted to fulfill its obligations.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I do not think anyone could say, as a whole, that the Government had lacked in its obligation when we think of over $4,000,000,000 paid. I myself am just impressed with the idea, although I have not here the details to go into it, that some of the men who were on the battle field so long have not received their full proportion of the $4,000,000,000.

Now, I wish to take up a little further this particular pension that I have moved to strike out and to test it by the rule that the Senator himself submits.

First. The beneficiary must exhaust all rights under the general pension laws through the regular channels of the Pension Bureau before the committee will take up a bill for his relief.

Well, the editor or newspaper man in North Dakota is receiving all that the general laws give him.

Second. In each case evidence must be filed with the bill or in the Pension Office, showing that the amount allowed under the general pension laws is not sufficient to give the beneficiary the ordinary necessities of life, and that the beneficiary has no other source of income or property which would allow him to secure those necessities independent of pension.

Now, I submit that there is no evidence in this case at all to meet that requirement.

There is no evidence as to how much this good man's paper pays him; there is no evidence as to how much he and his partner make out of it. In the ordinary course of affairs, I should say that they ought to make a couple of thousand dollars a year out of it. Certainly a paper of that size, conducted by them with, I may say, I believe the newspaper record gives it, 900 circulation, at $2 from each subscriber, that would be $1,800 outside of advertising. Then the advertising in a paper of that sort, judging by similar agricultural counties, would be nearly as much more. The work is principally done, as the Senator says, by the men themselves, and so there ought to be at least a couple of thousand dollars profit a year out of the paper.

Mr. McCUMBER. I have no doubt, Mr. President, that Mr. Wardwell would very much rather have the calculation made by the Senator than to have the bare facts as they appear on his book.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. But, Mr. President, we have not heard of any evidence on that subject; there is not any statement even by the applicant for increase of pension to sustain the Senator. We do not know all that was in the letter written by the editor and publisher. Part of the letter the Senator said was personal, and I did not press to have it read, although it had been filed with the Senate. We have not any affidavit from the claimant; we have not any proof; we have not any evidence. The rules the committee adopted declare that there must be evidence, and we have not a syllable of evidence to show any basis for any increase of pension to this, no doubt, admirable gentleman.

I would not object, perhaps, to a bill which provided for a pension to all editors who were getting old and needed a little more money; it would be very popular with the editors; but in this instance we have not the evidence that this editor needs it; we have not the evidence that he has not a comfortable support without it. The case does not measure up to the second requirement of the rules which the Senator furnishes us as the rules governing his committee.

Now, let us take the third rule:

Third. In each case medical evidence must be submitted, showing that the beneficiary is so disabled, from causes other than vicious habits, as to preclude the possibility of his earning a support by manual labor.

We have not any medical evidence at all. We have a statement by a physician, but that is not evidence. Surely to constitute evidence it should come in the shape of an affidavit. This statement does not go into details; it does not cover the case. Again:

IN THE CASE OF SOLDIERS.

In cases where the foregoing requirements have been complied with, and it has been shown that the soldier had a reasonably long and faithful service—

Now it is proposed to give him $30 a month.

Mr. McCUMBER. Mr. President—

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Georgia yield to the Senator from North Dakota?

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Certainly.

Mr. McCUMBER. I do not like to interrupt the Senator, if he does not wish to be interrupted—

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I do not object at all.

Mr. McCUMBER. But upon this case, where the Senator makes a statement that is not borne out by the facts in the case, I think he would desire that I call his attention to it.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I would be very glad to have the Senator correct it.

Mr. McCUMBER. The Senator has perhaps forgotten the statement that I made yesterday that in all these cases we first send to the Bureau of Pensions. We then receive from the Bureau of Pensions all the testimony that has been introduced in the form of affidavits, doctors' certificates, examining surgeons' statements, and so forth, in the applications for the pensions before the bureau. Therefore, when we had this case before us, we had the evidence just of the kind that the Senator is speaking of and which has been sent back to the Bureau of Pensions. I simply make this statement so as to assure the Senator that we have not abandoned that rule in this case.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. But, Mr. President—

Mr. McCUMBER. If the Senator from Georgia or any other Senator should call for the papers again that are now down in the Pension Bureau he would find considerable evidence from doctors, and so forth, as to the applicants' special ailments, their causes, and so forth, and those were considered in connection with the certificate of the doctor. The certificate which we had up to date was never filed in the Pension Bureau, but other certificates and evidence of physical condition have been filed, and those were all taken into consideration with this certificate. So the Senator will see that this is not the only evidence as to physical condition.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I understand the Senator, but yet I have not the records of the bureau. They were not left here; they must have been taken quite a while ago, at the time this pension was granted. We have a statement here showing when that was. Under the act of February 6, 1907, the pensioner draws his $12 per month; but it was found necessary to supplement it, or it is supplemented by this bill, with a naked statement, and so far as the case specially before the committee was concerned nothing was produced but the naked statement of the physician—nothing in the shape of an affidavit from this pensioner showing his necessities or what amount of money he was making.

Now I come to the fourth clause:

In cases where the foregoing requirements have been complied with, and it has been shown that the soldier had a reasonably long and faithful service—

In this case no "long and faithful service" was shown; in this case the pensioner was a sailor on board a vessel, and, so far as the record goes, never was in a battle, never in the war, but was only an ordinary sailor for three months before the war was over. Neither one of the vessels on which he served was in the second battle at Fort Fisher when the fort was captured, at least so far as the records that I can find are concerned. I looked over a list of the vessels that were in that battle, and neither one of the vessels on which he served participated in it. One or two of the vessels to which he was attached were in the first battle of Fort Fisher, in the early part of December, I think, but not the first vessel that he was on, so that he could hardly have been there.

Mr. McCUMBER. If the Senator will permit me, the Tuscarora was in the second engagement, was it not?

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. It is not contained in the list I examined this morning.

Mr. McCUMBER. I had the list and left it in my office, but I think the Tuscarora was in that engagement. I am not certain myself as to that, but Mr. Wardwell served on one of the vessels.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. The Tuscarora was in the first battle of Fort Fisher. I find it so recorded, but I do not find that it was in the last or second battle. I find, also, that another one of the vessels on which he served was in the first battle at Fort Fisher—the Mohican.

I had intended to put into the RECORD the tabulated statement of figures about the disbursement of pensions prepared by Mr. Wells, but under the suggestion of the Senator from North Dakota that it is inaccurate I do not want to put it in until I get some one to take the reports of the Pension Commissioners, go over the figures, and have them in some way verified, because I would not wish to put such startling figures into the RECORD if the Senator is confident that they are entirely erroneous. I understand, though, that the Senator—

Mr. McCUMBER. Of course I have not examined the statement of Mr. Wells. I simply took the figures cited by the Senator on yesterday, and which he took from the statement to which he refers, either reading it or else giving his conclusions, and I simply know that that is woefully wrong.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I read from the figures themselves, and if those figures are woefully inaccurate I would not wish to put the calculation in the RECORD. I have no doubt that the soldier undertook to work them out correctly, but if he has not worked them out correctly I do not want to put them in the RECORD, because I would not wish to furnish any tabulated statement of figures that would make the distribution worse than it really is. I do not wish in any sense to indicate that it is worse than it really is. I simply insist that this particular pensioner's case does not present one which justifies taking him out of the class of soldiers to which he belongs; that it does not fall within the rules laid down by the committee; and therefore I insist upon my motion to strike out.

Mr. CURTIS. Mr. President, I had not intended to make any remarks on the pending special pension bill, and would not have done so had not the distinguished Senator from Georgia [Mr. SMITH] referred to the fact that he had had experience as Secretary of the Interior and, therefore, had had some fixed ideas in reference to pension legislation, and for the further fact that he referred to a plan which he thought should be followed.

It happened to be my fortune, good or bad, to be a Member of the House of Representatives when the distinguished Senator from Georgia [Mr. SMITH] was Secretary of the Interior. I represented in part a great soldier State, and it was my pleasure to aid and assist the soldiers in the district I then had the honor to represent whenever they wrote me. Being at that time a member of only one committee of the House, because my party was then in the minority, I had a great deal of time, and went to the Pension Office nearly every day, except holidays and Sundays, and examined the cases of my constituents. Being perfectly familiar with the action and the record of the Pension Office during that four years, I, for one, can not follow the Senator from Georgia, and I hope before any of the Senators on either side of this body make up their minds to follow his recommendation they will carefully study the policy of the administration of the Pension Bureau during the four years from 1893 to 1897.

I find that the records of the bureau show that by reason of the instructions of the then Secretary, HOKE SMITH, of May 27, 1893, 8,723 soldiers and sailors who were drawing pensions under the provisions of the act of June 27, 1890, were dropped from the rolls, and that 23,703 soldiers and sailors who were in receipt of pensions under the said act had their pensions reduced.

Mr. President, that action was taken without any notice whatever to the pensioners; they were given absolutely no chance to be heard; and so I was somewhat surprised to-day when I heard the Senator [Mr. SMITH] insist so strongly upon evidence being filed, when I remembered the case of a poor old soldier in Emporia, Kans., who had his pension taken away from him on an anonymous letter, and it took me six months to get that pension restored by the bureau.

But the action of the bureau at that time was such that Congress—a majority of the House then being of the party of the distinguished Senator [Mr. SMITH]—felt that they could not stand for the action of the department, and on the 21st of December, 1893, passed the following law:

Provided, That any pension heretofore or that may hereafter be granted to any applicant therefor under any law of the United States authorizing the granting and payment of pensions, on application made and adjudicated upon, shall be deemed and held by all officers of the United States to be a vested right in the grantee to that extent that payment thereof shall not be withheld or suspended until, after due notice to the grantee of not less than 30 days, the Commissioner of Pensions, after hearing all evidence, shall decide to annul, vacate, modify, or set aside the decision upon which such pension was granted. Such notice to grantee must contain a full and true statement of any charges or allegations upon which such decision granting such pension shall be sought to be in any manner disturbed or modified.

Again, a well-known order was issued by the then Secretary of the Interior, Mr. SMITH, and by the Commissioner of Pensions, Mr. Lochren, known as "Order 225." That order contained a provision known as paragraph 4, which was of very great injustice to the soldier, because it placed the rating of his pension in the hands of a medical referee in the bureau. I want to call your attention to paragraph 4 of that order. It reads:

4. To give the claimant a pensionable status under this act the disability must be such as to incapacitate him for the performance of manual labor in such a degree as to render him unable to earn a support; yet the act recognizes differences in the degree of such pensionable disability, giving $12 per month in case of the greatest and $6 per month in case of the lowest degree of such pensionable disability rendering the claimant unable to earn a support by manual labor. It also provides for intermediate ratings proportioned to the intermediate degrees of such pensionable disability. The proper ratings under this act will therefore be made in accordance with such rules for rating as the medical referee shall prescribe, subject to the approval of the commissioner.

WM. LOCHREN, Commissioner.

Approved:

HOKE SMITH, Secretary.

The medical referee issued the following: Oh, it is an order that the people of this country should read, and then be ashamed that there was ever such an order issued; and after it was issued there was such a storm of protest over this country of ours that it had to be recalled. Listen to this:

If there are two or more disabilities each demanding a rate of $6, the rating of $8 only shall be allowed; and if there are two or more disabilities each demanding a rate of $8, the rating of $10 shall be allowed; but two or more disabilities each demanding a rating below $6 shall not be added to make a minimum rating, and such cases shall be rejected.

What is this? A man might be examined and have 20 ratings of $6 each, and under that ruling he would be entitled to $8, and I remember a case where a man was rated at forty-two-eight-hundredths and he was allowed a pension of $8 a month. An application might be rated on separate disabilities at less than six-eighths on each and he would not be entitled to a pension under that rule. No wonder there was a storm of disapproval against such a ruling as that, and it was afterwards withdrawn by the Commissioner of Pensions, but the fixing of rates was left in the hands of the medical referee or the medical officer in the board of revision. The dissatisfaction became so great that Congress passed a law, as follows:

That from and after the passage of this act all pensioners now on the rolls who are pensioned at less than $6 per month for any degree of pensionable disability shall have their pensions increased to $6 per month, and that hereafter, whenever any applicant for pension would under existing rates be entitled to less than $6 for any single disability or several combined disabilities, such pensioner shall be rated at not less than $6 per month: Provided also, That the provisions hereof shall not be held to cover any pensionable period prior to the passage of this act, nor authorize a rerating of any claims for any part of such period, nor prevent the allowance.

Senators and Members of the House who desired to help the old soldiers were able to do so by going to the Pension Office and examining the reports of the local medical board. One day the Congressmen were told that the medical reports would not be given with the papers, and that they could not be examined. I am glad to say that action only lasted for a few hours, for after some little discussion the Members were again permitted to see the reports, but the claimants or their attorneys were not permitted to examine them. This action in regard to claimants and their attorneys was not satisfactory, and Congress enacted the following law on July 18, 1894:

Provided, That the report of such examining surgeons, when filed in the Pension Office, shall be open to the examination and inspection of the claimant or his attorney, under such reasonable rules and regulations as the Secretary of the Interior may provide.

Another thing: In order, as I stated before, to prevent the use of these reports to help the old soldiers an order or an instruction of some kind was issued so that the boards, upon examining the claimants, did not report and rate each disability, and there was nothing upon which the Congressman could base an argument to the commissioner or the medical referee in behalf of the pensioner. They had to accept the finding of the medical referee, based upon the description made by the examining surgeons.

It was not strange that Congress was not satisfied with such action, and later—and after the term of the administration of Mr. Cleveland had expired—the following law was enacted:

That the report of such examining surgeons shall specifically state the rating which, in their judgment, the applicant is entitled to; and the report of such examining surgeons shall specifically and accurately set forth the physical condition of the applicant, each and every existing disability being fully and carefully described.

It seems to me that an examination of the laws enacted by Congress since 1893 shows the feeling of this body on the pension question.

Another thing. I notice that the distinguished Senator [Mr. SMITH] said he thought there should be a plan of payment and adjustment and that we should figure how much money we had for the pensioners and then rate the pensions accordingly. That is not quoting the Senator exactly, but that is the substance of what he means.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Substantially.

Mr. CURTIS. The then Secretary's position explains why, in 1894 when Congress appropriated $166,000,000 for pensions, there was disbursed by the Pension Office only $143,000,000.

In the last amendment offered by the Senator from Georgia [Mr. SMITH] provision is made for special examiners, and the cases are to be examined by them before they are acted upon. I should like in this connection to call attention to the amount of money that was spent for such examinations during the Senator's services as Secretary of the Interior. In 1893 there was appropriated for special examiners $225,000; in 1894 there was used in this division $400,000; in 1895, $450,000; in 1896, $497,000. In 1898 the appropriation was $431,000, the appropriation having been made the year before.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. I simply desire to say to the Senator from Kansas that they took that twenty-odd million dollars from the soldiers and gave it to the importers of European manufactures and merchandise. That administration had more sympathy for the importers of European products who were benefited by free trade than sympathies for the soldiers who fought the battles of the Republic.

Mr. CURTIS. In addition to the number of pensioners upon the rolls there were 50,000 attorneys practicing before the department, with from 5 to 10 witnesses in each case.

With thousands of men before whom testimony has been taken, there were only 963 indictments found in the three years of 1894, 1895, and 1896, and only 596 convictions had. The commissioner tells us that by and through the efforts of the special examining division and the law division there was recovered by the United States, in round numbers, $20,000.

This is evidence that this large expenditure of money was not justified.

I call attention to these figures for this reason: There is absolutely no use of increasing the appropriations to provide for special examiners in the field.

Now, Mr. President, I intended to make a few remarks on the general pension bill when it comes up, as I want to talk about the various features of a pension bill—the Sherwood bill and the Smoot substitute bill—but I will not to-day take up the time of the Senate in discussing those measures.

I do want, however, to say something about other matters which have caused much trouble. After pensions claims were rejected, suspended, or dismissed, and new applications were filed for restoration, Congress became convinced that the old soldiers were not having fair treatment in the department, because, when allowed, the pensions were not dated from the time of filing the first application; so Congress passed the act of March 6, 1896, which provided that when such a pension claim was allowed the pension should date from the filing of the first application, provided the evidence showed a pensionable disability to have existed at the time of the filing of such first application.

Now, the Senator objects because $4,000,000,000 has been expended for pensions. Why have we paid $4,000,000,000 to the pensioners of this country? I as one Senator believe that this great Government has no right to measure in dollars and cents the services these men rendered; and if it were 10 times the amount, the debt the Government owes to the Union soldiers would not be paid. I believe we ought to give the Union soldiers most liberal pensions. Senators talk about soldiers' homes. If we pass the Sherwood bill and give a dollar a day to the soldiers of this country who served more than a year, 90 per cent of the soldiers who are able to get around will leave the soldiers' homes. If you will pass the dollar-a-day pension bill you will largely stop the enactment of private pension bills, because, no matter what figures you take, if you pass the Sherwood bill you will place over 200,000 soldiers upon the pension roll at a dollar a day.

So I ask Senators not to waste the time of the Senate while the soldiers are passing away every hour, but do that which will enable them to leave the soldiers' homes and return to their families and live as they would like to live, and would if enabled so to do. It is very strange to me that we should stop and haggle over the appropriations to pay pensioners when bills are enacted by Congress which require an expenditure of from $5 to $300 to collect $1.

We can spend from $400,000,000 to $500,000,000 for the Panama Canal, and yet some one complains if we want to increase soldiers' pensions and appropriate $45,000,000 a year to increase the pensions of the men who made it possible for us to build the Panama Canal; to increase the pensions of men who made it possible for us to be here to-day. I ask Senators upon the other side of the Chamber to recognize the great service that was rendered by the Union soldiers in saving and preserving this Union. We who represent this great and rich Nation should not haggle over the money that is asked to be appropriated to pay the soldiers who saved this country and who have helped to make it the greatest Nation in the world.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. LODGE in the chair). The question is on agreeing to the amendment proposed by the Senator from Georgia.

Mr. McCUMBER. Before we proceed to a vote upon this amendment, as many Senators are absent and will have to be informed as to what we are voting upon, I suggest, before the vote is taken on the amendment, the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from North Dakota suggests the absence of a quorum. The Secretary will call the roll.

The Secretary called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Bacon	Crawford	Kern	Shively
Bourne	Cullom	Lodge	Smith, Ga.
Brandegee	Cummins	Lorimer	Smith, Mich.
Briggs	Curtis	McCumber	Smoot
Bristow	Dillingham	Martine, N. J.	Swanson

Bryan	Foster	Nixon	Warren
Burnham	Gallinger	Oliver	Watson
Burton	Gardner	Overman	Williams
Chilton	Guggenheim	Page
Clark, Wyo.	Johnston, Ala.	Perkins
Crane	Jones	Pomerene

Mr. FOSTER. I wish to announce that my colleague [Mr. THORNTON] is unavoidably absent.

Mr. JONES. I desire to state that my colleague [Mr. POINDEXTER] is absent on account of the sickness of his mother.

Mr. OLIVER. I wish to state that my colleague [Mr. PENROSE] is necessarily absent to-day, and he is paired.

Mr. SMOOT. I desire to announce that my colleague [Mr. SUTHERLAND] is necessarily absent.

Mr. CRAWFORD. I wish to announce that my colleague [Mr. GAMBLE] is necessarily absent, and that he has a general pair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Forty-five Senators have answered to their names—not a quorum.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I move that the Senate adjourn.

The question being put, there were on a division—ayes 10, noes 23.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were not ordered.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The motion is lost. The Senate refuses to adjourn.

Mr. BRADLEY, Mr. REED, Mr. WETMORE, and Mr. JOHNSON of Maine entered the Chamber and answered to their names.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Forty-nine Senators have answered to their names. A quorum of the Senate is present.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, I desire for one moment to engage the attention of the Senator from Georgia.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. One moment. I rise to a point of order. The two hours have elapsed.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The hour of 4 o'clock was passed while the roll was being called.

Mr. GALLINGER. There is no unfinished business, the unfinished business having been recommitted to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. There is no unfinished business.

Mr. GALLINGER. Except the present bill, which becomes unfinished business.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Except the pending bill.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Has that become unfinished business?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. It becomes the unfinished business.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, yesterday, and again today, the Senator from Georgia suggested that he thought it would be good legislation under the administration of the pension laws if we cut off all those residing in foreign countries who are receiving pensions, I think the Senator said, to the amount of about $1,000,000 a year.

Now, Mr. President, that was done on one former occasion and Congress repealed it shortly after. If I mistake not, it was done while the honorable Senator was in the high position of Secretary of the Interior. A protest came up against that action on the part of the Senate. I was then acting as chairman of the Committee on Pensions of this body. I received a very pathetic letter, a well-written letter, from an old lady living in Ireland. In that letter the statement was made that her husband was killed in the Civil War; that he enlisted in the Union Army and died on the battle field; and she could not understand why, under such circumstances, the Government of the United States refused to give her a pension or to continue her pension on the ground that she was living in a foreign country. About that time—

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Will the Senator from New Hampshire allow me to interrupt him?

Mr. GALLINGER. Certainly.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I want to say that I would be thoroughly opposed to cutting off a pension of that kind where there was a service injury.

Mr. GALLINGER. But that is precisely what Congress did. It did not differentiate.

About that time I made a little trip into Canada, where I frequently go, and in the town where I chanced to have been born I came across quite a number of ex-soldiers. One of them whom I knew in boyhood had been shot through the chest, grievously wounded. He had been on the pension roll. He did not get any bounty when he entered the service; he entered it from patriotic motives, although a citizen of a foreign country; he wanted to fight. His pension was cut off, and he represented to me that it was a great hardship. He thought it a matter the Government of the United States ought not to be engaged in. I found several others who had received wounds and had suffered disabilities, and they made their plea.

Now, we ought to be careful about what we do in these matters. Acting upon the information I obtained in those cases and others, I introduced a bill to repeal that provision of law, and it was agreed to, and those pensions were restored.

I do not know how many men served in high positions in the Army who were citizens of foreign countries, but I feel sure the records will show that some of our men who distinguished themselves very much as officers in the Union Army were citizens of foreign countries. I chance now to think of one, Emil Frey. He is living in Berne, Switzerland. He was a brevet major of an Illinois regiment and rendered distinguished service as the commander of a company, and I think at one time he commanded the regiment; I am not quite sure. He is on the pension roll. He was on the pension roll at the time of that enactment, and he was cut off for the time being.

Mr. President, I am glad to have the Senator say that he would differentiate in certainly that class of cases. If there are some people living in Canada, for instance, who came here and for a bounty enlisted and served toward the close of the war, I think I would cheerfully join with the Senator in saying that those were not cases that appealed to either our generosity or our justice in matters of that kind.

This is all I care to say. I took a great interest in the matter a few years ago, when I was confronted with these facts, which I thought ought to be given consideration; and, as I said, I was responsible in a sense, because I introduced the bill to repeal the law. We have gone along in that way, and I certainly would be opposed to a sweeping repeal of that provision of our pension laws.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Mr. President, I want to suggest to the Senator from New Hampshire that it is just possible many of the most caustic critics of the American pension system are among the men who found Canada a very convenient place of refuge when the war broke out and who did not come back until it was all over.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Mr. President, before we vote upon this subject I desire to offer a few remarks in reply to the Senator from Kansas [Mr. CURTIS]. At the time I had the honor of occupying the position of Secretary of the Interior there presided over the Pension Bureau as gallant a soldier as ever served in the Union Army. He was not simply a soldier who had enlisted for 90 days; he was not a soldier who went to the front for a bounty or to take somebody else's place; he was a colonel in the Army, and he carried the scars, the holes through him, of bullets. There was no more gallant officer upon the battle field at Gettysburg in the Union Army than the man who then presided over the Pension Office. With few exceptions the entire details of that office were under his control. I might say that the only differences he and I had were when I objected to what I thought was a little too rigid enforcement of his conception of law.

At the opening of the administration we found an order—I must speak from memory now; 16 years gone by—that practically set aside an act of Congress in the fixing of pensions. It was an order of the commissioner which practically eliminated the provisions of the statute applicable to the mode of classifying the pay of a pensioner. That question came up for consideration, and an opinion was rendered by the department following the statute. I can not now recall the name of the case in which the opinion was rendered; it has been so long ago, and I have had no occasion to think of it since. Possibly the Senator from Kansas can tell the name of the case to which I refer.

Mr. CURTIS. I think the Senator refers to what was known as the Bussey decision.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. No.

Mr. CURTIS. That is the only one I know of.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. That was not the decision rendered when I was Secretary of the Interior. The view of the law taken by the commissioner was sustained by the department, and after examination I think we found that a prior Assistant Secretary at least had rendered exactly the same opinion.

Mr. CURTIS. May I interrupt the Senator there?

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Yes.

Mr. CURTIS. I think if the Senator will examine the Bussey decision he will conclude that it did not sustain the contention. That point was raised once before, and I had occasion to look up that decision and I found it did not sustain it.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I want to say to the Senator from Kansas that I speak solely relying on my memory, 16 years after the transaction, with no opportunity to have in any way refreshed my recollection about it for many years; but that the opinion which was rendered while I was Secretary of the Interior simply followed the statute, invoked no new rule, and required the department to administer the pension system under the law as it had been written by Congress, and not under a system of the Pension Bureau which had superseded the act of Congress.

That the effect of superseding the statute had been somewhat surprising I can illustrate by a little incident that happened in connection with my personal observation. There had been promoted to the position of Assistant Commissioner of Pensions one of the men in the Pension Bureau who had shown great proficiency. After he was promoted to the position of assistant commissioner on account of his ability and capacity for work, he brought to the attention of the department that he was drawing a pension of $12 a month under a statute which only allowed this sum for total disability. I mention that simply to show that under the administration of the Pension Bureau, just before Judge Lochren took charge, the administration had drifted clear away from the law. The modification at the instance of the commissioner, a splendid ex-Union soldier, was solely in the line of bringing the bureau to a compliance with the statute; and the opinion rendered in the leading case as to the meaning of the statute to which I refer has never been reversed, so far as I know or so far as I have ever heard, by any subsequent administration of the Interior Department or the bureau itself. If the Commissioner of Pensions found it necessary to suspend a number of pensions, it was because he found that those pensions had been granted in deliberate disregard of the law and without any compliance on the part of the applicants with the proof required by the statute to show the disability of the particular pensioner.

With reference to the expenses of the department, from an examination of a list of expenditures in my hands (the whole matter had gone from my memory) I find that the expenses of subsequent years were about the same as during the time this extra work was put upon the department during the administration of Judge Lochren. I find also that the pension roll, as made up by Judge Lochren under the statute, was not increased by subsequent administrations, although he reduced the pension payments about $17,000,000 annually. So, however harsh it may have seemed to take from the pension roll men who had been put upon it, the subsequent administrations were compelled to recognize the fact that, taken as whole, the conduct of Judge Lochren in administering the Pension Bureau was in conformity with law. That there were individual instances that made cases of hardship I have no doubt is true, but that the general administration was simply an administration by that splendid man in conformity with the statute is sustained by the fact that the roll, when he retired, found no sudden increase upon its list by the next administration, which would have been the case—

Mr. CURTIS. Mr. President—

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Georgia yield to the Senator from Kansas?

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Certainly.

Mr. CURTIS. I think that can be explained by the fact that if you will examine into the record you will see that the board of review which had charge of all cases had 104,000 one year, and they found something to object to in each case so as to delay action.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I find from this report that the pension payments in 1894 were reduced to $139,986,726.17; in 1895 to $139,812,294.30; in 1898 they were $141,651,879.80; in 1900 they were $138,462,130.65; in 1901 they were $138,531,483.84; in 1903 they were $137,759,653.71; and in 1904 they were $141,093,571.49. So the rather severe attack of the Senator from Kansas was hardly just, eloquent though it was; eloquent, as it is almost easy to be upon the subject on which he spoke; eloquent, as it is almost impossible not to be under the circumstances on the subject upon which he spoke. In spite of the fact that it was directed a little harshly toward me, it was so eloquent I could not help enjoying it. It was delightful to see the enthusiasm with which he described the valor of the soldiers and criticized the honest official conduct of one of the soldiers, Judge Lochren, although, of course, that criticism was directed toward myself. I only wish, without any opportunity to obtain the details, to give these facts in partial answer to the very eloquent speech of the Senator from Kansas.

I wish to assure him that, in spite of the feeling which he manifested on the subject, I entertain none; and I am sure that the effort of Col. Lochren, one of the heroes of Gettysburg, while he was at the head of that bureau was simply to follow the law, and the subsequent records of the bureau sustains his work.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment proposed by the Senator from Georgia [Mr. SMITH].

Mr. SHIVELY. Mr. President, I ask that the amendment may be again read.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will read the amendment.

The SECRETARY. It is proposed to strike out the item at the bottom of page 21 relative to Frank A. Wardwell, in the following words:

The name of Frank A. Wardwell, late of U. S. S. Vandalia and Ohio, United States Navy, and pay him a pension at the rate of $30 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Mr. President, I do not know whether we need a quorum to proceed with this matter. I do not know but that I ought to suggest the absence of a quorum.

Mr. SHIVELY. There has been no want of a quorum disclosed. We are just about taking a vote, which may possibly develop the presence of a quorum.

Mr. GALLINGER. I move that the Senate do now adjourn.

The motion was not agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment which has been stated by the Secretary. [Putting the question.] The yeas appear to have it. The yeas have it, and the amendment is lost.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I do not want to call for the yeas and nays, but I would be glad to vote for my own amendment. I unintentionally did not vote. I was speaking to the Senator from Georgia [Mr. Bacon] at the time. I am not insisting on a call of the roll on the amendment or on the question of the presence of a quorum. I do not think the presence of a quorum would affect the vote, and for that reason I am not going to make any point on the absence of a quorum.

The amendment was rejected.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill is still as in Committee of the Whole, and open to amendment.

Mr. BRYAN. Mr. President, I offer the amendment which I send to the desk.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated. The SECRETARY. It is proposed to strike out lines 9, 10, 11, and 12, on page 16, of the bill, which read as follows:

The name of Heber Angel, late of Company M, Sixth Regiment Michigan Volunteer Cavalry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $24 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

Mr. BRYAN. I ask the Secretary to read the report of the committee on original Senate bill No. 2255, on page 37.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the Secretary will read as requested.

The Secretary read as follows:

S. 2255. Heber Angel was a private in Company M, Sixth Regiment Michigan Volunteer Cavalry. He served from February 16, 1865, to November 24, 1865, and was honorably discharged. He is a pensioner under the service act of February 6, 1907, at the rate of $20 per month. He was formerly pensioned under the act of June 27, 1890, at $12 per month. His application under the general law for chronic diarrhea and scurvy, filed November 20, 1886, was rejected June 7, 1899, because he could not furnish the necessary evidence to connect his disabilities with the military service.

Claimant is now upward of 77 years of age. The testimony on file in his case shows that he is generally broken down from rheumatism, bronchitis, disease of eyes, and other infirmities of old age, and is no longer able to perform manual labor or to do anything toward earning a support. It is also shown that he is a poor man without property or means of support other than his pension. On account of soldier's age, poverty, and inability to earn a support by his own manual labor, the committee recommend increase of pension to $24 per month.

Mr. BRYAN. Mr. President, from the reading of this report Mr. Angel served in the Civil War from February 16 to April 9, 1865. I have a report from the War Department as follows:

WAR DEPARTMENT,
THE ADJUTANT GENERAL'S OFFICE.

Heber Angel, late private, Company M, Sixth Michigan Cavalry volunteers.

The official records show that Heber Angel was enrolled February 16, 1865, at Lowell, Mich., and was mustered into service February 21, 1865, as a private of Company M, Sixth Michigan Cavalry Volunteers, to serve one year. It appears that he served faithfully until November 24, 1865, when he was mustered out and honorably discharged from service with the company as a private.

Nothing has been found of record to show that he was under treatment in hospital at any time within the period of his service.

Official statement furnished to Hon. HOKE SMITH, United States Senate, March 4, 1912.

By authority of the Secretary of War:

E. F. LADD, Adjutant-General.

From February 21, when he was mustered in, to April 9, 1865, when Lee surrendered, was 47 days. The report shows that he has drawn a pension under the act of June 27, 1890, at $12 per month until the act of 1907 became effective, when he took advantage of the provisions of that act. Therefore he drew pensions for sixteen and a half years at $144 a year, making $2,376; then for three years at $180 a year, making $540; then for two years at $240 a year, making 480; a total of $3,396 for 47 days' service, or an average of $72.25 a day.

The report further shows that in 1886 he made application for an increase of pension for an injury due to service, and that upon examination by the bureau his application was rejected. The report which I have read from the War Department also shows that he has been unable to show any injury due to that service; yet, Mr. President, we are now asked to single out this man from the great body of the soldiers and to increase his pension to $24 per month, when he has already received $3,396 for his six weeks' service with no injury at all.

It is not my purpose, Mr. President, to undertake to delay a vote upon these private pension bills. I call the attention of the Senate in this way to this case, so as to justify myself in placing in a few words before the Senate what we are trying to do and what we have been doing in private pension legislation. On the subject of general pension legislation I undertook to make myself understood some time ago. I base the right of a man to receive a pension not in a scrimmage between age and length of service, not on the question of whether he was 90 days in the war or whether he served three years, but I base it upon the question of whether or not, because of his patriotism to his country, he suffered injuries by reason of that service and is now in need of aid from that Government which he helped to save. On no other basis, in my judgment, can you justly deal with the great body of survivors of the Union Army.

Until 1890 you tried the plan of giving pensions to those who suffered disability, and not until then did this Government branch out into the plan of undertaking to pay men in the cold dollars of a pension roll for services to their country in time of war; but from 1890, when you undertook to grant pensions because of inability to earn a living by manual labor, although not due to service, until that act of 1907 you required only 90 days of service, and then gauged the amount received by age, there has been constant and continuous dissatisfaction with the policy of pension legislation.

I understand from the discussion that, so far, has taken place here that the Spanish-American War veteran does not seem to have many friends. I was interested in the question propounded by the chairman of the committee to the Senator from Georgia [Mr. SMITH], in which he stated that this Government was more liberal to the survivors of that conflict than to those of the Civil War; but, as I understand, the survivors of the War with Spain base their right to a pension upon disability due to service, and that the same act of the same Congress is there to be taken advantage of by the survivors of the Civil War.

Mr. McCUMBER. Mr. President—

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Florida yield to the Senator from North Dakota?

Mr. BRYAN. Certainly.

Mr. McCUMBER. Mr. President, lest the Senator himself may have obtained the wrong idea of what the statement was, I will repeat it. The statement was that the soldiers who obtained pensions immediately after the close of the Civil War for a degree of injury incurred in that war received only a small percentage of what the soldier of the Spanish War receives for like services after the close of the Spanish War. We were speaking at that time of the amounts that were paid for injuries incurred in the line of service, and while the soldier of the Civil War to-day is receiving just as much, he is receiving, when he is a very old man, what the Spanish War veteran is receiving for light wounds or injuries while he is a comparatively young man.

Mr. BRYAN. Well, the Spanish War soldier has not got old enough yet.

Mr. McCUMBER. In that respect certainly the Spanish-American soldier is receiving a great deal more in the line of benefit for his services than was the soldier of the Civil War at exactly the same length of time after the close of the war in which each was engaged.

Mr. BRYAN. I do not know how that may be. I have only to say a word for the Spanish-American veteran. I think it is just as bad to be killed with a bolo as with a bullet.

Mr. McCUMBER. I will give the Senator from Florida just one illustration, if the Senator will allow me.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Florida yield further?

Mr. BRYAN. I do.

Mr. McCUMBER. At the close of the Civil War the soldier who had lost an arm was allowed $8 per month; at the present time he is allowed $55 a month; and at the present time the soldier who lost an arm in the Spanish-American War is entitled to $55 a month, as against the $8 a month that the soldier of the Civil War received after the close of the war in which he was engaged.

Mr. BRYAN. Mr. President, the Senator from North Dakota ought not to object if a veteran of the War with Spain takes advantage of the liberal legislation enacted for the benefit of survivors of the Civil War. Under the general law as applied to either one of them they can draw more than they can under the act of 1890 or under the McCumber Act of 1907.

Mr. McCUMBER. The Senator says that I can not object. I certainly do not object; but I call attention to the fact that the soldier of the Civil War did not receive nearly as kind treatment at his age as does the soldier of the Spanish-American War.

Mr. BRYAN. That is only because he happened to come along at a fortunate time in his country's history in so far as pension legislation is concerned.

Now, under neither of the general pension bills before the Senate or that will be brought before the Senate will the question of need for pensions be presented. The report of the committee condemns basing a pension upon meritorious service and need as wrong in principle. They say that to take from a person his pension because he does not need it is to penalize thrift. It is no more so, in my judgment, Mr. President, than the fact that in the respective counties where we live not all of us are on the poor list. It is inevitable that people who, because of their fault or because of misfortune, have not earned enough of the world's goods to support themselves, whether they are survivors of the war or whether they are good citizens or bad citizens, have to be supported at public expense out of the taxes of the people; but when we come to private-pension legislation it is seen in every report that the basis for it is the need of the applicant. Why, then, does the committee shift its position? If it is reprehensible to urge need as a general proposition when general pension legislation is being considered, why is it urged in each report as being one of the basic questions upon which the Senate is asked to vote special legislation?

Mr. President, in the short time I have served upon the Committee on Pensions I have been impressed with the impossibility of giving fair consideration and just consideration to this class of legislation. More than 75 per cent of the bills introduced into the Senate of the United States are private pension bills. They go to a committee of 14 members. The committee assembles around the table, the clerk of the committee, as stated by the chairman of the committee on yesterday, having written the report in each case. The number of cases is divided among the 14 Senators, and each Senator looks through those submitted to him, or is supposed to do so. If he has no objection they come here in the form of an omnibus bill. Therefore, Mr. President, unless objection is made, only one Senator of the United States and the clerk of the committee have had anything to say about that bill. It then comes to be passed by the Senate without consideration, because it is impossible to give each bill consideration. From the time the bill is introduced here until the Vice President and Secretary have, by a shorthand form, announced its passage, including the time when it is in the committee and referred to a Senator from the State where the claimant lives or from an adjoining State, if possible, no man except those one or two men knows anything about the case; yet it is supposed to be reprehensible, Mr. President, to stand here and call attention to these matters.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Mr. President—

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Florida yield to the Senator from Michigan?

Mr. BRYAN. Certainly.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. I should like to suggest to the Senator from Florida that there was not that much formality in the enlistment of men for the war.

Mr. BRYAN. I hope, Mr. President, that the Senator from Michigan does not undertake by the illustration he has given to say that the method I have described is the proper method of enacting legislation.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. It has been in vogue for a great many years, Mr. President; it has been in vogue when the Democratic Party were in possession of both branches of the Government, as well as when the Republican Party have been in control. There never has been any difference.

Mr. BRYAN. The Senator from Michigan may be responsible for the Republican Party, but I have had very little responsibility so far for the Democratic Party. Regardless, however, of party or who did it, I say it is not possible under that system to have well-considered legislation.

We come, then, to consider this case of a man who served 47 days and who has received $3,400. Under the rules of the committee, as I understand, he must have had long service to entitle him to an increase by special act of Congress. But it is said he is 77 years of age. Well, Mr. President, there are other soldiers 77 years of age, and it is unfair to them to increase the pension of this man. If you want to put it on a basis of dollars and cents, they ought all to receive the same for like service. This man receives $20 a month now, and he has received $12 a month for the last 22 years, and it occurs to me that that is pretty fair compensation for 47 days' service.

The point I make with reference to the work done in the Committee on Pensions is this: I do not undertake to say that anybody should be criticized or blamed. It is the system, the undertaking to make exceptions, that is at fault. I believe we ought to do one of two things: We ought to enact satisfactory general-pension legislation and never enact a private-pension bill, or we ought to enact the rules of the Pension Committee, send them down to the Commissioner of Pensions, and let him administer the details of the method of paying out pensions. No man, I take it, would stand in his place here and undertake to say that we have given or can give intelligent consideration to these bills. If the chairman of the committee had realized that he was taking one man 77 years of age out of a list of about 1,500 and elevating him above the others in pay, notwithstanding the fact that some of that other 1,500 may have served four years during the war and this man had the long-standing service of only 47 days—I do not think it would have appealed to the well-established sense of justice of the Senator from North Dakota.

Mr. President, of course a man 77 years of age is unable to do manual labor; that goes without saying; but it is no more true of a man who served 47 days in the war than it is of a man who never went to the war, but is of that age. A case of poverty, of destitution, of old age appeals to the kindly feelings of us all, but where is the difference in the case of this man and that of any other man in like circumstances and conditions?

Sometimes I think, Mr. President, in considering this class of legislation, that it would not be out of place also to remember the great army that never went to war—the great industrial army. It has some deserters and some shirkers in it, but, on the whole, the members of that army have worked their way through life until some of them are 77 years of age. They are not asking anything at the hands of the Government except a fair chance and that the power of taxation be not used against them for the benefit of some who do not need that aid.

I do not agree with much that was said by the Senator from Georgia as to the proper basis of pension legislation. I do not think we ought to take so many million dollars and divide that among those we consider entitled to it, but I do believe that we ought to establish the principle that a soldier who rendered meritorious service to his country and suffered by reason of that service should receive compensation, and that those who rendered no service or whose service, as in this case, was so short as to be inconsiderable, should be pensioned, if at all, in the first place, under the general law, and certainly should not be taken and placed above those of long service in the amount of pension received.

There is a feeling of dissatisfaction among the soldiers. I suppose the chairman of the committee, who was in the Chamber when I delivered some remarks upon the subject of pension legislation some time ago, might be of the opinion that I would find very little sympathy with the survivors of the Union Army; yet, Mr. President, I have had many letters from them, and, if I can find it, I want to read just one.

Mr. SHIVELY. What is the Senator proposing to establish by reading the letter—that he is in sympathy with the survivors of the Civil War?

Mr. BRYAN. If the Senator from Indiana will be patient the letter, if I can find it, will disclose to him the purpose.

Mr. SHIVELY. I thought the Senator might announce his purpose in desiring to read it.

Mr. BRYAN. It was from a member of the John A. Logan Chapter, at some place in New York, indorsing the proposition I had before the committee to make the pension roll public, and stating that the real soldiers in that war wanted it made public. They are placed now in an unfair position. They are forced by this legislation to make common cause with men of very nominal service. They do not like that; and I do not believe the Senator from Indiana down in his heart of hearts likes it or blames them for not liking it.

Mr. SHIVELY. If the Senator from Florida will permit me, he may not, but the Senator from Indiana is not going to take an extremely remote exceptional case and try to impress the Senate or the country that it is a typical case.

Mr. BRYAN. I have not said this case was typical. I moved to strike it out because I do not believe it can be defended by any Senator.

Mr. SHIVELY. The Senator just a few moments ago referred to the great industrial army, some of whose members are growing old and becoming infirm, but who are not asking for anything. What are we to infer from that—that we should not grant pensions at all?

Mr. BRYAN. What I had in mind was that this man, because of his 47 days' service for which he received $3,400, had not placed himself so far superior to those men as to justify us in granting him by private bill an additional pension.

Mr. SHIVELY. Does the Senator claim that the facts are incorrectly reported in the report submitted to the Senate?

Mr. BRYAN. I have not claimed that.

Mr. SHIVELY. How does he shorten that service report into 47 days' service?

Mr. BRYAN. In the Civil War, I said. He served from February 21 to November 24, 1865; but I said in the beginning the surrender at Appomattox was on April 9, 1865.

Mr. OVERMAN. How did he get $3,400 for serving 47 days?

Mr. BRYAN. He applied for pension under the disability clause of the general law, but having incurred no disability, he could not get a pension—

Mr. McCUMBER. Mr. President—

Mr. BRYAN. Now, just let me answer one at a time, if you please. Then, in 1890, being unable to perform manual labor, he got $12 a month under the act of June 27, 1890.

Mr. McCUMBER. Could he get $12 a month without having served 90 days?

Mr. SHIVELY. Certainly not.

Mr. BRYAN. Certainly not.

Mr. McCUMBER. Then he must have served more than 47 days.

Mr. BRYAN. Oh, no; I do not think so, because—

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. He could serve 90 days—

Mr. BRYAN. Wait a minute, if you please. If he had enlisted near the close of the war and served for a year afterwards he would draw a pension; for the Senator from North Dakota knows that while, as a matter of fact, the war was over on April 9, 1865, officially it was not declared over until August 20, 1866, and a man who had enlisted prior to the surrender of Lee at Appomattox and served until 1866 will be counted as if he had served in the war a year.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. Mr. President—

Mr. McCUMBER. But the Senator must understand that the Supreme Court held that the war was not over until August, 1866.

Mr. BRYAN. Certainly.

Mr. McCUMBER. Several dates have been used by the department, but when we pass a law which declares that the soldier must have served 90 days in the Civil War we must find and recognize before he is allowed a pension the length of his service after his enlistment and during the continuance of the Civil War of at least 90 days.

Mr. BRYAN. Does not the Senator agree with me that it was impossible for Mr. Angel to have enlisted on February 21 and served 90 days in actual warfare in the Civil War?

Mr. McCUMBER. I say it depends upon where his regiment was sent. Our good Texas friends kept us busy for nearly a year later before that State was entirely subdued.

Mr. BRYAN. But you ask me how he could get a pension at all. His service commenced in February, 1865. The only way I know would be for him to have served after the close of the war.

Mr. McCUMBER. Under no decision has it ever been regarded as terminating on April 9, the date of the surrender at Appomattox.

Mr. BRYAN. Certainly. The war was officially declared to have closed in 1866.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. Mr. President—

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Florida yield to the Senator from Wyoming?

Mr. BRYAN. It is impossible for me to yield to more than one Senator at a time.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair entirely agrees with the Senator from Florida.

Mr. McCUMBER. I also call the Senator's attention to another matter. I think we are wasting a great deal of time.

Mr. BRYAN. If the Senator will withdraw that I will—

Mr. McCUMBER. There is a difference of only $4 a month, and that $4 a month is due to the fact, first, that he served at least more than 90 days and that he is in a destitute condition and is over 77 years of age.

Mr. BRYAN. Before the chairman of the committee takes his seat I should like to state that it is not said here that he was in a destitute condition. The statement here is that "he is a poor man without property or means of support other than his pension."

Mr. SHIVELY. What more would be necessary to constitute destitution than those conditions?

Mr. BRYAN. The Senator from Florida is a poor man, but not destitute exactly.

Mr. SHIVELY. The Senator has means of support. This man is without means of support other than his pension.

Mr. BRYAN. That brings to my mind this question—

Mr. McCUMBER. I hope the Senator will complete the reading of the report, because, if he will follow it a line further, he will find that it is found as a substantiated fact that "he is a poor man without property or means of support other than his pension."

Mr. BRYAN. I read that.

Mr. McCUMBER. If that is not destitution, I do not know what is.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Mr. President—

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Florida yield to the Senator from Michigan?

Mr. BRYAN. In a moment. I want to answer the Senator from Indiana, and then I will yield first to the Senator from Wyoming [Mr. CLARK].

Unquestionably a man 77 years of age is unable to perform manual labor. It is stated here that he is a poor man. It is not stated that he has no relatives—sons or daughters—who are not fully capable—

Mr. SHIVELY. Or neighbors.

Mr. BRYAN. I do not say neighbors; I will make my own remarks. It is not stated he has no relatives, sons and daughters, who are not capable of supporting him. Any man 77 years old may be unable to support himself and be without the means of support in his own name. Yet if he is a genuine survivor of the Civil War it seems to me there would be enough patriotism in those of this generation to see that he would not suffer for support.

Mr. SHIVELY. The real practical test the Senator would apply in such a case is whether a man either is in the poor-house or just going into it.

Mr. BRYAN. There is no disposition on my part to evade the proposition submitted by the Senator from Indiana. I said he stands no better or worse than any other man of his age who is in poverty.

Mr. SHIVELY. No worse than any other man in the same condition, the Senator means.

Mr. BRYAN. I mean that.

Mr. SHIVELY. I agree to that proposition.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Mr. President—

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Florida yield to the Senator from Michigan?

Mr. BRYAN. I yield first to the Senator from Wyoming.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. The occasion for my interruption has really passed. I wanted to call the attention of the Senator from Florida to another thing. The services of the soldiers did not terminate with the surrender at Appomattox. At the time of that surrender the soldiers of the United States were engaged in various parts of the country in a far more grueling conflict than that between the North and the South, to wit, on our borders, and those soldiers should receive their reward as well as those who were in the regiments in the conflict between the North and the South. It might well be that a soldier whose term of enlistment did not expire, as it says here, until he was mustered out in August, 1866, was engaged in deadly action during the entire six months following the surrender at Appomattox.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Mr. President—

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Florida yield to the Senator from Michigan?

Mr. BRYAN. I will yield to the Senator in a moment. I do not say the war ended officially in 1865. I know it technically continued until August, 1866, and I know that the soldiers who served during that period were technical soldiers.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. But the Senator from Florida has a number of times assumed, in making his calculation of 47 days, that the soldier's services terminated at the surrender at Appomattox.

Mr. BRYAN. How else could he get a pension under the general law?

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. He was a soldier in the Civil War, and he is entitled to have counted his service until he was mustered out of the service of the United States.

Mr. BRYAN. But, if the Senator will permit me, I will make this suggestion to him: There is a difference in our legislation between a survivor of the Civil War in his pension and under the general law which the regular establishment has cared for.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. But the Senator would not contend for a moment that a soldier who enlisted between 1861 and 1864, and was ordered to the Northwest to engage in Indian warfare, and who was disabled in that warfare, was not entitled to a pension as a Civil War soldier?

Mr. BRYAN. Certainly not; and if this man had been injured in the war I would not say a word about it, but the fact is he is unable to show any injury as the result of his service.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. The Senator from Wyoming says that the reason for his interruption has passed, but the reason for mine has not passed.

Mr. BRYAN. Therefore I yield.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. While the distinguished Senator from Florida is exercising his talent to consign this veteran soldier to the poorhouse, I would have him know that he was a member of the gallant Michigan cavalry brigade which participated in nearly a hundred battles, and that he himself was with the brigade when it formed part of the force with which Gen. Sheridan made his movement against Gen. Early's army on the rebel communications in the direction of Gordonsville and Richmond, later meeting the rebel cavalry of Gen. Rosser, then to Lynchville, Five Forks, and Sailors Creek, and at the Battle of Appomattox—one of the most crucial and important in the history of the War of the Union—and even though he was not so unfortunate as to be picked out by some southern sharpshooter, his breast was still exposed to the enemy, and for that service, if he had no other claims, he is entitled to the patriotic and generous consideration of the Government he helped to save.

The Michigan cavalry brigade, commanded by Sheridan and Custer and Alger and Kidd, brought more glory to American arms than all the soldiers that ever enlisted from the State of Florida. Yet here stands the distinguished Senator in this august assembly and underrates the services of this poor soldier to his Government.

He did not dodge his duty; and if he had not enlisted in the war until the night before any great battle, or even of Appomattox, he would still have rendered a service sufficiently conspicuous to entitle him to this meager allowance at the hands of his countrymen.

There was no more brilliant service in the War of the Rebellion than that contributed by the Michigan Cavalry Brigade from Bull Run to Appomattox, and while this is not my bill, I rise to remind the Senator from Florida, who was not born until after the war, that he had better read the history of the Sixth Michigan Cavalry and familiarize himself with the stoical heroism of that gallant band who never lost a gun nor a flag. After the honored Senator has studied that history, perhaps he can find it in his heart to recognize this old man who perhaps was fortunate in not being wounded and unfortunate in not being killed in battles which shed luster upon American arms and testify in words of living light his deep devotion to his country in its hour of greatest need.

Mr. President, I think it most ungenerous for anyone to suggest in this Chamber that there should be denied a pension to a man who was a member of a brigade so gallant and heroic, whose heroism can not be doubted, and whose poverty and sickness call loudly for relief. He could have remained away from the service, as millions of others did, but his services were needed, and when he entered the South boasted that the war had only begun. He did not know how long it would last or the privations he would be called upon to endure in camp or prison; he thought not of the long marches or the bloody battles; he simply acted the part of a man and a patriot, and I am sure upon reflection the honored Senator from Florida will accord him his just meed of praise for the humble part he played in the world's greatest drama enacted among the forests and fields and mountains of his unfortunate yet beautiful Southland; to be sure he entered the onslaught, but the heroic service rendered never can be compensated for in dollars and cents.

Mr. BRYAN. Mr. President, there was so much in the athletic style of gymnastic eloquence connected with the question of the Senator from Michigan that I missed it. I understood that Appomattox was not one of the great battle fields. It was the place where the surrender took place.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. The Senator has not read history aright. That is where the Confederacy made its last stand and marshaled its greatest generals—Lee, Longstreet, and Gordon.

Mr. BRYAN. There was no fight at Appomattox.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. No fight?

Mr. BRYAN. Not as much fight as the Senator is making now.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. There was no fight by the Senator from Florida; that is very evident; but both armies stubbornly contested for supremacy, the Confederates protecting the supplies of their army, and after the gallant Custer had captured the Lynchburg Pike and with his dauntless cavalry destroyed trainload after trainload of supplies, cutting off Richmond, while Cavalry and Infantry were constantly in action, the white flag of Lee was seen through the smoke of battle and the unconquerable Custer sent his chief of staff, Gen. Whitaker, inside the rebel lines; but firing did not cease until the surrender was unconditional.

Mr. BRYAN. I am perfectly willing to yield to any question of the Senator from Michigan, but really he ought not to take advantage of my youth and inexperience.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. I do not find fault with the time the Senator from Florida arrived. He arrived as quickly as he could.

Mr. BRYAN. However late I arrived, I had about as much service in the Civil War as did the Senator from Michigan.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. I was not born until the guns resounded in the South, but I have read history, and I am familiar with the gallantry of the Michigan brigade in which this soldier served, and I shall never permit any member of it to be stigmatized in my hearing without my resenting it.

Mr. BRYAN. Mr. President, of course the Senator from Michigan can say that I have stigmatized Mr. Heber Angel, but he can not point to a single word I have said criticizing him. I have simply stated the facts as disclosed by this report—that he did enlist in the Cavalry February 16, 1865. The Senator from Michigan even supplies the point that he enlisted rather late in the war, and at that time was 30 years of age. I know nothing of Mr. Angel, or, at least, I did not know anything of him until I heard the questions propounded by the Senator from Michigan, in which he stated, by way of preliminary, several things about the service of Mr. Angel in the great battle of Appomattox. I would hardly undertake to dispute a question of history with him, but he is the first historian I have heard make the statement that between the enlistment of Mr. Angel in February, 1865, and the surrender of the Confederate forces at Appomattox in April, 1865, there were 100 battles fought, and that Mr. Angel had been in those hundred battles. If he was in those 100 battles—

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Mr. President—

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Florida yield to the Senator from Michigan?

Mr. BRYAN. Yes.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Did the Senator from Florida say that I said there were 100 battles after the enlistment of this man?

Mr. BRYAN. I said that the Senator from Michigan—

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. The Senator should not say that. I said that the Michigan Cavalry Brigade had fought in a hundred battles.

Mr. BRYAN. Was Angel in any of them?

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Yes; several of them.

Mr. BRYAN. Was this man in the 100 battles?

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Oh, Mr. President, the Senator grows facetious.

Mr. BRYAN. What have the 100 battles that this regiment engaged in to do with this man's service?

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. They have something to do with the military history of our country and the prowess of his comrades.

Mr. BRYAN. I supposed the Senator from Michigan was asking me a question.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. The Senator is captious. He seeks to avoid the fact that he is undertaking to create the impression in this Chamber that this private soldier was in no battle at all; and I remind him that he was in several battles, and can give the Senator others if he desires.

Mr. BRYAN. I would be glad to have them.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. I will do that in my own time.

Mr. BRYAN. I would be glad to have the list of battles and to have the Senator give them now.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. I think he was at Five Forks, Waynesboro, Sailors Creek, and Appomattox, and you would hesitate to assail this man's military record if you knew how faithful he was as a soldier. You have not taken the trouble to examine. The truth is you have relied upon this fragmentary report and hypothecated a situation that does not exist at all.

Mr. BRYAN. I have hypothecated no situation at all.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. You have undertaken to take away from this man any credit due him as a soldier.

Mr. BRYAN. I have—

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. I think the Senator upon reflection will accord this soldier his rightful due.

Mr. BRYAN. I have no doubt that the enlistment of Mr. Angel determined the whole contest.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. He certainly did—

Mr. BRYAN. If the Senator from Michigan will state upon his responsibility that the surrender at Appomattox was due to the enlistment of Mr. Angel, I will withdraw the amendment I have offered.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Just say "in part," and I will agree to it. The surrender at Appomattox was due in part to this soldier and to every other soldier who imperiled his life for the Union.

Mr. BRYAN. I thought the broad, general statement of the Senator from Michigan needed qualification.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. The statement of the Senator from Florida needs some—

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Florida has the floor.

Mr. BRYAN. Whatever may be my merits or demerits, I have only undertaken in a polite, gentlemanly manner to criticize this bill in this particular. Although Mr. Angel by his enlistment in this Cavalry regiment of Michigan Volunteers was the determining factor in that great war, and enlisted from the State of the Senator from Michigan, and although there were none, as the Senator very shrewdly points out, from the State which I have the honor in part to represent fighting upon that side in that war, yet I have conceived that even being from Florida, Mr. President, and not having served in the Union Army, as did Mr. Angel, and perhaps the distinguished Senator from Michigan himself, I have a right to express my convictions upon this or any other question coming before the Senate of the United States.

There is in my nature not the slightest disposition to be even overcritical of the pension roll because of the fact that I happen to come from a Southern State. But being on the Committee on Pensions, not believing it was the best way to try to consider over 3,000 pension bills—I would see only my share of bills and know nothing about the others—and because there I undertook to explain my position and thought it was misunderstood, I came from the committee room of the Committee on Pensions, and as soon as I could get recognition from the Chair announced that I should speak upon pension legislation.

I do not think I showed any disposition then to fight pension legislation of the kind in which I believe, of the kind in which the leaders of the Union Army believe and have expressed themselves before the Committee on Pensions. They have no patience with the idea of placing the hundred-day men on a parity with the long-term soldiers. But yet a former Congressman, representing the Grand Army of the Republic, had to make this humiliating statement before the committee because it is the truth:

Of course, I think you will all concede, gentlemen, that No. 13 is a little better holdout than No. 11. Of course, I should favor that myself.

Then he proceeds:

There were over 600,000, as I recall—I could refer to it specifically if necessary—that served three months or less—90-day militia. * * * I say to you what I know to be a fact. While many of these men fought, and fought well, the great body of them simply went to man the forts, to release the three-year men that went to the front and did the shooting. That is a fact, gentlemen. Lots of these men never got the polish off their shoes. It is no disparagement to them. They did all they were called upon to do. They wore paper collars and ate soft bread. It was no fault of theirs. Ohio had how many regiments of that kind, Col. McElroy, that never lost a man?

Mr. McELROY. Oh, quite a number of them never saw any fighting and never heard a cannon.

Mr. GARDNER. Many of them never fired a gun. I say to you, gentlemen—and I am willing to defend this proposition before any Grand Army gathering in the country—that the man who went to war and served only 90 days and received no permanent disability from wounds or anything resulting from his service is not entitled to rank with the man who served two, three, or four years at the front.

Mr. Gardner, as I understand, was past commander of the Grand Army of the Republic. I understand that he was an officer in the Union Army from the State of Michigan. The Senator from Michigan has no quarrel with me. Let him quarrel with his own former Congressman, a general in the Union Army, a man afterwards elected to the head of the Grand Army of the Republic, who says it is unfair to take these 90-day men or a 47-day man and put them or him on a parity—much less above—the men who served three or four years.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Florida. [Putting the question.] The yeas appear to have it.

Mr. BRYAN. I ask for the yeas and nays.

Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey. Mr. President, what is the proposition?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will state the amendment.

The SECRETARY. On page 16 it is proposed to strike out all of lines 9, 10, 11, and 12, which read as follows:

The name of Heber Angel, late of Company M, Sixth Regiment Michigan Volunteer Cavalry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $24 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Florida asks for the yeas and nays on agreeing to his amendment.

The yeas and nays were not ordered.

The amendment was rejected.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill is as in Committee of the Whole and open to amendment.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. There is an amendment which has not been considered, which I have offered to the entire bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator now moves that amendment?

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I move that amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will state the amendment.

The SECRETARY. It is proposed to add, at the end of the bill, the following proviso:

Provided, however, That no one of the said special pensions contained in this bill shall be paid to any one of the parties herein named until the Pension Bureau has made investigation and found the said party to whom the same is to be paid did not enter the service in consideration of a bounty or for a payment made to him to serve as a substitute; and

Provided further, That no one of the said pensions shall be paid until the examination has been made in the Pension Bureau and it has been found that said party has actually served in the Army or the Navy and was engaged in some battle in connection with said service.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment proposed by the Senator from Georgia.

Mr. SHIVELY. Mr. President, if I recall aright, since this bill was reported to the Senate and while it has been pending on the calendar, five of the old soldiers named in it have passed away. Now it is proposed to remit all the cases reported in the bill to the Bureau of Pensions for a special investigation of each case. We might about as well lay the bill on the table as to adopt this amendment. Before such new investigation would be completed the majority of these men will have bidden good night to this world.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Indiana moves to lay the amendment on the table?

Mr. SHIVELY. I do not. I am willing to have a vote taken on the amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment proposed by the Senator from Georgia [Mr. SMITH].

The amendment was rejected.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Mr. President, I have a number of additional amendments that I contemplated submitting, but I am not prepared to say that any of them would appeal to the Senate more than those that have already been submitted, and I am not impressed with the idea that the Senate is impressed with the value of the amendments.

I have stated all along to the Senator from North Dakota that I do not propose to press this fight further than sufficiently far to present the views I have on the subject and the line of thought that is in my mind. That has been pretty well accomplished, and I do not think it worth while to press them, in view of the attitude of the Senate. It seems that only the absent are in favor of the amendments that I have offered; evidently the present are not, and I will not offer any more amendments to strike out particular names, not because I have not prepared them, but, as those that have been presented did not appeal to the Senate, I do not wish to take up the time of the Senate this evening to present the others.

Mr. SHIVELY. Mr. President, as illustrating the tendency toward economy involved in this afternoon's debate on this question, let me observe that the amendment, if adopted, would have saved the United States Government $144 a year.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Mr. President, I want to reply to that.

Mr. McCUMBER. The Senator is mistaken. It would simply save to the Government $48 a year.

Mr. SHIVELY. Is not this a case in which the increase is from $12 to $24?

Mr. McCUMBER. No; the applicant is now receiving $20 a month under the law of 1907, and this allows him $24 a month, so that the difference is only $4 a month.

Mr. SHIVELY. Of course, Mr. President, it can be said that this consideration does not go to the principle involved in special pension bills. I freely admit this contention. On the other hand, those cases have been given a larger measure of examination and scrutiny than has been accorded to them in the discussion this afternoon. The committee avail themselves of all the evidence in each case on file in the Bureau of Pensions, of the history of the soldier's service as disclosed by the records in the War Department, of all additional evidence submitted to the Senate and referred to the committee, and of all additional facts transmitted directly to the committee. True, every member of the committee can not personally scrutinize each item of evidence in each case, nor can the Commissioner of Pensions do so in the cases adjudicated in the Bureau of Pensions. Expert judges of evidence assist in both places. While now and then may appear a case wherein the rate seems excessive, it will usually be found on closer examination that exceptional circumstances in the case justify the rate and that as rigid a rule of care and justice is observed and enforced by the committees of Congress as obtains in the adjudication of cases in the Bureau of Pensions itself.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Mr. President, I feel that the criticism of the Senator from Indiana is hardly just. I know he would not intentionally be unjust, but it would be scarcely fair to put us in the attitude of having consumed the time to-day solely with reference to these particular objections. We presented these objections, and found the sentiment of the Senate against them. I do not present the others, and go on with the balance of the bill, taking up many of these claims one by one, because, having measured the sentiment of the Senate, I can expect only adverse action, and I think it would not be proper for me to consume time uselessly. I cease further resistance to the bill, because I feel that the action of the Senate from the vote it has passed amounts to an indication of the view of the Senate on the other amendments that we would have presented. I had quite a large number of them that I had thought to bring to the attention of the Senate. I wish to disclaim the attitude which I would be put in if it was supposed that the time was taken up solely with reference to these two cases.

I cease further resistance, because the Senate has indicated its disagreement with the view I would otherwise continue to urge—

Mr. SHIVELY. Mr. President, it is but justice to the Senator from Georgia to say that I understood that these cases were being pressed simply as typical.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. That was all.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. If no further amendment be proposed, the bill will be reported to the Senate.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

SERVICE PENSIONS.

Mr. McCUMBER. I think it is about time to adjourn to-day, and I do not desire to bring up the next pension bill on the calendar, but I do desire to make the general pension bill the unfinished business. For that purpose I will move that the bill be now taken up, and then I will allow the matter to go over until next Monday. So, Mr. President, with that in view, I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the bill (H. R. 1) granting a service pension to certain defined veterans of the Civil War and the War with Mexico.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I make the point of no quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Georgia makes the point of no quorum. The Secretary will call the roll.

The Secretary called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Bourne	Crawford	Kern	Pomerene
Bradley	Cullom	Lodge	Shively
Brandeggee	Cummins	Lorimer	Smith, Ga.
Briggs	Curtis	McCumber	Smoot
Bristow	Dillingham	McLean	Swanson
Brown	Fletcher	Martine, N. J.	Warren
Burnham	Gallinger	Myers	Watson
Burton	Gardner	Oliver	Wetmore
Chilton	Hitchcock	Overman
Clark, Wyo.	Johnson, Me.	Page
Crane	Jones	Perkins

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Forty-one Senators have answered to their names. A quorum is not present.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I move that the Senate adjourn.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Georgia moves that the Senate do now adjourn. [Putting the question.] The yeas appear to have it. The yeas have it, and the Senate declines to adjourn.

Mr. OVERMAN. I appeal to the Senator from North Dakota to let this matter go over, and not to undertake to send for absent Senators.

Mr. McCUMBER. I think probably we can get enough Senators from their offices in the Senate Office Building in a minute or so. If they do not come I certainly shall not seek to protract the session.

Mr. SMOOT. I ask that the names of absent Senators be called.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will call the names of the absentees.

The Secretary called the names of the absent Senators, and Mr. BACON, Mr. BORAH, Mr. BRYAN, Mr. SMITH of Michigan, and Mr. STEPHENSON answered to their names.

Mr. LEA entered the Chamber and answered to his name.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Forty-seven Senators, a quorum of the Senate, have responded to their names.

Mr. McCUMBER. I now renew my motion.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from North Dakota moves that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the bill (H. R. 1) granting a service pension to certain defined veterans of the Civil War and the War with Mexico. The question is on agreeing to the motion of the Senator from North Dakota.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Mr. President—

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The motion is not debatable.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. A question of parliamentary information. Is at this period a motion of that kind in order?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. A motion is in order to take up any bill on the calendar.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. At any hour during the day?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Certainly; and if taken up at this hour it makes it the unfinished business.

Mr. CULLOM. If the Senator from North Dakota has the bill up I will move—

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The motion has not yet been put to the Senate. The question is on the motion made by the Senator from North Dakota. [Putting the question.] The yeas appear to have it. The yeas have it, and the motion is agreed to.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I call for the yeas and nays on the motion.

The yeas and nays were not ordered.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I desire again to make the point of no quorum. I do not think there is a quorum in the Senate now. There was one a moment ago.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Georgia makes the point of no quorum.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. I make the point of order that that motion is dilatory. The Senate has just determined by a roll call that a quorum is present. No business has been transacted since.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair thinks that business has been transacted. A motion has been made and put.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. But it has not been disposed of.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The motion has been put.

Mr. McCUMBER. The motion was made before the roll call and renewed after it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The motion was put and declared carried by the Chair.

Mr. McCUMBER. The motion was pending before the call, and therefore no business has intervened.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. In the opinion of the Chair, the putting and carrying of a motion is business. It has always been so held.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Does the Chair hold that that has been done since the last roll call?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The motion was put; the Chair declared the motion carried, declaring that the ayes had it. The yeas and nays were demanded and refused.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. I make the point just the same that the present call is dilatory.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair overrules the point.

Mr. OLIVER. Do I understand the motion that was put is a motion that is still pending? When a motion has been put and the yeas and nays have been called for, is that the transaction of business, under the rule?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair put the motion and declared the motion carried on a voice vote. The yeas and nays were then demanded. There was not a sufficient number, and the yeas and nays were refused. The bill was then before the Senate, and the Senator from Georgia made the point of order that there was no quorum present.

Mr. OVERMAN. I move that the Senate adjourn.

Mr. OLIVER. Mr. President, a parliamentary inquiry.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from North Carolina moves that the Senate do now adjourn.

Mr. OLIVER. I have the floor, and I do not like to have the floor taken away from me, especially by the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair was not aware that he was taking the floor from the Senator from Pennsylvania.

Mr. OLIVER. I make a parliamentary inquiry.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Pennsylvania will be in order until the Chair states the point. The Chair was not aware that the Senator from Pennsylvania was still holding the floor. He made a point of order, which the Chair did not think well taken.

Mr. OVERMAN. Will the Senator from Pennsylvania yield to me?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Pennsylvania has the floor.

Mr. OLIVER. I yield the floor.

Mr. OVERMAN. After the ruling the Chair made that the motion of the Senator from North Dakota had carried and that the bill is now the unfinished business, I do not want to have to stay here, and therefore I move that the Senate adjourn.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Pennsylvania is entitled to the floor. The Chair did not understand that he had yielded it.

Mr. OLIVER. My purpose in holding the floor was to make the point. I understand that the call for the yeas and nays and putting the question before the Senate was in the nature of business that had been transacted.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The demand for the yeas and nays was not seconded, and therefore the declaration of the Chair stands that the motion of the Senator from North Dakota was agreed to.

Mr. OLIVER. Then I was wrong in my point. I understood that the situation was different.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. Mr. President, a parliamentary inquiry. I should like to understand the parliamentary status of the bill which has been called up by the Senator from North Dakota.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair understands that the motion of the Senator from North Dakota prevailed on a viva voce vote and that it was carried. It is now the unfinished business, a call for the yeas and nays not having been seconded.

Mr. OVERMAN. That being my understanding of the case, I move that the Senate adjourn.

The motion was agreed to, and (at 5 o'clock and 54 minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned until Monday, March 11, 1912, at 2 o'clock p. m.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

SATURDAY, March 9, 1912.

The House met at 12 o'clock noon and was called to order by Mr. JAMES as Speaker pro tempore.

Rev. Royal A. Simonds, pastor of Trinity Methodist Episcopal Church, Knoxville, Tenn., offered the following prayer:

Almighty God, our heavenly Father, we thank Thee for all the privileges of life. We thank Thee especially on this occasion for our native country. We remember the patriotism of the old Jewish nation and how Jerusalem was so dear to them, and how Palestine became the Holy Land because they lived holy lives upon that soil; and we know very well that it was no more holy land than America can be if we will live holy lives upon our native soil; if we will recognize that this is a chosen land; if we will recognize that Almighty God is our Jehovah and that he leadeth the Nation. We pray Thee, O God, that as Thou didst lead that nation Thou wilt lead ours, and that Thou wilt lead the lawmakers of our Nation, and that Thou wilt bless individually each one of them with wisdom and foresight and caution and discretion. And, O Lord, we would not forget to ask Thee to bless abundantly the homes of Members and their families, some of whom are separated from them. Bless, we pray Thee, the districts from which they come, and keep us by Thy almighty power in Thine almighty hands, which are safe hands for us to rest in; kind hands, the hands of the Christ, in whose name we ask it all. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

HYDRO-ELECTRIC CO. OF CALIFORNIA (H. DOC. NO. 612).

Mr. RAKER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to print as a House document the briefs, one of the defendant and one of the Government, in the California Hydro-Electric case.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. JAMES). Is there objection?

Mr. MADDEN. Reserving the right to object, I should like to inquire why is it necessary that briefs prepared by attorneys for corporations should be printed as House documents?

Mr. MANN. The request is to print the briefs both of the Government and of counsel for the defense.

Mr. MADDEN. Why should that be done?

Mr. RAKER. These briefs contain the various acts from the beginning of the Government down to the present time in relation to rights of way over public lands, reserved and unreserved, together with the decisions by the various courts in the West and the Supreme Court of the United States upon that subject. It is desired to print this document, so that the House may have this information before it, not only on the pending bill but on legislation that is now proposed in relation to rights of way and easements determinable and for a certain number of years. It is information that the Government has collected as the result of a great deal of labor and care, and also represents the work of counsel for the defense upon the same subject.

Mr. MADDEN. Does it cover all the decisions in the cases referred to?

Mr. RAKER. It goes into them very fully.

Mr. MADDEN. Are the same decisions duplicated in the brief?

Mr. RAKER. Part of them are. One side claims that the cases decide one way and the other side that the decisions are the other way. It is for the House to determine which is the better legislation.

Mr. MANN. These briefs contain valuable information.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman?

There was no objection.

AMERICAN NATIONAL RED CROSS.

The SPEAKER pro tempore laid before the House the following Senate resolution:

Resolved, That the Secretary be directed to request the House of Representatives to return to the Senate the bill (S. 4238) to provide for the use of the American National Red Cross in aid of the land and naval forces in time of actual or threatened war.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. If there be no objection, this resolution will be agreed to.

There was no objection.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. Crockett, one of its clerks, announced that the Senate had passed joint resolution of the following title, in which the concurrence of the House of Representatives was requested:

S. J. Res. 83. Joint resolution making appropriations to meet certain contingent expenses of the Senate.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed the following resolution (S. Res. 245):

Resolved, That the Secretary notify the House of Representatives that the Senate has elected AUGUSTUS O. BACON, a Senator from the State of Georgia, President of the Senate pro tempore, to hold and exercise the office in the absence of the Vice President on Monday and Tuesday, March 11 and 12, 1912.

SENATE JOINT RESOLUTION REFERRED.

Under clause 2, Rule XXIV, Senate joint resolution of the following title was taken from the Speaker's table and referred to its appropriate committee as indicated below:

S. J. Res. 83. Joint resolution making appropriations to meet certain contingent expenses of the Senate; to the Committee on Appropriations.

LAWS RELATING TO THE JUDICIARY.

The SPEAKER pro tempore laid before the House the bill H. R. 19238, an act to amend section 90 of "An act to codify, revise, and amend the laws relating to the judiciary, approved March 3, 1911," with Senate amendments.

The Senate amendments were read.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. MANN. Is the Senate amendment one which involves the expenditure of money and hence is required to be referred to the committee?

Mr. CLAYTON. Mr. Speaker, if the gentleman will permit me, I think not, but I am going to ask unanimous consent to disagree to the Senate amendments and ask for a conference.

Mr. MANN. It seems to me that as it requires an additional court to be held, it will require consideration in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. CLAYTON. My motion now is, if I may have the opportunity to make it, to disagree to the Senate amendments and ask for a conference, and perhaps the amendment may be eliminated altogether in conference.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair thinks that the point made by the gentleman from Illinois is well taken, and he will refer it to the Committee on the Judiciary, if the gentleman insists on his point.

Mr. MANN. I believe the request of the gentleman from Alabama was for unanimous consent. Here was a bill amending section 90 of the judicial title relating to the holding of court in one State. The Senate added an amendment to that providing for holding a court in another State, which is provided for in an entirely different place in the act. I do not think such an amendment ought to receive any sort of consideration in the House. If the gentleman wishes to disagree to the Senate amendment without asking for a conference, and without intending to agree to a conference, I have no objection. But providing in one section of the law, which relates to the holding of court in one State, provisions entirely apart from that, for holding court in another State, is so objectionable that it ought not to receive very favorable consideration of this body, whatever it has received in another distinguished body.

Mr. CLAYTON. Mr. Speaker, I quite agree with the view taken of this matter by the gentleman from Illinois, but it was with a view of expediting the matter that I had it in mind to ask to disagree and request a conference, thinking that we could get the matter acted upon by both Houses and the bill passed into law earlier than if we let it go to the Judiciary Committee and come back for report.

It was only to expedite the passage in the matter that was in my mind. However, in view of what the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] has said, I ask unanimous consent now, Mr. Speaker, to disagree to both of the Senate amendments. I may say that the first Senate amendment is wholly unnecessary. It seeks to amend the title of the bill by inserting the words "and for other purposes." Manifestly the title of the bill is sufficient if we disagree to the second Senate amendment. I think it is unnecessary to amend the title even if the House should ultimately agree to the second Senate amendment.

Mr. MANN. Because it would all be an amendment to section 90.

Mr. CLAYTON. Surely. The gentleman is entirely correct. He had happily anticipated what I was about to say, and I thank him for it. I therefore ask unanimous consent to disagree to the Senate amendment.

Mr. MANN. The gentleman does not intend to ask for a conference?

Mr. CLAYTON. No; I do not intend to ask for a conference.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Alabama that the House disagree to the Senate amendment? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

PENSIONS.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The unfinished business is the bill (H. R. 21230) granting pensions and increase of pensions to certain soldiers and sailors of the Civil War, and certain widows and dependent children of soldiers and sailors of said war, upon which the previous question has been ordered.

The question is on agreeing to the amendment which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 1, line 8, strike out the word "twenty-four" and insert in lieu thereof the word "thirty."

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question now is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill as amended.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, and was read the third time.

Mr. RODDENBERRY. Mr. Speaker, I offer the following motion to recommit.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will report the motion.

The Clerk read as follows:

Move to recommit the bill with all amendments, with instructions to the committee to forthwith report to the House the bill so amended that pensions provided for all widows therein be made uniform at $20 per month and pensions provided for all soldiers therein be made uniform at $24 per month.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the motion to recommit, with instructions.

The question was taken, and the motion was rejected.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question now is on the passage of the bill.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. RODDENBERRY) there were—ayes 130, noes 4.

Mr. RODDENBERRY. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order that there is no quorum present.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair sustains the point of order. The Doorkeeper will close the doors, the Sergeant at Arms will notify absentees, the question will be taken on the passage of the bill, and the Clerk will call the roll.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 214, nays 38, answered "present" 10, not voting 131, as follows:

Mr. MARTIN of South Dakota. Mr. Speaker, I have a general pair on political questions with the gentleman from Alabama, Mr. RICHARDSON, and I notice that that pair has been reported by the Clerk. I voted aye upon this proposition. I do not think that the gentleman from Alabama desires to be recorded as being paired against it, and therefore I think that pair should not apply to this situation.

The result of the vote was announced as above recorded.

On motion of Mr. HAMILTON of West Virginia, his motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. A quorum being present, further proceedings under the call will be dispensed with, and the Doorkeeper will open the doors.

SMELTER TRUST IN THE UNITED STATES.

Mr. MARTIN of Colorado. Mr. Speaker, I desire to offer the following privileged resolution of inquiry and move to discharge the committee from its further consideration and move the passage of the resolution.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will report the resolution.

The Clerk read as follows:

House resolution 419.

Resolved, That the Attorney General be, and he is hereby, directed, if not incompatible with the public service, to inform the House whether the Department of Justice has in its possession any information touching the existence of a Smelter Trust in the United States, including the American Smelting & Refining Co.; whether complaint of the existence of a Smelter Trust, or touching the operations of the American Smelting & Refining Co. as the same might be affected by the Sherman antitrust law, has reached the Department of Justice; whether any steps have been taken or are in contemplation to investigate the existence of or prosecute any Smelter Trust; together with copies of any information touching the existence and operations, if any, of such trust.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I reserve the point of order.

Mr. MARTIN of Colorado. Mr. Speaker, I wish to offer and have pending an amendment. In line 11 strike out the four words "or are in contemplation." I propose to offer that amendment to the resolution.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair holds that the amendment will not be in order now. The only question now is whether to discharge the committee from the consideration of the original resolution and consider it.

Mr. MANN. If the gentleman proposes to offer that amendment I shall not insist on the point of order, although that provision in the resolution makes it subject to the point of order.

Mr. MARTIN of Colorado. I withdraw the amendment. Now, I do not care—

Mr. CARLIN. Mr. Speaker, reserving the point of order, I want to inquire of the gentleman if this is on the Discharge Calendar?

Mr. MARTIN of Colorado. No; it is not. It is a privileged resolution of inquiry. I do not understand that this sort of resolution has to be on the Discharge Calendar. It has been in the committee for nearly three weeks.

Mr. CLAYTON. Mr. Speaker, I may say that this resolution is under consideration by a subcommittee of the Committee on the Judiciary; that the Committee on the Judiciary has its next regular meeting on Tuesday next, and then the committee expects a report from the subcommittee on this resolution. Of course, Mr. Speaker, an examination of the resolution which is proposed will show it is not in proper form and perhaps it had better be considered by the committee than to be adopted in its present form. I do not myself know what view the committee will take of the resolution when it gives it consideration. I merely make these suggestions.

Mr. MARTIN of Colorado. Mr. Speaker, I do not wish to take up the time of the House—

Mr. CLAYTON. Mr. Speaker, I desire to suggest that it is not a privileged resolution. I make the point of order that it is not a privileged resolution.

Mr. MARTIN of Colorado. Mr. Speaker, it is purely a resolution calling for information.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair thinks the resolution is privileged under Rule XXII, clause 5.

Mr. CLAYTON. It calls for matters in contemplation, which, in effect, is matter of opinion and not facts, and therefore that renders it nonprivileged.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under the rule a resolution of inquiry addressed to the head of an executive department must be reported to the House within one week after presentation. Of course that makes it privileged, because it is a resolution of inquiry, and the Chair will hold that the gentleman's motion to discharge the committee is in order.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, before the Speaker rules permit me to call attention to the uniform rule applying to all of these resolutions that we can only ask for facts and not for opinions. Now, this is a matter of opinion.

Mr. CLAYTON. Yes.

Mr. MANN. It asks whether a prosecution is in contemplation—

Mr. CLAYTON. And that renders it nonprivileged.

Mr. MARTIN of Colorado. Mr. Speaker, I consider that that inquiry calls only for the facts, but I do not stand on that proposition. I move to eliminate that from the resolution, but nevertheless—

Mr. CLAYTON. Mr. Speaker, it was expressly held in the case of a similar resolution which used the language "in contemplation" that the language rendered the resolution nonprivileged.

Mr. MARTIN of Colorado. Mr. Speaker, I can not understand the difference between the words "in contemplation" and the words "under advisement." I attribute the same meaning to those words, and both of those would have to apply to existing facts. If there is under way at this time in the Department of Justice any inquiry with reference to the existence of a Smelter Trust, or any prosecution of the Smelter Trust, that is a fact and not a matter of opinion.

Furthermore, Mr. Speaker, that information is necessary in order to enable me to determine whether I should follow this inquiry any further. There has been some complaint made, both by Congress and by the Department of Justice, in reference to these trust inquiries; that they were trying to anticipate each other; that the Department of Justice was starting suits against trusts when congressional investigations were pending; and that investigations were started against trusts when prosecutions were pending. Now, Mr. Speaker, I do not care to institute an investigation against the Smelter Trust if the Department of Justice is preparing to institute such an investigation or is preparing to institute a prosecution. And that is all I undertake to ascertain when using the words "or are in contemplation" in the resolution.

I want to say, furthermore, Mr. Speaker, if I may be permitted to proceed now, that I do not wish to unduly press this resolution. I do not think that I have unduly pressed it. The resolution itself shows that I introduced it in this House on the 19th of February. I was given a hearing—a brief one—before the Committee on the Judiciary some two weeks ago. At that meeting of the committee the resolution was referred to a subcommittee. I believe the chairman of the subcommittee will bear me out when I say that I told him more than a week ago that if I did not get action on this resolution I was in a position where I would have to move the discharge of the committee and ask action upon the resolution in the House.

Now, Mr. Speaker, gentlemen ought to know whether they want this information or not. I take it for granted that gentlemen here in the House have been reading the public prints and magazines and studying public questions for the past 10 or 12 years and know whether they have ever heard of the existence, the history, and the operations of a Smelter Trust. I assume that gentlemen here know whether they want an inquiry made of the Department of Justice and of the Attorney General of the United States, whether he has any information touching the existence of such a trust, or whether he is preparing to undertake an investigation or prosecution of such an institution. And I ought not to have to consume the time of the House this morning in order to secure favorable action on the motion to discharge the committee from the consideration of this resolution.

Mr. Speaker, I propose to press a Smelter Trust investigation every day until the gavel falls on the last day of this session of Congress. I want it known by the Smelter Trust that I do not propose to lie down on this proposition. [Applause.]

It has been said that the House is getting tired of investigations and that probably the House at this day would not care to investigate the Smelter Trust, even though the Attorney General had no information concerning the existence of such a trust and was not proposing to conduct any such inquiry or prosecution; but I want to serve notice now, Mr. Speaker, that if the Smelter Trust is not investigated by this Congress it will not be my fault. And, with the time running on toward the close of the session, if I am to get action on it at all, I must get action on it soon.

Now, Mr. Chairman, I am ready to go into the merits of this question whenever it reaches that stage, but I ought not perhaps to put myself in the position of having this resolution voted upon without at least some statement of the facts which caused me to introduce it in this House. But it is a very small matter, and unless I am given some reason why this motion ought not to prevail and this resolution of inquiry be passed, I ought not to be called upon to take the time of the House in presenting an argument as to why the House ought to vote favorably on the motion.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Will the gentleman yield to a question?

Mr. MARTIN of Colorado. I will.

Mr. FITZGERALD. In view of the statement of the gentleman from Alabama that this was now being considered by a subcommittee of the Committee on the Judiciary, and that the matter would probably be considered by the committee next Tuesday, does not the gentleman think he might withhold his motion for the present, until after Tuesday, in order to see what action, if any, will be taken by the committee?

Mr. MARTIN of Colorado. Well, I will say this to the gentleman from New York—

Mr. CLAYTON. Mr. Speaker, in that connection let me say to the gentleman that if I were authorized to tell him of the action of the subcommittee in regard to this resolution, which foreshadows the probable action of the full committee, perhaps the gentleman would be content to let his motion stand in abeyance at this time.

Mr. MARTIN of Colorado. Just a word, then, Mr. Speaker—

Mr. CLAYTON. I can not, without violating the rules of the House, tell the gentleman what has been done in the committee, as he well knows. In justification of the Committee on the Judiciary, with the gentleman's permission, I want to say, Mr. Speaker, that there has not been a committee of this House that has had as much hard work to do at this session as the Committee on the Judiciary. It has had most troublesome legal questions to consider, as the Speaker knows, and as the membership of this House knows, and those who are familiar with the proceedings of that committee know that it is devoting more time to hearings and to the study of legislative propositions of national importance at this session of the House than any other committee. It could not act, Mr. Speaker, on all the matters at once or with the expedition and attention that each Member might want his particular measure to receive, but it has done the best it could. It has devoted its time day after day to the consideration of these matters, and the membership of that committee have had to neglect their other public duties and in many instances their duty on other committees in order to consider matters before this committee. It has been utterly impossible for that committee, with its limited clerical help, with nearly every Member on the majority side of the committee having membership on some other committees, with the diverse duties thus imposed upon him, to give the consideration to all subjects that others might want.

And then again, Mr. Speaker, I have by resolution in this House asked this House to do for the Committee on the Judiciary of this House what the Senate did for the Committee on the Judiciary over there. I have asked for more clerical assistance—one additional clerk. That has been denied me.

The Committee on the Judiciary has done the best it could. Day after day and hour after hour we have sat there patiently and worked. This House has given thousands of dollars to "smelling" committees. You have given a trained corps of experts to help the Committee on Ways and Means, and properly so. You have given experts to the Committee on Appropriations. You have denied any assistance to the Committee on the Judiciary. At the very beginning of this session I called the attention of this House to the enormous work devolved upon that committee, and the leader of the Republican side in this House said, "You ought to have more clerical assistance." I have gone along and have done the best I could.

It may be that in following the conspicuous example of the gentleman from Colorado [Mr. MARTIN] others may seek to lodge complaints against the Committee on the Judiciary. We are human. I am working every day of my life in that committee.

Mr. MARTIN of Colorado. Mr. Speaker, if the gentleman will just permit me a moment now, I think I can bring this matter to a satisfactory conclusion.

I have not any desire, Mr. Speaker, to take this matter from the Committee on the Judiciary. I want to assure the chairman of the committee and every member on it that I am not intending the slightest reflection whatever upon the distinguished chairman or any of the members of this very able and busy committee, and that I am not suggesting any dereliction of duty, but am proceeding within the rule upon a matter of vital importance to my people. In view of the statements made by the distinguished chairman of the committee, I will withdraw my motion at this time.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman withdraws the resolution.

REMARKS OF MR. AKIN OF NEW YORK.

Mr. FOSTER of Illinois. Mr. Speaker, I offer a resolution of high privilege.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will report the resolution.

The Clerk read as follows:

House resolution 443.

Whereas the speech of Mr. AKIN of New York, printed in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD of March 7, 1912, contains language improper and in violation of the privilege of debate: Be it

Resolved, That a committee of five Members be appointed to consider the remarks aforesaid and to report thereon to the House within 10 days.

Mr. FOSTER of Illinois. Mr. Speaker, I do not desire at this time to make any remarks upon this resolution for the appointment of this committee, unless some one desires some explanation or to speak.

Mr. BARTLETT. I ask the gentleman from Illinois if he will give us some information about what the remarks are. It is for the House to determine whether they are privileged or not.

Mr. FOSTER of Illinois. I will state, Mr. Speaker—

Mr. BARTLETT. I should like to have the resolution read, in order that the House may know what it is. I will reserve the point of order.

Mr. HUGHES of New Jersey. I make the point that it is too late to make the point of order.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair holds that the point of order comes too late, as the gentleman had spoken on his resolution.

Mr. BARTLETT. Mr. Speaker, I recognize that the point of order may probably be too late. I did not hear the reading of the resolution and wanted to know whether the language was embraced in it. I have no objection to an investigation of anything that is improper or alleged to be improper, but surely the gentleman ought not to call the previous question and require us to vote in the dark as to whether it is a violation of the rules of the House or require the Speaker to so hold.

Mr. LONGWORTH. I ask unanimous consent that the resolution be again reported.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. If there be no objection the resolution will be again reported.

The resolution was again reported.

Mr. COOPER. Mr. Speaker—

Mr. FOSTER of Illinois. Mr. Speaker, I think I have the floor.

Mr. COOPER. Will the gentleman permit a question?

Mr. FOSTER of Illinois. Yes.

Mr. BARTLETT. Is the motion for the previous question pending?

Mr. FOSTER of Illinois. I will withhold that motion. I want to state, Mr. Speaker, that the language which, in my judgment, is in violation of the rules of this House, is in reference to the President of the United States and a United States Senator. I yield to the gentleman from Wisconsin.

Mr. COOPER. The resolution is for the purpose of appointing a committee to investigate and report, but the preamble recites the fact about which the committee are to investigate. The preamble recites that the language is in violation of the rules, so that all the committee would have to do, if the House decides that that is the fact, is to report.

Mr. FOSTER of Illinois. I will state to the gentleman that this resolution follows exactly the language of the resolution under which the House appointed a committee to investigate the speech of Mr. Willett, a former Member of this House from the State of New York.

Mr. COOPER. Mr. Speaker, we ought not to follow a bad precedent. In my judgment, this resolution ought simply to authorize the appointment of a committee to investigate and report as to whether or not the language in the speech is proper. I have had no chance to investigate it, and I doubt if any Member of the House has.

And while I might not vote against the resolution calling for the appointment of a committee to investigate and report, I do not think we ought to be called upon here to decide absolutely that the proprieties have been violated, but to let that question be decided by the committee.

Mr. FOSTER of Illinois. I will say that the resolution ought to recite some basis for the investigation, and I think that is all that this resolution does.

Mr. McCALL. I would like to say to the gentleman from Wisconsin that the House is presumed to know what occurs in debate. I do not think the resolution proceeds on the theory that there can be any doubt about the impropriety of the language that is found on page 1397 of the RECORD. I would not have a resolution to decide whether the language is proper or not, but if the preamble is stricken out the committee should be instructed to decide what should be done.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I do not remember except as the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. FOSTER] has stated that this follows the language of the resolution in reference to the Willett speech—that is, whether or not it is in the exact language of the Willett resolution. At that time there was a resolution passed and a special committee appointed, of which I was chairman, and that committee reported in favor of striking out the Willett speech from the RECORD. Subsequently another speech was made on the floor of the House by the gentleman from Colorado. I do not remember the exact language of that resolution, but under it a committee, of which I was chairman, was appointed to consider it, and that committee reported back in favor of allowing the remarks to remain in the RECORD, although in both cases it was charged that they were improper under the rule.

Mr. BARTLETT. Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask the gentleman from Illinois if the permanent RECORD is not made up within four days after the temporary RECORD is published?

Mr. MANN. I think the permanent RECORD is made up in 10 days or 2 weeks after.

Mr. BARTLETT. It used to be within four or five days. Mr. Speaker, I do not mean to say that I am opposed to the investigation of this matter by a committee. I think, in fact, I am ready to vote now to strike this language from the RECORD. I do not know whether it was spoken on the floor of the House or was placed in the RECORD under leave to print.

Mr. FOSTER of Illinois. It was done under leave to print.

Mr. BARTLETT. Mr. Speaker, it does not take a committee of one or of five to tell me that this language was improper and ought not be permitted to be printed in the permanent or even the temporary RECORD.

Mr. MANN. And yet I think the orderly procedure would be to have it investigated by a committee.

Mr. BARTLETT. Mr. Speaker, I shall not oppose this proposition to appoint a committee. I will not again read into the RECORD the language contained in the RECORD of March 7. I would not read it again. It is a very serious reflection and criticism upon that great American citizen who now occupies the White House. [Applause.] While I differ with him in politics, and while I propose to vote against him in the election, I wish to say here that I condemn this language; and I will not by silence appear to oppose the appointment of a committee to determine upon the absolute impropriety of any man uttering such language on the floor of the House or by leave to print to write it in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD. I rose to inquire what the resolution was, as I could not hear it distinctly; not that I was opposed to it. I had not had my attention called to this language. I think the gentleman from Illinois is acting very wisely and in the interest of good order and decency of the House in offering this resolution; and I think if the Members of the House would read the language referred to in this resolution they would almost as one man demand that the language be stricken from the RECORD eo instanti. [Applause.]

Mr. FOSTER of Illinois. Mr. Speaker, I ask for the previous question.

Mr. DALZELL. Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask a question of the gentleman from Illinois. Was this language that is contained in the RECORD, referred to in the resolution, spoken on the floor of the House, or was it put in the RECORD under leave to print?

Mr. FOSTER of Illinois. Under leave to print.

Mr. DALZELL. And not delivered on the floor of the House?
Mr. FOSTER of Illinois. And not delivered on the floor of the House.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Speaker, I think the better practice is to have the matter referred to a committee. While I have my own opinion as to the propriety of what has been inserted in the Record, still it is much better to avert the possibility at any time of acting hastily and unjustly in matters of this kind. If the language is improperly placed in the Record, I think it will emphasize the impropriety to have the House act on the report of a committee to which it may be referred.

Mr. FOSTER of Illinois. Mr. Speaker, I ask for the previous question.

The previous question was ordered.

The resolution was agreed to.

AGRICULTURE APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. LAMB. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the bill H. R. 18960, the Agriculture appropriation bill.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the House resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the Agriculture appropriation bill, with Mr. BORLAND in the chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Modoc National Forest, Cal., $10,950.

Mr. RAKER. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment, which I send to the desk and ask to have read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend by striking out, in lines 13 and 14, page 39, the words "ten thousand nine hundred and fifty dollars" and inserting in lieu thereof the words "twelve thousand two hundred and nineteen dollars."

Mr. RAKER. Mr. Chairman, this particular reserve, in the estimate and the amount allowed, in 1911 was granted $12,219. I desire to call the attention of the committee to the fact that the gross receipts from this forest are as follows: Timber sales, $1,627.77; timber settlement, $11.50; grazing $13,062.13; special use, $38; making gross receipts of $14,739.40. I desire to call particular attention to the fact that the grazing receipts alone upon this tract of land are more than we ask to have expended in its administration. Further, for 25 years this particular range, this national forest, has been and is now in my back yard, and one part of it is in the front yard, so that I have been acquainted with it. I have been over it in all its phases and I have been over all its trails and roads, and I know its different conditions. Commencing last year, the stockmen's associations all over my county, four of them—one in Surprise Valley, one in Pitt River Valley, one in Likely, and one in Canby—met and discussed the matter. They sent me resolution after resolution urging that there be another ranger designated for this forest. Those resolutions were taken up with the Forest Department, urging that they give another ranger. We were informed that they did not have the money with which it could be done, and we were not given this ranger, which 500 men belonging to these different organizations had demanded. They knocked at the door of the Department of Forestry and demanded that this other ranger be appointed, because we are paying now more for the privilege of ranging our stock upon this range than it costs for the administration of the range. I have a letter here from the president of the United Association stating to me that, having known this range and having known this country and being unable to get them assistance from the Forest Service, I ought to keep knocking at the doors of the Forest Department or the Congress until this request was granted.

When this forest was started the people gathered in my town, the largest gathering that had ever been there since I was a resident, in over 25 years, and they urged that the forest be established. The agent of the department was there, and it was the unanimous opinion of everybody that the forest be established. We are willing to maintain the forest, we are willing to maintain the ranges and preserve our natural resources and expend our money, but when these stockmen, when these farmers, are all expending their money through the Government for the purpose of protection, for the purpose of having their stock upon the ranges, we ought to be given a sufficient number of men to properly take care of the forest and give the permittees proper consideration.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. LAMB. Mr. Chairman, I will repeat here what I have said in substance before along this line, that the money for these different forest reserves is apportioned by the Chief Forester. He knows the conditions, and it is supposed, the authority resting in him, that he has been discharging his duty.

I have said to the gentleman from California [Mr. RAKER] that if he will make a statement such as he has made here to Mr. Graves, very likely he will obtain the relief that he desires. It is not a matter for the committee, because we can not investigate each one of these 159 forests, and say whether $10,000 shall be apportioned to one and $12,000 to another. It is a matter of administration, and the Chief Forester has it in hand. We think he has managed it well, and I hope the amendment will not prevail.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from California.

The question was taken, and the amendment was rejected.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

The committee informally rose; and Mr. RAKER having taken the chair as Speaker pro tempore, a message from the Senate, by Mr. Crockett, one of its clerks, announced that the Senate had insisted upon its amendments to the bill (H. R. 19238) to amend section 90 of the act entitled "An act to codify, revise, and amend the laws relating to the judiciary," approved March 3, 1911, disagreed to by the House of Representatives, had asked a conference with the House on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and had appointed Mr. CLARK of Wyoming, Mr. NELSON, and Mr. BACON as the conferees on the part of the Senate.

AGRICULTURE APPROPRIATION BILL.

The committee resumed its session.

The Clerk read as follows:

Nebraska National Forest, Nebr., $4,231: Provided, That from the nurseries on said forest the Secretary of Agriculture, under such rules and regulations as he may prescribe, may furnish young trees free, so far as they may be spared, to residents of the territory covered by "An act increasing the area of homesteads in a portion of Nebraska," approved April 28, 1904.

Mr. RAKER. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out, on page 43, lines 1 and 2, "$13,049" and insert in lieu thereof "$19,823." This amount I ask to insert is the same amount that was in the appropriation bill for last year. I ask for a vote.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Sierra National Forest, Cal., $13,049.

Mr. RAKER. Mr. Chairman, the reporter asked me a question, and I kindly gave him a word, and during that time the next item was inadvertently passed. I will not take up half a minute, and I would like to have unanimous consent to return to lines 15 and 16, page 39.

Mr. LAMB. All right.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from California asks unanimous consent to return to lines 15 and 16, page 39. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. RAKER. I desire to offer the following amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend by striking out, in lines 15 and 16, on page 39, "$5,803" and insert in lieu thereof "$10,924."

Mr. RAKER. I ask for a vote, Mr. Chairman.

The question was taken, and the amendment was rejected.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 43, lines 1 and 2, strike out the words "thirteen thousand and forty-nine dollars" and insert in lieu thereof the words "nineteen thousand eight hundred and twenty-three dollars."

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, the only reason the gentleman makes his motion is because he considers the action of the House last year more important than the proposed action now, that Congress then knew more about it than we know now.

Mr. RAKER. I would like to answer the gentleman. I feel from my personal knowledge of these forests, having been through them, knowing the conditions and knowing the position of our people, what they have been trying to do and are doing to-day, that we ought to have this increase in these particular ones that I am asking to have amended. I make that statement as to each one of them. The disposition of the committee is against me, having tested it in various forms, and when I have a vote I keep moving to amend on the same question until the question is fully settled. The committee may in their magnanimity consent before we get through to allow these to be amended. I hope they will. What it was last year does not settle the question, but for instance the committee can readily see from the votes heretofore taken and the position of the committee, of which I am not going to complain, that is as to the committee, they are my personal friends, and I admire the gentleman, but they are taking one position and I am taking another, and I think their position is not the one that ought to be taken.

Mr. MANN. The gentleman is not giving any information to the committee. The bill carries an appropriation of $13,049. It is very close figuring for this national forest. Now, the gentleman proposes to strike out that and insert $19,823; very, very close figuring to get down to the difference between $823 and $825, and he gets down to the very notch—why not make it $22.99—but he gives no information on the subject at all to the committee for making the change.

Mr. RAKER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MANN. Certainly.

Mr. RAKER. What information could I give here in five minutes, and what good would it do to stand here and read the information for an hour—

Mr. MANN. Well, the gentleman impugns both the motives and the integrity of the House.

Mr. RAKER. Oh, no; I do not.

Mr. MANN. I have seen gentlemen give information enough in five minutes on the floor of the House to change items in bills repeatedly, and I have frequently seen gentlemen in less than an hour convert the House to the views of the gentleman who was speaking, but I never saw anybody succeed in the House by simply making motions to strike out a few thousand and odd dollars and insert a few thousand and odd dollars and then say, Why, the House is not intelligent enough and competent to see to it, and hence he did not offer any information. I know the gentleman does not want it to go that way, and I gave him the chance to correct it.

Mr. RAKER. The gentleman from Illinois does not mean that, and I hardly think that is the proper way to put it up to me, namely, that the committee, or any one of them, or any Member of the House, has not the intelligence to understand it. It is absolutely the other way. I submitted the matter, as I stated, from my personal knowledge of the Modoc Reserve, and, further than that, because of the petition of the four stock-grazing organizations in my county demanding heretofore an assistant ranger when the appropriation was $2,000 more than it is now, and now that it has been cut down $2,000 we will then have another ranger taken out, and the property of these men not given the consideration that it should be given, as there are not enough men now upon the ranges to properly take care of them.

Mr. MANN. That has nothing to do with the gentleman's motion.

Mr. RAKER. He told me that he has done the best he could. He did not believe he could get more appropriation, and therefore he has taken $300 from each one of the 154 national forests in the West.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment of the gentleman from California [Mr. RAKER].

The question was taken, and the amendment was rejected.

The Clerk read as follows:

Siskiyou National Forest, Oreg. and Cal., $13,234.

Mr. RAKER. Mr. Chairman, on page 43, lines 5 and 6, I move to strike out the following words: "Thirteen thousand two hundred and thirty-four" and insert in lieu thereof the words "fifteen thousand and fifteen."

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 43, lines 5 and 6, strike out the words "thirteen thousand two hundred and thirty-four" and insert in lieu thereof the words "fifteen thousand and fifteen."

Mr. RAKER. Mr. Chairman, one word. I make the same statement in regard to this as I made in regard to the other, as to the necessity for it, and I hope the committee will see its way clear to allow the same amount it allowed last year and which was necessary for the purposes intended.

Mr. LAMB. That is not explaining anything.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment of the gentleman from California [Mr. RAKER].

The question was taken, and the amendment was rejected.

The Clerk read as follows:

Sitgreaves National Forest, Ariz., $15,310.

Mr. RAKER. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. I desire to have entered in the Record a letter from the Forest Service, under date of March 4, 1912; also a letter of date of March 2, 1912; also a letter of date of February 29, 1912, in relation to the matters that I have moved to amend in this bill.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from California asks unanimous consent to insert three letters in the Record. Is there objection?

Mr. MANN. Reserving the right to object, I have no objection to the letters being inserted, but if they are important as to this subject why should we not know what the substance of them is?

Mr. RAKER. I have not time to read them. I would like to have them read if I could.

Mr. LEVER. Let me inquire of the gentleman from California if his letter of March 4, 1912, which he desires to insert, is in reference to the appropriations for the national forests in the State of California?

Mr. RAKER. It shows those that were increased and those that were decreased.

Mr. LEVER. The gentleman, I suppose, is willing to admit the fact that the difference in the bill this year and last year, in reference to the forests in California, is only $500 decrease?

Mr. RAKER. That is the reason I offered these in evidence. I wanted it in the Record so the people of California and this committee could see the facts. They have taken it from some and given it to others. They have taken it from those that I know need it as badly as the others need the increase, but to be fair to the committee and to the public I ask that the whole matter go into the Record.

Mr. MANN. Of course, Mr. Chairman, nobody reads these letters printed in fine type in the Record who has any self-respect, or respect for his eyes, at least. I have no objection to their being printed in the Record, but if it is important matter, why does not the gentleman state in substance what they say?

Mr. RAKER. They relate to matters that have been discussed in regard to the forests of California. One of the things that appears in the letters is that because of the condition of the funds there have been deducted $300 from each national forest in California, which would amount to about $56,000. Therefore, they could use that amount—

Mr. MANN. But the gentleman does not want the statement to go as he made it, and therefore I interrupt him. The gentleman stated there had been deducted $300 to meet the—

Mr. RAKER. Three hundred dollars for each national forest in the West—all the national forests—so that they could use this $56,000, or thereabouts, in controlling and handling the Appalachian National Forests. I think the committee will agree with me on that.

Mr. LEVER. Will my friend yield to me for one moment?

Mr. RAKER. I yield to my friend.

Mr. LEVER. In the discussion of the bill when last before the House I made the statement, and the chairman of the committee agreed to it, that this bill had not reduced the appropriations in the national forests for the purpose of taking care of the Appalachian new forests that may be created, and I desire to call the attention of the gentleman from California [Mr. RAKER] and of the members of the committee to the fact as brought out in the committee, because the members of the Committee on Agriculture do not desire to mislead anybody.

Mr. RAKER. I am satisfied of that beyond all question.

Mr. LEVER. I call attention to this colloquy and statement, contained on page 339 of the hearings:

Mr. GRAVES. We are considering offers only on the headwaters of navigable streams, and particularly in certain areas which we have designated as being the most important. I do not know whether that particular place you mentioned is in one of our designated areas or not. But we are especially considering the high mountains and more rugged portions of the watersheds of the navigable streams.

The CHAIRMAN. This amount of $39,644—will you draw that from this Appalachian appropriation?

Mr. GRAVES. That will be drawn from the $11,000,000 which was provided for purchase.

I based my statement the other day and the chairman of the committee based his statement on that testimony taken before the committee.

Mr. RAKER. Will the gentleman yield right there for a question?

Mr. LEVER. Yes.

Mr. RAKER. I want to say to the gentleman that I had then and have now no intention to impugn the good faith of anybody. I simply wanted to show that in all the national forests there had been a reduction of $300 apiece, thereby leaving that amount of money less for the administration of the national forests outside of the Appalachian chain.

Mr. LEVER. I will state to the gentleman that I did not think he had any intention to impugn the motives of the members of this committee. I desire simply that this statement shall go in the Record. I will say to my friend further that the reduction of $300 each from the various national forests does not go, all of it, to this Appalachian forest, but goes to other new forests created in the past fiscal year.

Mr. RAKER. I see.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I ask that the gentleman may have five minutes more in order to have that first letter read. It is a short letter.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois asks unanimous consent that the time of the gentleman from California [Mr. RAKER] may be extended five minutes. Is there objection? There was no objection.

Mr. RAKER. This is headed "United States Department of Agriculture, Forest Service, Washington," and dated March 4, 1912, and entitled "Memorandum for Judge RAKER." It says:

In order to provide means for the protection and administration of lands acquired under the Weeks law without increasing the total appropriation for the Forest Service, a deduction of $300 was made in the estimates for general expenses on each of the national forests.

I want to state that I read that same statement into the RECORD day before yesterday. I go on:

And this surplus carried 15 per cent allowed for general administration. Furthermore, it was found after the adoption of the statutory roll for supervisors and rangers that there were many inequalities in the amounts appropriated for the different forests, and a readjustment was made to make the appropriation conform more nearly to the actual needs of the different forests. In doing this the following reductions were made in the appropriations for national forests in California:

Inyo	$664
Modoc	1,269
Mono	5,121
Sierra	6,774
Siskiyou	1,781
Angeles	6,406
California	98
Cleveland	8,438
Kern	2,880
Santa Barbara	1,887
Sequoia	2,898
Total	38,216

On the other hand, increases have been made in the estimates for national forests in California as follows:

Eldorado	$1,005
Klamath	8,665
Monterey	1,930
Plumas	5,708
Shasta	6,717
Tahoe	1,530
Trinity	6,370
Lassen	5,794
Total	37,719

You will see by this that the actual difference in the estimates for the California forests between the years 1912 and 1913 is a matter of only about $500.

Very sincerely, yours,

A. F. POTTER,
Associate Forester.

Mr. MANN. Then, I understand that while $300 may have been deducted from each of the national forests, that really does not apply to those in California. In other words, you get just as much as you got before.

Mr. RAKER. I say that they are increased and scattered where they are needed without question, and deducted from the forests that do need it just as badly.

Mr. MANN. I do not know whether they needed it where the amounts were deducted as much as in those cases where they received the increase. The gentleman has not given any information on that subject.

Mr. RAKER. What more information would you have, I would ask the gentleman, concerning the Modoc National Forest, when I have stated plainly that I appealed for the service of another ranger and they could not restore it? And now, when they have reduced it, how can we get another man?

Mr. MANN. There may be no necessity for another ranger there. They have taken it out of that forest and put it into another. Evidently they were of opinion that it would be more needed in the other forest. The gentleman from California must understand that it would be absolutely impossible, out of any Treasury that we could construct and fill, to supply all the demands that could be made if the people were given all that they ask for.

Mr. RAKER. I know; but would not the gentleman concede that in an important forest, where the grazing privileges amount to a good deal more than the administrative expenses, there ought to be enough men to administer the forest thoroughly and give the permittees those rights and protection that they ought to have.

Mr. MANN. I think they ought to have enough in every one of the national forests, and I presume the Forester in making his estimates has endeavored to cover that. I never have known a department of the Government, in making estimates, to proceed on the theory of making them too low.

Mr. LEVER. And that has been the experience of everybody.

Mr. MANN. My observation is that they make them fully up to the requirements.

Mr. HAWLEY. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. LAMB. Certainly.

Mr. HAWLEY. In this matter of the Modoc National Forest, where there is an apparent decrease of $1,269, is that a decrease, or is that largely accounted for by the transfer to the statutory roll of some of the rangers or supervisors?

Mr. RAKER. That statutory roll is so indefinite that you can not really get any satisfactory idea about that.

Mr. LAMB. It is too definite, if anything, but that matter of administration is left entirely to the department.

Mr. HAWLEY. I thought the gentleman from California might have looked into this. There may be, in fact, no reduction in the Modoc Forest appropriation if some of the employees were transferred to the statutory roll.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from California [Mr. RAKER] asks unanimous consent to insert in the RECORD a letter of March 2, 1912, and a letter of February 29, 1912, relating to the subject to which he has referred. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The documents referred to are as follows:

UNITED STATES DEPARTMENT OF AGRICULTURE,
FOREST SERVICE,
Washington, March 2, 1912.

HON. JOHN E. RAKER,
House of Representatives.

DEAR MR. RAKER: In further reference to your letter of February 24 and my reply of February 20:

In connection with the statement of receipts from the Trinity, Shasta, Klamath, and Modoc National Forests which I furnished you, it has occurred to me that you might be interested in the prospects for increased revenues from the national forests of northern California. The Forest Service is endeavoring to bring the receipts from the national forests up to an amount which will make them self-supporting as rapidly as this can be done consistently with conservative, businesslike administration of these public resources. The chief salable resource of the national forests is their timber, and increased revenues must for the present come largely through increased sales of timber.

On the Plumas National Forest, Cal., which was not included in the list concerning which you made inquiry but is located near them, in the northern portion of the State, sufficient timber has been sold to make the receipts more than offset expenditures. The receipts from the Plumas National Forest during the last fiscal year were as follows:

Timber sales	$31,707.23
Timber settlement	590.57
Timber trespass	12.35
Grazing	6,403.54
Grazing trespass	56.99
Special uses	631.25
Total	39,401.93

The expenditures during the same period, exclusive of the cost of permanent improvements and fighting forest fires, totaled $37,146.68, leaving a balance of receipts over expenditures of $2,255.25.

On the Shasta National Forest we have as yet been unable to make the receipts offset expenditures, but there is good prospect that this will be done in the near future. A sale of 182,000,000 feet of timber, having a minimum value of $409,000, is under negotiation with the Eastern Redwood Co. A second sale of 29,000,000 feet of timber, valued at $52,975, on this forest is under negotiation with the La Moine Lumber & Trading Co. It is probable that at least the first of these sales will be consummated. This alone will increase the annual receipts from the Shasta by at least $25,000 and make that forest more than self-supporting.

The advertisement of 120,000,000 feet of timber on the Klamath National Forest, which has been carefully cruised by the forest officers, is now under consideration and will doubtless be authorized as soon as further information on certain features of the tract is secured. The minimum value of this timber is $146,000, and its sale would go far toward making the Klamath self-supporting.

During the last two years the Forest Service has endeavored to sell a large body of timber tributary to the proposed route of the Humboldt & Eastern Railroad in the Trinity National Forest, at the request of parties interested in the construction of that road. One billion feet of timber was advertised in the early part of 1911, at an initial stumpage price of $1.50 per 1,000 board feet, or $1,500,000 for the total amount. The department also agreed to advertise further bodies of timber for purchase from time to time after the removal of the timber on the first area is completed. Thus far it has not been possible to secure a contract for this timber under conditions which sufficiently protect the interests of the public. I am hopeful, however, that it may be possible to sell it within the next two or three years, and thereby insure an income which would add the Trinity to the list of national forests paying a net income over the cost of administration and protection.

Very sincerely, yours,

H. S. GRAVES, Forester.

[Important.]

UNITED STATES DEPARTMENT OF AGRICULTURE,
FOREST SERVICE,
Washington, February 29, 1912.

HON. JOHN E. RAKER,
House of Representatives.

DEAR MR. RAKER: Your letter of February 24 is received. In accordance with your request a copy of my report for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1911, is being sent you to-day under separate cover. The information you desire regarding the stand of timber, appropriations, expenditures, and receipts for the Klamath, Modoc, Shasta, and Trinity National Forests has been incorporated in the inclosed statements.

The estimated stand of timber for all four forests is necessarily rough, since they have been only partially cruised. These estimates are, therefore, subject to revision as more accurate information is obtained. The work of securing accurate estimates of the timber on the national forests is being carried on as rapidly as the funds available and other important work will permit.

I think a word of explanation is necessary to a clear understanding of the items under "Expenditures" in the inclosed statements. The item "Fighting forest fires" represents the amount expended in fighting fires. This does not represent the entire protective work. The whole forest force is organized for participation in protection. I have called the rangers and guards the protective force, although the crews making surveys and timber estimates are really also a part of the protective system. In addition to fire work the officers are engaged in administrative duties, such as supervising timber sales, directing free and special uses, examining claims, investigating trespasses, controlling and regulating grazing, making and supervising improvements, etc.

In comparing the amount of expenditures with the specific appropriation for each forest it should be borne in mind that the expenditures for improvements and fighting forest fires are not paid from such forest appropriation, but from the specific appropriation for improvement of the national forests and fighting forest fires; that the expense necessary for the general administration of the Forest Service is drawn in amounts not exceeding 10 per cent of the total of all sums appropriated under "General expenses, Forest Service," which includes the appropriations for each national forest; and that under the terms of the appropriation act not to exceed 10 per cent of the amount appropriated for any national forest is available interchangeably for expenditure on any other national forest to meet necessary expenditures that could not be foreseen and provided for at the time the estimates are made.

I shall be very glad to furnish you any further information you may desire in this connection.

Very sincerely, yours,

H. S. GRAVES,
Forester.

Mr. MANN. I think there ought to be some explanation by some one on the committee in reference to this Appalachian Forest. If they have deducted from the other forests an average of $300 apiece, to be used for the care of the Appalachian Forest, it strikes me that that is not a very happy way of determining what amount should be appropriated. May I ask the gentleman from Oregon, who is on the Appalachian Commission, how far has the Appalachian Forest proceeded?

Mr. HAWLEY. Mr. Chairman, there have been five general areas or tracts in which authorizations for purchases have been made, one in the eastern part of Tennessee, one in the northern part of Georgia, two in the western part of North Carolina, and one on the border between Tennessee and Virginia.

Mr. MANN. How much area do they cover in acreage?

Mr. HAWLEY. The Tennessee tract covers about 79,000 acres, the Georgia tract about 32,000, the North Carolina tracts 21,000 and 18,000 acres, and the Virginia-Tennessee tract some 34,000 acres. These are the figures in round numbers, and make a total of about 184,000.

Mr. MANN. Where do you provide for the care of these forests in this bill?

Mr. LEVER. On page 45.

Mr. HAWLEY. So far as the work of the commission is concerned, that ends when the purchase of the lands has been made. The Department of Justice examines into the titles and sees that safe title is vested in the United States. The lands are then under the control of the Forest Service, in the Department of Agriculture, and appropriations for their administration and maintenance are made as for the other national forests.

Mr. MANN. When will the money be available to purchase these lands?

Mr. HAWLEY. The sum of $2,000,000 is available for the fiscal year ending the 30th day of June of this year.

Mr. MANN. What will they cost?

Mr. HAWLEY. They vary in price.

Mr. MANN. The total amount.

Mr. HAWLEY. The total amount for the purchases already agreed upon is a little over $1,002,000, speaking in round numbers.

Mr. HAUGEN. Will the gentleman state the amount paid per acre?

Mr. HAWLEY. The largest tract, 79,000 acres in Tennessee, was purchased at prices varying from $3.50 to $3.75 per acre, although $15 an acre was paid for some 3,500 acres of heavily timbered evergreen land which we thought ought not be cut over, because the mountain slopes now covered would be denuded and the tops of the trees would make a very dangerous accumulation, in which forest fires might start.

Mr. MONDELL. Are these tracts solid and compact, and do they include all lands within the exterior boundaries?

Mr. HAWLEY. There are small areas in some of them, at present under private ownership; for some of these good title can not be guaranteed and others are not suitable for our purposes; but we expect to take over by means of friendly suits all lands that are necessary.

Mr. MANN. How close are these tracts to each other?

Mr. HAWLEY. I think 80 miles would cover the distance between the two farthest apart; they are in one general body where Virginia, Tennessee, North Carolina, and Georgia come close together.

Mr. MANN. Lying off the mountain ranges?

Mr. HAWLEY. Yes; lying on the mountain ranges.

Mr. RAKER. How many tracts are there; two?

Mr. HAWLEY. Five general areas or tracts.

Mr. HAUGEN. How were they purchased?

Mr. HAWLEY. We buy where lands can be assembled in large tracts. These general tracts consist of smaller tracts, some as small as 100 acres, and each smaller area offered by the owner directly. I submit here the form upon which owners of lands make offers, and also a circular of information:

UNITED STATES DEPARTMENT OF AGRICULTURE,
FOREST SERVICE.

(Henry S. Graves, Forester.)

Purchase of land under the Weeks law in the Southern Appalachian and White Mountains.

GENERAL INFORMATION.

The act of Congress approved March 1, 1911 (Public. No. 435), created a National Forest Reservation Commission and authorizes the acquisition of lands on the watersheds of navigable streams for the purpose of conserving their navigability. The Secretary of Agriculture is authorized and directed to examine, locate, and recommend to the commission for purchase such lands as in his judgment may be necessary to the regulation of the flow of navigable streams, and he is authorized to purchase, in the name of the United States, such lands as have been approved for purchase by the National Forest Reservation Commission at the price or prices fixed by said commission. The full text of the law is to be found on page 7.

PURPOSE OF THE LAW.

The general purpose of this law is to secure the maintenance of a perpetual growth of forest on the watersheds of navigable streams where such growth will materially aid in preventing floods, in improving low waters, in preventing erosion of steep slopes and the silting up of the river channels, and thereby improve the flow of water for navigation.

INCIDENTAL BENEFITS.

While the improvement of the flow of navigable streams is the fundamental purpose, other benefits incidental in character but nevertheless important will be kept in view. Among these are (1) protection against disastrous erosion of the soil on mountain slopes and against the destruction of the soil and soil cover by forest fires; (2) preservation of water powers, since, like navigation, they depend for their value upon the evenness of stream flow; (3) preservation of the purity and regularity of flow of the mountain streams with a view to their use for the water supply of towns and cities; (4) preservation of a timber supply to meet the needs of the industries of the country; (5) preservation of the beauty and attractiveness of the uplands for the recreation and pleasure of the people.

RESTRICTIONS.

Aside from its application to the watersheds of navigable streams, the law is not restricted to particular regions, except that lands may be purchased only in the States whose legislatures have consented to the acquisition of such lands by the United States for the purpose of preserving the navigability of navigable streams. The States which have passed such legislation and in which purchases are now contemplated are: Maine, New Hampshire, Maryland, Virginia, West Virginia, North Carolina, Tennessee, South Carolina, and Georgia.

The sources of the navigable streams which have their origin in the Rocky Mountains or the mountains nearer the Pacific coast are already to a large extent protected by national forests. The Appalachian Mountains, including the White Mountains, are for the most part without such protection. Because of their altitude, steepness, and lack of protection they are in a class by themselves in their need for the action authorized under this law.

FIRST EXAMINATIONS TO BE LIMITED TO APPALACHIAN AND WHITE MOUNTAIN REGIONS.

The first lands to be examined for purchase will therefore be in this region. The area needing protection in the Appalachians is very large. It is far larger than can be purchased with the funds appropriated under this law. Much difference exists, however, in the character of the lands in different parts of the region. Mountains are higher, slopes steeper, rainfall heavier, and the soil more easily washed in some sections than in others.

PURCHASES TO BE RECOMMENDED ONLY IN CERTAIN AREAS.

Careful examinations made during the past 10 years in practically all parts of the Appalachian region have proven that the conditions which affect stream flow to an extreme extent are to be found in relatively limited areas. These areas are scattered more or less widely. By careful selection of the tracts it will be possible to do much for the permanent improvement of the watersheds by the purchase of only a part of the mountainous region.

Within these areas not all, and in some cases not a very large proportion, of the land will be needed by the Government for the purpose in view. Just what lands should be purchased will be determined in every case as a result of a careful examination.

PROPOSALS FOR SALE INVITED.

Some of the important areas are already known, and the purpose of this circular is to invite proposals for the sale of lands within them. A list of such areas is to be found on page 4, and a blank form and an official envelope to be used in making proposal for sale accompany this circular. Additional copies of the blank may be had upon application to the Forester, Forest Service, Washington, D. C. The blank should be accurately and fully filled out and mailed, securely sealed in the envelope. If possible, a map showing the boundaries of the tract should be submitted with the proposal for sale. If the proposal is satisfactory, the Secretary of Agriculture will expect the owner to execute to him an option on the land for a reasonable length of time.

CLASSES OF LAND DESIRED.

Lands of the following classes will be considered for purchase when they lie within a designated area: (1) Timbered lands, including both land and timber; or the land with the timber reserved to the owner under rules of cutting to be agreed upon at the time of sale; (2) cut-over or culled lands; (3) brush or burned land not bearing merchantable timber in quantity, but covered with a growth of brush which is useful for watershed protection, and burned land whether covered with young timber growth or not; (4) abandoned farm land, whether remaining cleared or partially covered by timber growth. Good agricultural lands will not be considered.

Where valuable mineral deposits are known to exist, the right to remove such deposits may be reserved to the owner under conditions to be agreed upon, such conditions to be incorporated in the written instrument of conveyance.

Lands lying within the designated areas can not be recommended for purchase unless examination by the United States Geological Survey shows that their control will promote or protect the navigation of streams on whose watersheds they lie.

LANDS CONSIDERED ONLY WHEN OFFERED CHEAP.

Lands proposed at exorbitant prices will not be considered. The holding of land at too high a price in any of the areas will prevent the Government from undertaking purchases within it.

NO RESTRICTION AS TO SIZE OF TRACT.

No limitation is put upon the size of tracts to be proposed for sale. Proposals will be received for small as well as for large tracts within the areas designated, but small tracts can only be examined when they lie adjacent to or near large tracts which are being examined or where the aggregate of all tracts offered for sale is sufficient to justify an examination.

NOT NECESSARY TO SELL THROUGH AN AGENT.

The right of any landowner to deal through an agent is, of course, recognized. The placing of lands in agents' hands, however, is unnecessary, as the owners themselves may deal direct with the Government.

USE OF THE LANDS BY THE GOVERNMENT.

The lands purchased by the Government under this law are to be included in national forests. Such forests will in no way interfere with hunting and fishing within the areas. The laws of the States in which the forests are located will apply as at present, and the forests will be open to anyone and everyone. The use of the forests for all reasonable purposes, including recreation, will be encouraged.

PROCEDURE IN MAKING PURCHASES.

In general the procedure in making purchases will be as follows:

- (1) The filing of proposal for sale of land by the owner or owners.
- (2) Examination of lands. This examination will usually include a careful estimate of whatever timber is standing upon the tract, an estimate of the value of the tract as a whole for the production of timber, and the determination of its importance in regulating the flow of navigable streams.
- (3) Approval of lands for purchase by the National Forest Reservation Commission and the fixing of the purchase price or prices. Approval for purchase is given only after recommendation has been made by the Secretary of Agriculture on the basis of the field examinations.
- (4) Final negotiations with the owner or owners of lands as to terms of sale.
- (5) Examination of title.
- (6) Actual conveyance of the title of the land by the owner to the Government and payment therefor by the Government to the owner.

Mr. HAUGEN. The gentleman does not mean to say that the whole tract was purchased from one party?

Mr. HAWLEY. Oh, no; each individual tract was purchased from one seller.

Mr. MANN. And we have expended $1,000,000?

Mr. HAWLEY. In round numbers pretty close to it. We have $2,000,000 available each year for five years.

Mr. MANN. Originally it was $13,000,000?

Mr. HAWLEY. Eleven millions.

Mr. MANN. You have lost one million.

Mr. LAMB. Mr. Chairman, I think I can answer some of these questions.

Mr. MANN. This Appalachian Forest Reserve is important and interesting matter to all of us.

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Chairman, I would like to ask the gentleman from Oregon a question. I notice that the gentleman said that the average price was from $3.50 to $3.75 per acre on the whole tract. The purchase price of the 184,000 acres, aggregating $1,002,000, at $4 an acre would be $736,000.

Mr. HAWLEY. The gentleman misunderstood my answer in part. I was asked what the largest tract cost per acre, and stated that all but a small portion covered with evergreen forest was purchased at the price of $3.75 per acre.

Mr. HAUGEN. And the gentleman gave the tract in Tennessee.

Mr. MADDEN. Was it not understood when the legislation was being considered that a great many people owning these lands to be put in the forest reserve lying on the Appalachian and White Mountain Ranges would sell the land at a nominal price of something like 50 cents an acre, and that a good many would donate the land altogether?

Mr. HAWLEY. I know of no such statement.

Mr. MADDEN. It was so stated on the floor of the House.

Mr. HAWLEY. I made no such statement.

Mr. MADDEN. I do not say that the gentleman did, but it was stated that these lands would be turned over to the Government at a nominal price, and in many cases they would be given to the Government. Many of us feared the very thing that has happened would happen.

Mr. AUSTIN. I want to say to the gentleman that no such statement was made by anybody that represented the State of Tennessee.

Mr. MADDEN. I do not know what State they represented.

Mr. MANN. The gentleman from Tennessee could never be accused of giving something for which he could get pay out of the Treasury.

Mr. MADDEN. When they were arguing for this legislation, he did make a statement that the lands would be given to the Government substantially free in many cases. Some of us on the floor feared that when the Government committed itself to the project the price of these lands would go up a good deal higher than they ought to and above their real value. And what I fear now is that you are going to pay a higher price than ought to be paid.

Mr. HAWLEY. We get a statement of the sales of land in the immediate vicinity, actual sales, giving the names of the parties, the areas conveyed, the amounts they paid, with dates of sales, and then we make a thorough investigation; I think in no instance has the Government paid more than a reasonable price.

Mr. MONDELL. What did the gentleman say was the average price per acre paid for these tracts?

Mr. HAWLEY. I have not figured that out. The tracts vary in value.

Mr. MADDEN. According to the aggregate amount paid for the 184,000 acres, they cost $5.44 per acre.

Mr. LAMB. Mr. Chairman, I insist that the gentlemen are roaming away from the point at issue.

Mr. MADDEN. We are trying to get information upon this matter, if that is roaming off. We ought to have this information that we are asking for, if anybody has it; and if not, we must get it in some other way.

Mr. HAWLEY. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks on this matter in the Record.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Oregon asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the Record. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. BEALL of Texas. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman from Oregon [Mr. HAWLEY] be permitted to continue on the floor for five additional minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. BEALL of Texas. I will state to the gentleman from Oregon that the Chief Forester said that the lands they had under consideration to purchase were offered to them for from $3 to $5 an acre.

Mr. HAUGEN. Mr. Chairman, I will state in that connection that people who appeared before the committee stated positively that these lands could be bought for little or nothing, at from 50 cents to $1 an acre, and it appears that those lands which could then be bought at that price are now worth $10 an acre.

Mr. LEVER. Mr. Chairman, I had the honor to be in charge of the Appalachian bill when it passed the House. What my friend says is true and not true. The statement was made before the committee that if Congress had acted upon this bill 10 years ago these lands could have been bought for from 50 cents to $1 an acre. That is true, but land values in the South are going up. I have seen them go up from $4 an acre in my own community to $50 an acre within the last 10 years.

Mr. HAUGEN. If Congress had acted 10 years ago the lands that were then worth 50 cents an acre would have been worth $5 an acre, but inasmuch as Congress did not act, the price stayed at 50 cents an acre. If Congress had not acted in this matter the price would still be 50 cents an acre or less.

Mr. LEVER. I do not think that is the testimony at all.

Mr. BOWMAN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HAWLEY. I yield to the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

Mr. BOWMAN. Mr. Chairman, I would like to ask if there is not more or less small timber on the land under discussion?

Mr. HAWLEY. There is. The Tennessee tract will be bought on the basis of its being cut-over land; that is, we buy it as if it was cut over. Part is now cut over and part is to be cut over. But no second cutting will be allowed. The tract in the northern part of Georgia is virgin timber, a great deal of it marketable timber, but at this time it was so far removed from transportation that the price we paid—$7 an acre—included the land and the timber on that tract.

Mr. BOWMAN. I think gentlemen will agree that the average price is very reasonable for land that has any quantity of timber on it at all, in view of the present price of timberland.

Mr. MANN. But I do not understand that under the bill it is the policy of the Government to buy timber or timbered land.

Mr. HAWLEY. When the Forest Service makes its report it includes an estimate for the value of an acre of that land without the timber. The lands have more or less timber, and some forest cover, under the theory of the bill, is absolutely necessary to make the lands of value. In the Gennett tract, in the northern part of Georgia, there is some good timber on the land. The estimate was made of the value of the timber, such as oak, poplar, or tulip tree, and pine, and hemlock. That estimate entered into the element of price, but the timber being so far removed from the railroad could not be cut for many years, and the danger of forest fire was so great that if we intended to put the law into force in good faith we must take the lands as they were offered at a fair price to protect the watersheds.

Mr. MANN. Of course, land that had timber on it that was so far removed from transportation that it could not be cut and utilized is one thing.

Mr. HAWLEY. That is, at the present time.

Mr. MANN. It is not worth much, so far as that is concerned, but, as I have always understood the theory of the bill, it was the intention to buy the land after the timber was cut off, the ordinary timber that was marketable—that that was to be cut off before the Government obtained control, leaving enough for seed purposes remaining on the land.

Mr. HAWLEY. It is the purpose of the commission to buy cut-over lands as far as available. I am not, of course, giving away the vote of the individual members of the commission, but we take suitable land, which is necessary under the theory on which the act was based, and some of it must necessarily have timber on it.

Mr. HAUGEN. I would like to ask the gentleman how the value of those lands are determined by the commission?

Mr. HAWLEY. The Forest Service sends men expert in soils and lumber to each locality. They make an estimate of the value of the land, together with the unmerchantable growths, and then of the forest cover of the land valuable for lumber, pulp wood, and tan bark, and for all other purposes, and from these elements a price is arrived at.

Mr. HAUGEN. Are expert cruisers and lumbermen employed?

Mr. HAWLEY. Yes. The cruisers and lumber experts are men who have had many years of experience in actual logging and lumbering operations.

In addition to the lumberman's examination, there is in the case of tracts containing valuable timber an estimate made on the basis of the actual measurement of all merchantable trees on a certain percentage of the tract. This is done by running strips across the tract at fixed intervals and tallying all trees of merchantable size by diameter, species, and number of merchantable log lengths. Usually 5 per cent of the area of a tract is actually measured in this way, but in the case of small tracts the percentage is increased in order to insure correct results.

Mr. HAUGEN. Does the commission act entirely on the recommendations and reports made—

Mr. HAWLEY. The Geological Survey makes a report, and in addition to that we have a statement of the actual transactions in the immediate vicinity as to the amount, prices paid, dates of purchases, with names of parties to the sale.

Mr. HAUGEN. Those are improved lands that are sold.

Mr. HAWLEY. Of all the lands. There is a great deal of wild land being transferred.

Mr. HAUGEN. How does it happen that these tracts are all purchased from one seller?

Mr. HAWLEY. They are not purchased from one seller.

Mr. HAUGEN. I understood the gentleman to make that statement.

Mr. HAWLEY. I said each individual tract was offered by one seller, so for the tracts there are at least five sellers, but really the sellers numbered 15. The Little River Lumber Co., who owned a tract of land in eastern Tennessee covering 79,000 acres, wanted to transfer it to the Government in a body, and we bought their entire holding because it was all in line with the purpose of the act and suitable for our purchases.

Mr. HAUGEN. You find it to the advantage of the Government to purchase in large tracts?

Mr. HAWLEY. Yes; where possible. If you will take the records of the commission, you will find that the purchases we have made and the prices we have paid as a rule are lower than other tracts, even those of very considerable quantities.

Mr. MANN. I do not remember just at the moment what has been done about the taxes on the property.

Mr. HAWLEY. You mean taxes that have already accrued.

Mr. MANN. Do the States cede jurisdiction? And is the property exempt from taxation after the Government acquires it?

Mr. HAWLEY. The property is exempt from taxes after the Government acquires it just the same as a national forest.

Mr. MANN. Well, that depends upon what the States have done in reference to it.

Mr. LEVER. All of these States have ceded jurisdiction even before the passage of this act.

Mr. HAWLEY. I knew the gentleman from South Carolina had that information.

Mr. MANN. In the national forests where we cut off timber we pay 25 per cent to the States in lieu of taxation. I take it in the Appalachian forests a good deal of the timber will not be cut off by the Government in many years to come.

Mr. HAWLEY. Some of them will not be lumbered for some years and some will be probably lumbered for some of the valuable wood—maybe poplar or tulip tree—within a short time, because one poplar tree is worth a good deal.

Mr. LEVER. Most of this timber is hardwood.

Mr. BEALL of Texas. Did the commission have any information as to how long the several vendors of this land had owned it prior to the sale?

Mr. HAWLEY. Yes; we had that information.

Mr. BEALL of Texas. There was suspicion that certain thrifty gentlemen in that country might have bought these lands for the purpose of selling them—

Mr. HAWLEY. The commission took into consideration that suspicion.

Mr. BEALL of Texas (continuing). At a fair price to the Government. Has that occurred, in the judgment of the gentleman?

Mr. HAWLEY. So far as that is concerned, sometimes they acquired small additions to their original holdings for the purpose of offering them in one compact body to the commission.

The following document will be of interest:

(Press notice.)

UNITED STATES DEPARTMENT OF AGRICULTURE,
OFFICE OF THE SECRETARY,
Washington, D. C., November 7, 1911.

Secretary Wilson announces to-day that hereafter the Department of Agriculture will not examine or recommend for purchase under the Weeks law timberlands upon which options have been secured with a view of selling to the Government at a profit. The department wishes to deal direct with the owners of lands, since this course will result in the payment to the owners of the full value of the land and at the same time make it possible for the Government to secure lands cheaper than through option holders.

The purchase of land through option holders means a lower price for the landowner and a higher price to the Government than is justified by the conditions. This decision to purchase only from the owners means that no action can be taken upon some of the proposals which have been made for the sale of lands; but as the appropriation available is limited to $2,000,000 per year, there will be no difficulty in selecting from the large amount which is being offered a sufficient acreage to readily consume the entire appropriation as fast as it becomes available.

While the optioning of land in advance of the Government examiners has become an obstacle in certain localities in the South, Secretary Wilson says that, in general, his assistants have made excellent progress in examining and reporting upon lands and in reaching agreements with owners on terms and conditions of sale.

More than 1,800,000 acres have been offered in the southern Appalachians and White Mountains, over 400,000 acres have been examined, and agreements as to price have been reached with the owners for over 100,000 acres.

Four parties of estimators and five expert lumbermen have been busy in the field since the 1st of June securing the necessary information upon which to base reports to the National Forest Reservation Commission, by which all purchases of land must be authorized in accordance with the provisions of the law. Secretary Wilson will ask that a meeting of the commission be called early in December for the purpose of considering some of the reports which are being prepared.

Before making his reports to the commission the Secretary will have reports from the Geological Survey showing whether the control of the lands examined will promote or protect the navigation of the streams on whose watersheds they lie. Only lands that are approved by the Geological Survey will be recommended for purchase.

The agents of the Agricultural Department will continue in the field all winter making examinations of lands offered for purchase. They are especially instructed to negotiate with the owners of small tracts. Much of the land offered for sale is held in tracts of less than 200 acres. It is tracts of this kind which have been optioned by speculators in the past and which the Government now expects to buy direct from the owners.

Mr. BEALL of Texas. I notice in the testimony of the Chief Forester that about 2,000,000 acres have been offered and about 400,000 examined. Do you know whether there is any disposition down there among those people to buy up these lands for the purpose of selling them advantageously to the Government?

Mr. HAWLEY. Well, if there is such a disposition and they have formed combinations, such combinations have not been brought to our notice.

Mr. LAMB. Mr. Chairman, I ask now to make a short statement in behalf of the Committee on Agriculture and to answer some of the questions that have been asked here, and especially to answer the question that was propounded by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] to the gentleman from California [Mr. RAKER]. We were careful in interrogating the Forester along these various lines that have been discussed here, and you will see on page 316 the following:

The CHAIRMAN. I observe that some of these appropriations have decreased and some increased. Just give us, briefly, some of the reasons why you had to do this—whether it changes the general result or not.

Mr. GRAVES. We have made a total reduction in the forests here to provide for the administration of this new unit, Santa Rosa Forest, and also to provide for the administration of such forests as may be established in the southern Appalachians and White Mountains. That item is on page 43. We have reduced where we could in the general expenses and increased in some cases where we want to do special work in the examination of timber, estimates of timber, and where we are making large sales, and consequently there will be greater expenses connected with the administration of the sales. The amounts are necessarily going to vary slightly from year to year also, according to the distribution of our year-long men who are on the statutory roll; that is, the distribution of the rangers who are serving on the statutory roll will affect, to some extent, the amount we need for general expenses and for summer rangers, temporary men.

The CHAIRMAN. With regard to this increase for the contemplated Appalachian reservation do you think you can divide up these Appalachian reservations into districts like this? Is that your idea?

Mr. GRAVES. Yes, sir; but the forests have not been purchased yet. So the funds had to be lumped together.

That answers some questions, too.

The CHAIRMAN. I know that. Do you propose to subdivide these forests also?

Mr. GRAVES. Ultimately there will be individual forests, each of which will be estimated for separately.

Mr. LEVER. Would it be possible for you, Mr. Graves, to furnish the committee with a brief outline of the expenditures in each case in this national forest as you have it subdivided?

Mr. GRAVES. The estimates in each forest?

Mr. LEVER. Yes.

Mr. GRAVES. I have them here.

Mr. LEVER. And the purpose of the estimate—how the money is being spent, how the increase comes about, and how the decrease comes about—as compared with last year.

Mr. GRAVES. I have an estimate of the amount itemized for the expenditures.

He did, and I thought I had it here, gentlemen, but it would be too long to read anyhow.

The CHAIRMAN. You showed it to me the other day.

Mr. GRAVES. The reasons will be variable. It will be a slight increase of business or decrease of business—and also, as I say, the business will vary each year according to the running out of timber sales or increase of timber sales or an increase in the amount of reconnaissance, and so on; and also there will be a little shifting according to the distribution of our permanent force.

That answers some of the questions, I will say, of the gentleman from California.

Mr. LEVER. I had in mind that an antagonistic friend of ours might tax the ingenuity of our chairman if he began to ask specific questions about these specific forests.

You see, my aid-de-camp [Mr. LEVER] is a sort of a prophet.

Mr. GRAVES. I can make a statement of that to go with our estimates.

The CHAIRMAN. Just one word more on that Appalachian business. Was that your idea, Mr. HAWLEY? I thought it was to conserve the watershed so as to protect it in the whole and not go into an extensive system like this.

Mr. HAWLEY. I understood it would have to be administered like any other forest.

Mr. GRAVES. A good deal of the land which will be purchased will doubtless be cut-over land, and it will not be possible for us to make some of those lands self-sustaining from the beginning.

Now, gentlemen, that answers some of these questions and puts the Committee on Agriculture right before this committee. This is a difficult question, and when you come in here with this Appalachian business I tell you frankly we had better cross that bridge when we get to it, and it is going to be a pretty difficult bridge, I think, to cross.

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. Are we not crossing that bridge all the time?

Mr. LAMB. We are crossing your bridge, but we have not crossed the other bridge yet.

Mr. Chairman, I ask for a vote.

Mr. AUSTIN. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

The CHAIRMAN. Debate has been proceeding by unanimous consent. The Clerk will read.

Mr. AUSTIN. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. I have no personal knowledge of the purchase of land for the Appalachian Reserve, except the purchase of an 80,000-acre tract in the eastern district of Tennessee, a large portion of which is in the district I represent. I know the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] will smile.

Mr. BUTLER. We are all going to smile. [Laughter.]

Mr. AUSTIN. He actually laughed. I want to make the prediction that the Government of the United States in 15 or 20 years will have no difficulty, in the event it should desire to part ownership of this property, to sell it at twice the present purchase price. The greatest rainfall region in the United States is in the Appalachian region, and this cut-over land in eastern Tennessee will have a splendid and valuable second growth of timber within the time mentioned by me.

Mr. MADDEN. How soon?

Mr. AUSTIN. Fifteen or twenty years. We all know how the value of hardwood timber land has increased in recent years.

I know of one section in the Appalachian region, in Monroe County, where about eight years ago a party purchased 42,000 acres of land for $245,000, held it for five years, and sold it for $750,000.

Mr. BUTLER. Is there any more of it down there?

Mr. AUSTIN. Now, something has been said about the purchase of land for 50 cents and a dollar per acre. That period has long since passed. The owners of those lands have long since realized the value of them. And not only that, but that country is filled with prospective purchasers of timber lands. This 80,000-acre tract of land in Blount and Sevier Counties was purchased about 15 or 20 years ago by practical timber men from Pennsylvania, and the other tract in Monroe County was first purchased by Pennsylvania people and afterwards sold to Pittsburgh people. There are no cheap timber lands anywhere left in the South.

Mr. RAKER. I would like to ask the gentleman whether in the cutting of timber his people simply cut off the ripe and proper timber and leave the balance stand without destroying it?

Mr. AUSTIN. I want to say that investigations have been made of that region by the Geological Survey and the Forestry Branch, and in this case the Appalachian Commission sent a subcommittee to the eastern district composed of the Member from Oregon [Mr. HAWLEY] and the Member from Georgia [Mr. LEE]. I went with those gentlemen on that trip—not all of it, but part of it—and I know they spent a number of days in going over that land and in seeing for themselves the value of the same. The Little River Lumber Co. spent half a million dollars in the construction of a railroad that penetrates this large area of land. There is no grab in its purchase by the Government. The Government in this particular case got full value for every dollar it has invested in it.

Mr. MADDEN. Who gets the railroad? [Laughter.]

Mr. AUSTIN. Well, the Government is not buying railroads at $3.75 or $3.80 an acre. [Laughter.] But the company and the Government have the means of entering these lands and controlling and removing the timber, because there is a standard-gauge railroad constructed all through that section. And I want to say that I congratulate the Government and Congress upon the care and caution that were exercised in this particular case, because it has been pending for over a year. And I want also to bear testimony to the fidelity and honesty of the gentleman from Oregon [Mr. HAWLEY] and the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. LEE], who had no other interest to subserve except the interests of the Government in this matter, and any insinuation or reflection in reference to their conduct in connection with this proposition is unfair and unkind, and without excuse. [Applause.]

Mr. MANN. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Tennessee yield to the gentleman from Illinois?

Mr. AUSTIN. Certainly.

Mr. MANN. I do not know whether the gentleman will consider the question an insinuation or not. I have not heard any Member make an insinuation yet. But will the gentleman give us information as to whether this land is now being used for any purpose, whether any of it is herded or grazed upon?

Mr. AUSTIN. The Little River Lumber Co. has a mill at Townsend, Tenn., on part of the lands of this great tract, where they cut from 125,000 to 135,000 feet of hardwood lumber every day.

Mr. MANN. Apart from the cutting of the timber, is the land used for any purpose?

Mr. AUSTIN. Only a small portion of it. The timber has never been removed for the purpose of utilizing this land for any agriculture or other purposes. I expect to see the day when this land can be used advantageously in the cultivation of berries and fruits and in the development of orchards.

Mr. MANN. It ought to be used for that purpose, then.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. HAUGEN. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman be permitted to proceed for five minutes more. I desire to ask him a question.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Iowa asks unanimous consent that the time of the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. AUSTIN] be extended for five minutes. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. HAUGEN. I would like to ask the gentleman from Tennessee if he contends that the Government bought these lands for the purpose of starting fruit growing and other agricultural activities there?

Mr. AUSTIN. No. I was simply speaking, in answer to the question of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN], as to what this land could be used for.

Mr. HAUGEN. If these lands can be used for fruit growing, for example, would it not be better to put these lands to some use in that way?

Mr. AUSTIN. The Government has bought this land for the purpose of preserving the water supply of the Appalachian region.

Mr. LEVER. And the bill provides, I may say, that if these lands become more valuable for agricultural purposes the Government shall have the right to open them up for settlement.

Mr. HAUGEN. May I ask the gentleman from Tennessee if some of the timber has been removed?

Mr. AUSTIN. Some of it was cut over some years ago, a considerable number of years ago, and other portions of it have been cut over within very recent years and up to date.

Mr. HAUGEN. Can the gentleman give us any estimate of the amount?

Mr. AUSTIN. A member of the committee from Oregon [Mr. HAWLEY] is in the Chamber at this time, and he can give the gentleman information as to how many acres have been cut over and how many have not been cut over.

Mr. HAUGEN. I would like to ask the gentleman if the Government contemplates buying timberlands in carrying out this project?

Mr. AUSTIN. The gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. LEVER] can furnish that information. I yield for that purpose to the gentleman from South Carolina.

Mr. HAUGEN. I understand the intention was to buy denuded lands and worthless lands and not the timberlands; and the representation was made before the committee when this legislation was under consideration that the lands that were desired could be bought for 50 cents an acre or less, or at least at $1 an acre. I understand that was the value of the lands there.

Mr. LAMB. When that bill was first proposed it was true that some suitable lands could then have been purchased for one or two or three dollars an acre, but that project ran on for quite a number of years—at least 12 years—as I know from personal knowledge in my service here. Those lands were priced very low at that time and could have been bought at less than half of what they can be bought for now. There has been an advance in their value since that time and money has become cheaper.

Mr. AUSTIN. The value of timberlands has advanced, not only there but in every State in the Union.

Mr. MARTIN of South Dakota. What is the difference in the price of lumber now and then?

Mr. HAUGEN. Mr. Chairman, I am not raising these questions for the purpose of criticizing the department, and certainly not for the purpose of impugning the motives or the conduct of the distinguished gentleman from Oregon [Mr. HAWLEY] or any member of that commission. I have the highest regard for all of those men. They are men of integrity, experience, and good judgment; men whom we can well trust in the performance of this service. But, Mr. Chairman, certain representations were made before the committee which I think had much to do with influencing the committee in favorably reporting that bill.

And, Mr. Chairman, while representations were made that these lands could be purchased at from 50 cents to $1 an acre, and that many of the owners would, as stated, be glad to turn them over without any compensation, it seems that we have drifted away from that and into a policy where we are purchasing lands at from $3 to $20 an acre or more.

Mr. LEVER. That was 10 or 15 years ago.

Mr. HAUGEN. You passed this bill two or three years ago. Now, it is fair that this House should have information upon the subject, and especially that the Committee on Agriculture should give the information as to what has been done and what is contemplated to do.

Mr. LAMB. The gentleman has had ample opportunity to obtain information in the committee.

Mr. HAUGEN. We are to-day appropriating over $5,000,000 for the Forest Service, in addition to this $2,000,000 under the Weeks-Lever Act, all told, about $7,000,000. As has been said here on the floor, only a few years ago it was stated by the Forester that this service could be made self-supporting inside of five years; that the revenues would equal the expenses of the service. The five years have gone by, and the receipts are about $2,000,000 and the expenses $5,000,000, to say nothing about the $2,000,000 for the purchase of lands. They have full jurisdiction. The grass has been sold, the timber has been cut off, the lumber has been sold, and yet we are at an expense of $3,000,000 in excess of the $2,000,000 receipts from those sales and other sources; and as I said I do not bring this up for the purpose of criticizing anyone. I have no quarrel with the Forest Service or anyone connected with that department; but I contend that this is of enough importance that when anybody rises to ask a question for information he should be given a courteous reply and time to answer questions.

Mr. LAMB. Mr. Chairman, I had no idea my colleague on our committee was so eloquent. He might have obtained from the committee all the information he required along this line. There can be no complaint against anybody about this matter, and my friend is the last man who ought to complain, because he has had every opportunity to obtain this information.

Mr. HAUGEN. It was charged that certain ones had questioned the integrity of men who have this matter in charge, and I simply intended to say that I certainly did not say anything to criticize any Member of this House or anybody in the department.

Mr. AUSTIN. The gentleman from Iowa states that he is not here to make an insinuation. I understood him to say that the Appalachian bill received favorable consideration in view of statements made before the committee that this land could be purchased for 50 cents or a dollar an acre, and perhaps some of it given to the Government, and that statement was made in view of a previous statement made by a member of the Appalachian Commission who is a Member of this House, the gentleman from Oregon [Mr. HAWLEY], that the commission had gone ahead and paid $3.85 an acre, and up to $15 an acre. It looks as though that was an insinuation of a violation of an agreement under which this measure received favorable consideration.

Mr. HAUGEN. Oh, no; I said nothing about agreements or violations thereof. I said that they had drifted away from that policy, and from what was contemplated under the act.

Mr. FOWLER. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the paragraph under consideration.

Mr. LEVER. The gentleman from Illinois misunderstands the parliamentary situation. The Appalachian paragraph is not yet under consideration.

Mr. LAMB. It has not been reached, and all this discussion is premature.

Mr. BUTLER. If we do not quit talking we will never reach it.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the paragraph under consideration.

The Clerk read as follows:

Sitgreaves National Forest, Ariz., $15,310.

Mr. FOWLER. I move to strike out the paragraph under consideration.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the motion of the gentleman from Illinois.

The Clerk read as follows:

Strike out lines 7 and 8 on page 43.

Mr. FOWLER. Mr. Chairman, I am very much interested in the preservation of the forests of this country. Past history has shown that vast forests have been destroyed recklessly, and the Government now, in order to preserve our hardwood, is driven to the necessity of establishing forest reserves. I live so far away from these reserves that I am not familiar enough with them to satisfy myself as to what ought to be done with some of the proposed appropriations of this bill.

A very important question arises with reference to the 80,000-acre reserve in eastern Tennessee, a portion of which lies in the district of the gentleman from that State, Mr. AUSTIN. I am interested in these discussions in various ways. I want to ask that distinguished gentleman, if he will be kind enough to answer me, a few questions in reference to this tract of 80,000 acres of land so that I may be able to get at some of the rest of the tracts in these reservations.

I desire to know if it is the policy of the Government in these reserves to protect anything else except the forests, and if the gentleman from Tennessee, who has served so long in this Chamber and seems to have dealt extensively in this matter, will answer that question I will be glad to have him.

Mr. AUSTIN. The gentleman is mistaken in stating that I have served in this House for so long a period. This is my second term.

Mr. FOWLER. Is that true? That is a long time. [Laughter.]

Mr. BUTLER. Longer than some Members have.

Mr. AUSTIN. It may be long to the gentleman from Illinois, but I am not complaining about the length of service.

Mr. FOWLER. I hope the gentleman's service will be still longer.

Mr. AUSTIN. The agitation of the Appalachian Forest Reserve and legislation along those lines began more than 10 years ago. We succeeded in passing a bill in the Senate, and it lodged in the committee room of the House. After that Congress expired we went back and had a bill passed by the Senate a second time. That was the third stage. Later we had it passed in the House and it failed in the Senate. So the legislation finally became a law during the Sixty-first Congress.

Mr. FOWLER. What was that for; for the preservation of the forests?

Mr. AUSTIN. The forests and the water supply at the head of the navigable rivers.

Mr. FOWLER. The forests or the water supply?

Mr. AUSTIN. Both.

Mr. BARTLETT. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FOWLER. As soon as I get this information. I would like to know if in that forest reserve there is any mineral that has been discovered—iron, zinc, or any other mineral?

Mr. AUSTIN. Yes; there is copper in the Appalachian Range—Ducktown, where the Tennessee Copper Co. operates. Ducktown was operated prior to the Civil War. In Carter County there is magnetic iron ore, which has been mined for more than 20 years and made into pig iron at the Embersville Furnace or the Johnson City Furnace. There are quantities of slate, barytes, and zinc through the Appalachian Forest Reserves. There is copper and marble and zinc and iron ore, slate, and barytes.

Mr. MADDEN. And there is sufficient magnetism in the iron ore to draw the money out of the Federal Treasury to buy these lands. [Laughter.]

Mr. AUSTIN. That is what we are here for.

Mr. FOWLER. It seems that there is much magnetism surrounding this whole affair.

Mr. BARTLETT. If the gentleman from Illinois will yield, I want to say that the Appalachian forestry bill was based and passed solely upon the assertion that the Government had the right to exercise control over interstate commerce by preserving the headwaters of the navigable streams. The Judiciary Committee of this House, on a resolution introduced by myself, reported to the House that Congress had no constitutional power to purchase land for the purpose of making forest reserves in the States when it owned no public domain, and the Appalachian forest reserve, as it is called, was not purchased or was not obtained for the exercise of any power to reserve forests in the States, but for the purpose of preserving and maintaining the headwaters of the navigable rivers.

I want to state that I was one of the men from that region that opposed even that view and voted against it.

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. Mr. Chairman, I want to ask the gentleman if anybody has instituted any proceeding to test the constitutionality of that bill?

Mr. BARTLETT. I think not, and for the reason, as I understand it—I may be mistaken—the bill that passed Congress did not confer on the commission any power or authority to condemn land, but only by the consent of the State and the consent of the owners of the property to purchase it.

Mr. MADDEN. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. FOWLER. In a moment. I desire to know, while I am in favor of the preservation of the forests of America as much as any man, I would like to know from some distinguished gentleman under what power of the Constitution they have acted in purchasing this land for the purpose of forest reserves.

Mr. BARTLETT. Mr. Chairman, does the gentleman desire me to answer that question?

Mr. FOWLER. Yes.

Mr. BARTLETT. Mr. Chairman, I desire to state that I thought I had already done so. Congress exercised that power and granted the power in that bill to purchase this property, not for the purpose of a forest reservation, but for the purpose of preserving the navigable rivers of the country. That is all they did. They had no power to purchase it as a forest reservation.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Illinois has expired.

Mr. FOWLER. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for three minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois asks unanimous consent to proceed for three minutes. Is there objection? There was no objection.

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Chairman, will my colleague allow me to ask the question of the gentleman from Georgia?

Mr. FOWLER. Mr. Chairman, I would like to follow my line of inquiry. The distinguished gentleman from Georgia undoubtedly has figured in this forest purchase.

Mr. BARTLETT. No, indeed. I was opposed to it.

Mr. FOWLER. But the gentleman has been here while such has been going on, and I want to ask him by what authority under the Constitution Congress has proceeded in buying these lands for that purpose?

Mr. BARTLETT. It has not bought them for forest reserves. They have dodged the constitutional question, in my opinion—and I do not mean any offense by that—because the Committee on the Judiciary of this House reported that Congress had no constitutional power to buy the land as forest reserves.

Mr. FOWLER. Mr. Chairman, I understand from my distinguished friend from Tennessee [Mr. AUSTIN], who has answered a question just awhile ago, that the Appalachian Reservation was purchased for a forest reservation.

Mr. AUSTIN. I said for both purposes.

Mr. FOWLER. I am trying to get things straightened out, so as to know how to vote. Here is a distinguished gentleman who has been able to get enough money out of the Treasury to buy 80,000 acres of forest reservation, as he says, and here is a distinguished gentleman from Georgia [Mr. BARTLETT], who says there is no constitutional power for that purpose. As a young Member, Mr. Chairman, I am in such a condition that I would like to have an answer from some gentleman who has been here long enough to know what has been the policy of the Government in buying these forest reservations?

Mr. RUBEY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FOWLER. Mr. Chairman, I yield to the governor of Missouri.

Mr. RUBEY. Mr. Chairman, I only wanted the gentleman to address me as "the distinguished gentleman," in order that I might get that title.

Mr. FOWLER. I yield to the distinguished governor from Missouri. [Laughter.]

Mr. BUTLER. Mr. Chairman, I want to ask the gentleman a question.

Mr. FOWLER. I yield to the distinguished gentleman from Pennsylvania.

Mr. LAMB rose.

The CHAIRMAN. For what purpose does the gentleman from Virginia rise?

Mr. LAMB. Mr. Chairman, I rise to ask for order in the first place, and in the next place, if the gentleman's time has expired, I desire to move that all debate on this paragraph and all amendments thereto close in five minutes, so that we can get along and do some work.

Mr. BUTLER. Mr. Chairman, I would like to ask the gentleman a question. He has moved to strike out the paragraph with reference to Sitgreaves National Forest, Ariz. I want to know why he does that? I have to vote on this motion of his and I want to know how to vote.

Mr. FOWLER. Mr. Chairman, I can explain very readily that I moved to strike out the paragraph in order to get the floor so that some gentleman here could give me some information relative to these great forest reserves.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Illinois has expired. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. FOWLER. Mr. Chairman, I withdraw the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the amendment of the gentleman from Illinois will be withdrawn, and the Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

And investigations independently, or in cooperation with other branches of the Federal Government, with States and with individuals, to determine the best methods for the conservative management of forests and forest lands, $83,728.

Mr. CULLOP. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the paragraph. I would like to ask the chairman of the committee where it is proposed now to buy other national forests?

Mr. LAMB. In the Appalachian and White Mountain regions.

Mr. CULLOP. Mr. Chairman, the Appalachian proposition never passed this House for the purpose of constituting national forests, but, as the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. BARTLETT] said, the only authority under the Constitution that could be found for the enactment of that law was to buy up the nude mountains, from which the timber had been cut, for the purpose of letting those mountains grow up with timber, so as to gather the rainfall, produce moisture, and feed the streams of the country, so as to make those navigable that were not navigable, and to keep navigable those that were navigable streams. It was a visionary dream, in the first instance, for the purpose of getting the public money out of the Treasury. It is now proposed by this House to inaugurate a new policy and divert it from the only purpose for which there could be found any constitutional authority for the passage of the law. This proposition has been handed back and forth in the public legislation of the country from time to time until, in the opinion of many, it has served the purpose sufficiently in the exhaustion of public money. Its real purpose should be deprecated, however laudable its ostensible purpose may appear upon a casual observation.

The Government first gave away much of these public lands and let the speculators cut the timber off of them and reap thousands and thousands, yes, millions of dollars' profit and then they come back to the Government and offer to sell the barren land to the Government with a view that some day it would reforest itself and assist in making navigable the streams of this country, or particularly of certain localities. It is a policy that can not be sustained and it is one that the American people ought to condemn. Now, Congress proposes by putting in an appropriation here in an agricultural bill to divert the purpose from the very hazy constitutional one, very hazy, indeed, to an unconstitutional one, conceded I take it by every Member of this House. It is a mere speculation of the landowners; a scheme to dispose of their unprofitable lands after they have taken the profit from them, which in many instances were acquired at nominal prices. In other words, when the citizen has anything to sell to the Government it is very valuable, but when the Government has anything to sell to the public it is of very little value. I insist upon my motion to strike out this paragraph, and I think the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. BARTLETT], who has just given a very lucid explanation of the origin of this legislation and the only basis under the Constitution that it could be based upon, will agree with me that now they ought not to divert the purpose of it and should not be permitted to do so. They want to sell the old hillsides now to the Government at large profits and have it invest the money of the people in them and then wait for generations that they may grow up and protect the ground so that it will hold the moisture to feed the streams of the country. What man can contemplate the period when it will come into use through that operation? The plan is visionary. Its realization is hopeless.

Mr. BARTLETT. May I interrupt the gentleman?

Mr. CULLOP. Certainly.

Mr. BARTLETT. The gentleman is misinformed of the character of the Appalachian forests, because most of that is already timbered. It is not cut-over land, but the greater part of it is in the original forest. Now, I do not mean to say, and I do not want the gentleman to get the impression from my making that statement, that I at any time favored the proposition or approved the idea that the Government of the United States had any constitutional power to use the money of the people to buy within the State where the Government did not have any forest reserve or public-domain property for the purpose of devoting it to a forest reserve.

Mr. CULLOP. I understand the gentleman from Georgia that, while some of these lands have not yet been deforested or the timber cut off on much of them, the lumber speculators, who obtained them from the Government or of private proprietors at practically nothing, and have deforested them, and having no further use for them, propose to unload them on the Government at fancy prices.

Mr. PAGE. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CULLOP. Certainly.

Mr. PAGE. No land in that section of the Southern Appalachian Range has ever belonged to the Government, so the gentleman is laboring under a misapprehension.

Mr. BARTLETT. Neither in North Carolina, South Carolina, nor Georgia has the United States ever had any public lands.

Mr. CULLOP. I understand that. They were acquired during the colonial period, but some lands in the Appalachian system were not.

Mr. PAGE. Will the gentleman allow me? The gentleman made the statement that these people obtained these lands from the Government for small sums. They never obtained them from the Government at all.

Mr. CULLOP. I understand that; but all of these lands are not in North Carolina and Georgia.

Mr. PAGE. South Carolina, Virginia, and Tennessee.

Mr. BARTLETT. All in the same class.

Mr. CULLOP. But there were other lands that belonged in this class embraced in the system, but whether or not they were the proposition is objectionable and the policy can not be defended.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. LAMB. Mr. Chairman, I want to say that no gentleman here would buy a farm and turn it out on the common; that no man would buy 1,000 acres of timber and not have somebody on the tract to look after it and prevent depredation. Just so with the United States Government. I am not going to discuss the question of the Appalachian policy at all; but these lands have been bought and these forests must be protected. Now, as to whether you would have minor forestation, as you have now—

Mr. FOWLER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LAMB. Yes.

Mr. FOWLER. I desire to ask the distinguished chairman of this committee if it is not a fact that this Appalachian reservation was purchased by the Government on the theory of the improvement of navigation, and that alone?

Mr. LAMB. Why, certainly.

Mr. FOWLER. Now, under what authority, if that be true, can you make an appropriation in a forest-reserve bill?

Mr. LAMB. I do not think my friend would say that when we have bought this land that we should turn it loose and leave it unprotected. If you did that you would destroy the very idea which has been had in view. You are bound to protect these hillsides and keep them from being destroyed by fire and the depredations of marauders. That is all this proposition is. Somebody has got to look after the interest of the Government's property after the Government has purchased it, and under the Appalachian bill this money appropriated can only purchase these different tracts of land, and then somebody has got to look after the Government's interest.

Mr. BARTLETT. May I ask the gentleman a question?

Mr. LAMB. Yes.

Mr. BARTLETT. I do not understand that this bill in the least proposes to change the statute of 1911, but simply appropriates the money to carry out the purposes embraced in that statute?

Mr. LAMB. That is all.

Mr. BARTLETT. And you use the word "forest" not so much to designate it as a forest reserve, but as an indication of the particular act?

Mr. LEVER. To indicate how much money we are spending for that purpose.

Mr. BARTLETT. You do not change the law, but carry out the law?

Mr. FOWLER. Why do not you make your appropriation under the rivers and harbors bill, then?

Mr. BARTLETT. We have no authority to do so.

Mr. LAMB. The gentleman on the committee who offered this bill and under whose patronage it was passed, as stated, I ask to answer the gentleman.

Mr. LEVER. Mr. Chairman—

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LEVER. I yield to the gentleman from Colorado.

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. I want to ask the gentleman, the acting assistant chairman of this committee, how you expect this money to be expended over this new land which you are buying? What is the system of distributing this cash?

Mr. LEVER. The testimony of the officers of the Government before the committee is to the effect that this money will be spent upon the Appalachian reserve about as the money is spent upon the ordinary forest reserves in the West. The very strong probability is that not all of this appropriation here will be used, probably not half of it. It will be used only to the extent of protecting the forest lands that have been bought.

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. Have you ever made any appropriation to the Forest Service that has not been consumed?

Mr. LEVER. Oh, yes. We can show here from the figures that the Forest Service turns back into the Treasury each year certain sums of money, and from each forest unit in the Government certain sums of money.

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. What I wanted to ask the gentleman from Oregon [Mr. HAWLEY] was, when I was interrupted: Did the committee make any investigation about these lands as to why the price was raised and whether the price is not continually rising, and also whether or not there are any options on the land that the Government is supposed to buy?

Mr. LEVER. Let me say to my friend that the Committee on Agriculture has absolutely nothing to do with the buying of these lands in the southern Appalachian and the White Mountain region.

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. I expected to ask a member of the commission. But you are appropriating money—

Mr. LEVER. The bill which was passed by Congress appropriating $11,000,000 for the purpose of buying land at the head of navigable streams in the White Mountains and Appalachian Ranges created a commission, and upon it was placed the duty of buying these lands, putting upon these lands the estimates which the commission thought was reasonable, and the Committee on Agriculture has absolutely nothing to do with it except to provide money in this bill with which to protect lands which have been purchased by the commission and which have become the property of the United States.

Mr. HAWLEY. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LEVER. I will yield.

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. I am not quite through.

Mr. LEVER. Just on that point of which we are speaking. The gentleman from Oregon [Mr. HAWLEY], than whom there is no better or wiser man in this House, is on the commission.

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. And I have great respect for the gentleman from Oregon.

Mr. HAWLEY. Is not the appropriation on page 45 for the protection of the lands in the East here on all fours with appropriations made for national forests in any other part of the country?

Mr. LEVER. That is true. We have under the Weeks-Lever law made certain purchases in the southern Appalachian region, property that belongs to the United States, and we have provided here in this bill the means for the protection of that property, and that is all.

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. What I want to ask you is this: Has this commission that has purchased this land and spent the money made any report to your committee?

Mr. LEVER. Not at all, because they are not required to report to our committee.

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. Has this commission ever reported on it to anybody else?

Mr. HAWLEY. We reported, as the law required, at the beginning of this Congress, to this Congress, and it is a printed document of Congress.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment of the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. CULLOP].

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Chairman, I desire to address myself to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. CULLOP], which is now pending. I take it for granted, Mr. Chairman, that the Government must take care of the land it buys in the Appalachian Mountains, without regard to the question of how unwise the purchase may have been. Regardless of that, we shall have to take care of it.

Mr. LAMB. That is the very point I made.

Mr. MONDELL. But let me suggest to the committee that we passed a bill providing ultimately for the expenditure of $11,000,000 for the use of the commission in the purchase and, I think, for the care of these lands during the period covered by the bill.

Mr. LAMB. No; in that the gentleman is mistaken.

Mr. MONDELL. Well, I think when the bill was pending before the House that was the understanding on the part of the majority of Members of the House.

Mr. McLAUGHLIN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Wyoming yield to the gentleman from Michigan?

Mr. MONDELL. In just a moment. I say, Mr. Chairman, that the appropriation in the bill was intended to cover all the expenses connected with these lands.

Mr. LEVER. It could not be.

Mr. McLAUGHLIN. Mr. Chairman, I have in my hand a copy of the Weeks Act, and section 11 of that act says expressly that these lands, after they are purchased, shall be controlled by appropriations made by the bills presented by the Committee on Agriculture, the same as other national forests are controlled.

Mr. MONDELL. Where does the gentleman find that?

Mr. McLAUGHLIN. In section 11, which says—

That, subject to the provisions of the last preceding section, the lands acquired under this act shall be permanently reserved, held, and administered as national forest lands under the provisions of section 24 of the act approved March 3, 1891 (26 Stats. L., 1103), and acts supplemental to and amendatory thereof.

Mr. MONDELL. There is nothing whatever in that about caring for the lands so purchased. Of course, the cost of the care and maintenance of these reserves is to come out of that bill.

Mr. LAMB. Let me ask the gentleman a question right there.

Mr. MONDELL. Time flies.

Mr. LAMB. I will give the gentleman additional time.

Mr. MONDELL. Thank you.

Mr. LAMB. We did not pass the pure food and drug act and the insect act, and yet we have to provide money to carry on the administration of those acts.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Chairman, I contend that the House understood that the appropriations carried in the Weeks bill were to cover all the expenses incurred during the period during which those expenditures ran. There is nothing in that bill that would convey any other notion than that, and a fair interpretation of that bill would justify the striking out of this paragraph and inserting a provision whereby those expenditures should be paid out of the appropriations contained in the Appalachian appropriation bill.

Now, I want to ask the chairman of the committee a question. Is it or is it not true, as has been stated here, that the Forester has said, or has admitted, that the appropriation carried in this paragraph is made up of small sums clipped from the appropriations for the care of western forest reserves? Is that true?

Mr. LAMB. It is true in one respect, in that he apportioned this money out and made arrangements whereby $32,000 taken from the general lump sum should be held back for that purpose.

Mr. MONDELL. Now, on what theory can any such action as that be justified? Assuming, for the sake of argument, that these Appalachian reserves should be appropriated for in this bill, upon what theory can you take the moneys needed for the care of western forest reserves and apply them to these other purposes?

Mr. LAMB. It is not needed. Of course the gentleman would not object to the Forester arranging his lump sum when appropriated and having enough left for this purpose?

Mr. MONDELL. Do I understand that the Forester last year had more money than he needed for these reserves by about $300 per reserve?

Mr. LAMB. No; but can you not cut down your expenses and run a farm one year cheaper than another year?

Mr. MONDELL. Oh, yes; I know that. But you have no right to rob Peter to pay Paul.

Mr. LAMB. I knew the gentleman would quote Scripture before he got through.

Mr. MONDELL. That may be a quotation from Scripture.

Mr. LAMB. It ought to be.

Mr. MONDELL. It is true that there is no justification for taking from the appropriations for the western forests and applying the amount so taken to the Appalachian Forests.

Mr. LAMB. Not directly.

Mr. MONDELL. That is what has been done.

Mr. LAMB. Indirectly. He spares from his lump fund enough to administer these other forests.

Mr. MONDELL. In other words, the western forests are to pay for the administration of eastern forests. That is what is proposed, is it? We want to understand it. All we want is to have a clear understanding in regard to it.

Mr. LEVER. I shall be very glad to try to answer the gentleman's question.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. MONDELL. The chairman of the Committee on Agriculture was kind enough to say he would not object to my having an extension.

Mr. LAMB. I will yield to the gentleman three minutes more.

Mr. MONDELL. I think the chairman of the committee took more than three minutes of my time.

Mr. LAMB. The gentleman wants to cut down on our forests and we will cut down on his speeches. [Laughter.]

Mr. LEVER. In the time of the gentleman from Wyoming I will say that the Forester, in the memorandum furnished to the gentleman from California [Mr. RAKER], says:

A readjustment was made to make the appropriation conform more nearly to the actual needs of the different forests. In doing this the following reductions were made in California.

Then he states the reductions and says that certain other increases were made in California. It is true that the Forester says, in another letter to Judge RAKER, that some money was taken from all of these national forests to take care of the additional forests created during the year. One of these is the Appalachian Reserve. Another is the Ruby National Forest in Nevada, $3,580. Another is the Santa Rosa Forest in Nevada, $8,400. So that the Forester has not given it all to the Atlantic seaboard, but he has taken some of this money and put it onto these additional forests which have been taken in during the past year. Is that explanation satisfactory?

Mr. MONDELL. I am glad the gentleman has admitted it if it is a fact, but I regret the fact that the Forester has seen fit to take from the appropriation for the western forests without any reason therefor except that he needed the money somewhere else.

Mr. LEVER. And he says without hurting the service at all.

Mr. MONDELL. Possibly he did not care to ask Congress for any additional sum.

Mr. LEVER. Congress can not be held responsible for that, of course.

Mr. MONDELL. The Appalachian forests have been provided for by Congress, and I am not quarreling with that action; but if we are to have the Appalachian forests, we certainly should not expect them to be cared for at the expense of the western forests, and the gentleman will agree with me on that.

Mr. LEVER. But if the Forester tells the committee that he can administer the western forests as well as he did before with a reduction of $300 each, should the committee say nay to a proposition to reduce expenditures in the Government service?

Mr. MONDELL. Certainly not. I am one of those who have been insisting for years that the clerical force of the Forestry Service could be reduced without any damage to the national forests, and I would be the last man on this floor to object to any reasonable reduction in expenses not directly used in caring for the forests.

Mr. LAMB. We reduced the clerical force appropriation $55,000.

Mr. MONDELL. I understand there was some reduction, and I am glad it was made, but I notice that a greater reduction was made when you came to the matter of permanent improvements; and if there is any appropriation that ought to be increased that is the one.

Mr. LAMB. Let us cross that bridge when we get to it.

Mr. MONDELL. We might tramp over the planks of that bridge a little now. But there is no justification whatever for taking from the appropriation for the western forests a sufficient sum to administer the Appalachian forest simply because they need the money.

Mr. LAMB. We did not do that. What we did was through Mr. Graves's own suggestion. We called him in and asked him what he could administer the forest reserves for. He comes in and says he can do it for this amount we give him, and we could not object, and I do not think the gentleman from Wyoming ought to object.

Mr. MONDELL. We object to taking the money from the western reserves for the purpose of administering the Appalachian forest.

Mr. PAYNE. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from Wyoming has expressed surprise that we have not got money enough to run the Appalachian Forest Reserve, and having ascertained that, he has expressed surprise that the forestry men in charge have gone after the first dollar in sight that was appropriated for that or any kindred purpose.

I am amazed at the gentleman from Wyoming. I remember, lo, these many years, that the gentleman from Wyoming has been asking for appropriations for irrigating certain arid lands in his section, and Congress was induced to pass legislation appropriating large sums of money for the irrigation of these lands, appropriating all the money that should be received from the sale of public lands. I remember some very solemn promises—of course, I do not want to embarrass the gentleman from Wyoming by saying that he was the author of any of them—that that entire expense was to be reimbursed out of money realized from the sale of these irrigated lands as time went on.

I remember something about grabbing all the money in sight, in addition to the millions received from the irrigated land, and finally, when that was exhausted, some gentlemen appeared before the Committee on Ways and Means in favor of a bonding proposition of $30,000,000 to procure money to get the irrigated lands out of a hole, and especially to get the people who were induced to go out there by the overzealous agents of the Government, selected from the localities of these lands, to help them out so that they might have irrigation sooner and have work while waiting on irrigation projects.

I remember that the gentleman from Wyoming was particularly eloquent, as he always is when there is an appropriation in sight. [Laughter.] I think if the Appalachian friends could retain him in some way for that range he would get all the money that was necessary for that in addition to getting money for western reserves, as he did for the irrigated lands. He felt so badly that the Ways and Means Committee finally voted a bonding bill for $20,000,000, but cut out a section or two of the original act, covering arid lands where there was no water. I do not think that it affected particularly the lands in the gentleman's State, because there was some water somewhere near them, but it cut out the irrigated land where there was not any water.

I remember a good many tears were shed over that. I do not know that the gentleman from Wyoming was interested in that, and I do not remember any tears that he shed on that account. What I was trying to get at is that the gentleman from Wyoming should not be surprised when any project comes up here to see them try to grab money that belongs to something else, and when they get that exhausted to come in and ask us to issue bonds to keep them out of bankruptcy. [Applause.]

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Chairman, how much time do I have to answer the gentleman's eloquent statement?

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Wyoming had expired when the gentleman from New York arose. The gentleman from New York was proceeding by unanimous consent.

Mr. MONDELL. I think I ought to have three minutes to answer the gentleman from New York.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Wyoming asks unanimous consent to proceed for three minutes. Is there objection? There was no objection.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Chairman, I do not intend to deny, in fact I could not well deny, the soft impeachment of the gentleman from New York, that when we found we needed more money for irrigation purposes we asked for it. All we asked for was money rusting in the Treasury. But this is a proposition to take money away from another project, which the Forestry Service has insisted heretofore it needed, and use it on another. Have they finally concluded they need the money more in the Appalachians than they do in the Rocky Mountains, and so rob the Rocky Mountains for the benefit of the Appalachians? We are now trying to maintain a good-natured attitude toward the Appalachian Forest Reserves, but I fear that we can not if gentlemen insist on robbing our reserves of proper appropriations in order to appropriate money for the maintenance of the Appalachian Reserves. I notice this, that while you take this money away from our reserves at the rate of 2 cents an acre—for that is all it costs out there, and that is enough—you apply it to the Appalachian Reserves at the rate of 20 cents an acre, so that it is going to cost, right off the bat, 10 times as much per acre to take care of this Appalachian land as it does to take care of the western forest land.

Mr. LAMB. Oh, no; I challenge that statement.

Mr. MONDELL. The gentleman can figure it out for himself—$34,000 for 155,000 acres.

Mr. LAMB. This money had not been allotted. This money is in reserve, in case they buy this land. Perhaps not one-fourth of this money will be expended.

Mr. MONDELL. It must have been appropriated in view of the amount purchased by the commission, of which my friend from Oregon [Mr. HAWLEY] is a member.

Mr. HAWLEY. Mr. Chairman, in addition to the lands already purchased, there are yet some $800,000 for the purchase of additional lands, which must be cared for under this item. This item is a tentative item. Next year the Forester will know from actual experience how much to ask for.

Mr. MONDELL. And then it will be much larger.

Mr. HAWLEY. I do not know.

Mr. MONDELL. Have any of the lands that have been purchased been purchased with the understanding that they could be logged by the present owners before title passes to the Government?

Mr. HAWLEY. They have been purchased with this understanding, that title shall pass to the Government immediately, but they shall have the right to log the land under certain conditions.

Mr. MONDELL. So that by the time the Government actually secures the lands, which you purchase, they will have been logged over.

Mr. HAWLEY. We buy them on the basis of logged-over lands.

Mr. MONDELL. And you are paying as high as $8 an acre for logged-over lands?

Mr. HAWLEY. No; less than $4 an acre for logged-over land.

Mr. MONDELL. But they are all logged over or will be, will they not?

Mr. HAWLEY. No; not all of them.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I understand the amendment of the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. CULLOP] to be to strike out the appropriation for the Appalachian forests. I hope that amendment will not be agreed to. I was one of those who believed in the creation of the commission for the purchase of the Appalachian and White Mountain forests, and I still believe in those forests, and while it may be true that the prices which we pay for the land are higher than was named by those gentlemen who are enthusiastic for the passage of the bill before it was passed, that is a usual occurrence. No one here was deceived into the belief that much of this land would be purchased at the basis of $1 an acre or $2 an acre, although I am glad to learn that one of the main purchases is stated to be on the basis of between $3 and $4 an acre. Nor is the gentleman from Wyoming [Mr. MONDELL] correct in thinking that the permanent appropriation was intended to provide for the care of the forests. The law providing for the commission and the purchase of the lands makes a permanent appropriation for several years for the acquirement of the property.

Mr. SIMS. Mr. Chairman, may I ask the gentleman a question?

Mr. MANN. Yes.

Mr. SIMS. I thought the argument was made that we were buying these lands to reforest them and not to deforest them. I understand they are now selling the forest off before they are buying the lands.

Mr. MANN. The gentleman from Tennessee has not his usually very accurate memory on the subject or he would know—

Mr. SIMS. I have a very sad recollection of the success of that scheme.

Mr. MANN. The gentleman from Tennessee has not an accurate memory of the subject or he would know that the bill itself provides for the purchase of land subject to mining claims and subject to the cutting of the timber on them. That was carried in the law itself, and it was the intention for the Government to buy land which would be mainly useful for the raising or culture of trees, but the Government not desiring to buy merchantable timber provided in the law so that merchantable timber might be cut off by the sellers of the land even after the Government had acquired the title, the purpose of the Government being to use land, which otherwise would be practically valueless, for the raising of timber for succeeding generations.

Mr. SIMS. And let me ask if the term "merchantable timber" is not exceedingly flexible? You may sell it from the size of your wrist up to the size of a 5-foot tree, and now we are going to cut it off in order to regrow it.

Mr. MANN. Oh, no; we are going to cut off the merchantable timber on the land, only we were paying less for the land itself upon which we propose to raise merchantable timber in the future. The absolute truth, which no one will deny, is that no one in this country as a private individual can afford to raise forest trees upon this land and protect it from fire, and that the only way it can be done is through governmental aid.

Mr. FOWLER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MANN. I yield.

Mr. FOWLER. I want to ask the gentleman if any of these forests have been established yet?

Mr. MANN. Well, in one sense they have been and in one sense they have not. The commission is going to purchase four tracts of land, but the purchase has not been concluded.

Mr. FOWLER. And do not they give the owners of this land 10 years to cut off the timber after title has been conveyed to the United States?

Mr. MANN. Well, I do not know how long a time they give, but they are permitted to give under the law which is here—if the gentleman will read section 9 he will see how it is covered.

Mr. FOWLER. I have just read it, but what I am getting after, if the gentleman will be kind enough, is I want to know what use this $32,000 could be made of here if it is true that 10 years are given to the owners of the land in which to cut off the timber?

Mr. LAMB. I can explain that.

Mr. MANN. The gentleman can explain it in his own time. I do not know how much of this $32,000 ought to be used. I regret myself that the Forester has seen fit to increase this amount or any other amount by reducing the amount for other national forests, if that is necessary. I do not think anyone would have made a reduction of $300 for each national forest now upon any basis excepting an arbitrary one. We are going to acquire this land in this southern Appalachian Range and the White Mountains Range for the real purpose which I have indicated; the theoretical purpose is for the protection of the waters in the navigable streams. That was because certain gentlemen had certain constitutional scruples, which did not bother me, because I thought we had the power under the general authority of the Government to buy the land, and therefore it was argued this was to be for the protection of watersheds and water; and then, as time goes on, for large quantities of lands on the mountain tops, where the people can not afford to protect the growth of trees there either from fire or marauders, it is the duty of the General Government to make provision, so that those who come after us may have some timber and forest for use, as we have enjoyed the bounties of nature which were left to us from those who preceded us.

Mr. BARTLETT. Mr. Chairman, just one word. Mr. Chairman, I hope the motion to strike out this provision will not prevail, and I think I can with as much grace as anyone express that hope, because at no time prior to the acquisition of this Appalachian region and the White Mountain region had I been an advocate of the proposed purchase. I first objected to it when there was a bill which in plain terms and words proposed that Congress should acquire this Appalachian and White Mountain forest country for the purpose of making a forest reserve, and I opposed it because I did not believe that Congress had the constitutional power or right or, if it did have the constitutional power and right, that it was a proper governmental policy that the Government of the United States should go into those States where it owned no public domain and acquire, either by purchase or condemnation, the forests of those States and use them for forest reserves, and I planted myself on the ground that Congress had no constitutional power to make such an acquisition, and I was sustained in that view by the unanimous report of the Judiciary Committee of this House, which passed upon resolutions submitted to them by the House, and I was further sustained in the contention afterwards by a decision of the Supreme Court of the United States in the case of Colorado against Kansas. But that has all passed beyond the domain of discussion here. Congress saw fit to pass that bill under the exercise of the authority we call the commerce power in the Constitution, "to regulate commerce between the States and foreign nations and Indian tribes," the power it has exercised to deepen or to widen or to improve the navigable streams of this country, claiming that as you might go down to the mouth of a stream and remove an obstruction in order to make the river navigable you could make the whole river navigable, and therefore they had the right to preserve the head waters of those streams by preserving the forests. And it was shown that the denudation of the forests of this region and the careless way of cutting the timber and destroying it and permitting it to be burned aided in the clogging of the rivers not only at their heads but all the way down.

The evidence from men who had experience and knowledge was before the committee, which I heard, when this resolution was investigated. The investigation showed that navigable streams were impeded and clogged by reason of the fact that forests were being denuded and wasted. I did not agree with the view of those who were as wise as I am, and probably wiser. But they decided, against my vote, to buy this property, and, having embarked upon that policy, it becomes the duty of Congress to take care of it and preserve the property that we have bought and for which we have spent many thousands of dollars and for which we will spend millions more. It is just as much our duty to preserve it as if we had purchased land and erected a building thereon, where we would be under obligations to take care of it and preserve it for the purpose for which Representatives in Congress purchased it. And, therefore, I have no hesitancy in voting for this appropriation.

Mr. LAMB. Mr. Chairman, I move to close debate on this paragraph.

Mr. FOWLER. Mr. Chairman, I am anxious to vote for this measure if it is a good one—

Mr. BARTLETT. I yield.

Mr. FOWLER. But I want to ask the gentleman a question.

Mr. BARTLETT. I yield.

Mr. FOWLER. Is it not a fact that no forest reservations have yet been opened upon this land?

Mr. BARTLETT. I know it to be a fact that it has been agreed that quite a quantity of the land is to be purchased by the commission to be—

Mr. FOWLER. Is it not a fact that the Government is giving the owners of the land 10 years to cut the timber off now?

Mr. LAMB. I know that question better than my friend does.

Mr. BARTLETT. Permit me to say—

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. BARTLETT] has expired.

Mr. FOWLER. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman have three minutes more.

Mr. BARTLETT. I want only a minute.

Mr. FOWLER. I want this information—

Mr. BARTLETT. The gentleman can get his own time.

I believe, knowing the character of the men who have been appointed to carry out that law, that its provisions have been complied with to the letter.

Mr. SIMS and Mr. FOWLER rose.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will recognize the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. Sims].

Mr. SIMS. I do not know specifically what the motion is, but I suppose it is to strike out any money to carry out the provision of a bad law.

Mr. LAMB. The motion is to strike out all of this paragraph appropriating money for the use of these forests.

Mr. SIMS. To buy more land?

Mr. LAMB. You have got that all wrong. This is to take care of the forests.

Mr. SIMS. I mean the Appalachian forests.

Mr. LAMB. Yes.

Mr. SIMS. Mr. Chairman, that matter was contemplated here for years and years, and the great and stalwart man from Illinois [Mr. CANNON], then Speaker of the House, for a long time prevented that piece of graft, but finally New England got too strong, and they overpowered him and dipped their hands into the Treasury to buy a lot of worn and wasted hilltops in the White Mountain region.

Mr. HIGGINS. Does not the gentleman know that there has not been a rod of land bought in New England under that act?

Mr. SIMS. I said to buy it.

Mr. HIGGINS. You said that New England dipped its hands into the Treasury.

Mr. SIMS. You had your mountain tops that nobody would buy but the Government.

Mr. HIGGINS. There have been hundreds of acres of land bought in Tennessee and not a rod in New England.

Mr. SIMS. Nobody would buy it.

Mr. HIGGINS. In Tennessee?

Mr. SIMS. Anywhere. Now, the statement has been made here that we are going to increase the rainfall by reforestation, in order that the moisture may be held back and to collect a reservoir of rain to run down the valleys in the summer to keep the rivers from running low. A great scientific argument!

Mr. LEVER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SIMS. In a moment.

Mr. LEVER. My friend over here wants to protect forests from fire.

Mr. LAMB. I want to know who has the floor.

Mr. SIMS. I have it. I was recognized.

Mr. LAMB. I thought you were just an interloper.

Mr. SIMS. I asked for time and got it.

The CHAIRMAN. The committee will be in order. The regular order is the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. Sims].

Mr. SIMS. The cry is to protect these old worn-out hilltops from fire. I want to protect the Treasury of the United States from fire.

Now, to-day petitions came to me asking me to vote for an old-age pension law. Well, between a lot of old, decrepit, half-starved people and a law that the old, worn-out mountain tops must be purchased and reforested at public expense, the pensions appeal more strongly to me.

I think it is absolutely a foolish piece of legislation. The law ought never to have been passed, and the best thing to do now is to refuse to appropriate to carry out a foolish law and repeal it just as quickly as possible.

Why, Mr. Chairman, if you want to do something to benefit mankind, if the Government wants to do anything of that sort, let it bear the expense of draining vast areas of swamp lands that are exceedingly productive as soon as they are drained. That will produce food products upon which men can live. That would be a useful enterprise, not like this thing of having a lot of waste land up there for the benefit of gentlemen who have already made their fortunes by allowing them permits to go onto that area and hunt or fish, and for a lot of scientific men to calculate how long it will take, after cutting down all the trees, to have them grow again. What good will such a project do me if I have to wait for years and years for the water to come down the watersheds in that way? [Laughter and applause.]

The House went wild when that Appalachian Park bill was considered. Poor Uncle Joe was sandbagged by New England. [Laughter.] We on our side could not prevent it. We could not get the votes to prevent it. Let us confine ourselves to buying the things that the Government needs and what the people need, and not go off upon fine-spun theories and into the vagaries of some scientists who calculate how many millions of years ago the hills of China had trees on them and how many hundred years it will take to produce new trees on those denuded areas. [Applause.]

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Tennessee yield to the gentleman from Illinois?

Mr. SIMS. Yes.

Mr. MADDEN. Does the gentleman from Tennessee know that this commission has just purchased 80,000 acres of land in Tennessee for the purpose of which he has been talking?

Mr. SIMS. I do not know, but I suppose the commission will buy land where it is for sale. I know they could not buy it where it is not for sale, because condemnation proceedings were not provided for in the Appalachian Park bill. You can buy that which is for sale. But nobody wants to buy anything when the Government is the only purchaser of that thing.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. SIMS. Mr. Chairman, I ask for five minutes more.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. Sims] asks unanimous consent that he may proceed for five minutes more. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. SIMS. Mr. Chairman, I have seen cases of this very kind come up here in the District of Columbia when I was a member of the committee having jurisdiction of those subjects. Now, a lot of gentlemen came up here with a scheme involving the purchase of a lot of old gullies and hillsides and unused land which it would take hundreds of thousands of dollars to improve, and they would say, "We have got an option on it, and we want to let the Government buy it before the price goes so high that the Government will not have enough money to pay for it. It is a bargain-counter proposition." In all such cases nobody else would have those lands. That is the way with the New England and Appalachian hilltops. Nobody wants them. But the minute you provide a large appropriation to buy them, that minute gentlemen get options on them. And no wonder, if they can retain the right to cut everything of value off of them; they are willing to sell the rock foundation, which it took the Lord all the years since the foundation of the world to grow trees upon; and yet they now give us an estimate of the exact number of years in which to do that. [Laughter.]

Mr. LAMB. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Tennessee yield to the gentleman from Virginia?

Mr. SIMS. With pleasure.

Mr. LAMB. Does not the gentleman credit the capacity of the commission sufficiently to suppose that those gentlemen will purchase these lands under proper conditions and terms, and that they will perform their work faithfully and conscientiously? They are not going to buy anything that is of no value.

Mr. SIMS. Oh, it is in this case just as it was when that other matter was presented to us in the Committee on the District of Columbia. When this proposition was taken up we were told that we should purchase the land on these mountain tops and stop the denuding of the forests in order that the rainfall might be conserved. The floods came down and washed away a lot of cotton mills in the district of my good friend from South Carolina [Mr. LEVER], and he did not want that to recur again. I do not blame him for feeling that way, because those mills are expensive. They wanted to buy up these hills and mountain tops to reforest them or increase the forests, or do something by which the floods would not run down in such a rapid and unchecked torrent as to wash away the industries of that State. I do not blame my friend from South Carolina for that.

Mr. LEVER. And nobody denies that the absorption of the rainfall by the forests will check the floods.

Mr. SIMS. Not a bit of it. But your cotton mills will wear out a thousand times over before there will be forests enough to check the floods in those mountains. We have it from scientific sources; it has been shown by the Weather service that these things are governed by great influences that it is utterly impossible for man, in his puny insignificance, to prevent, alter, or change. Take this tract of 80,000 acres. An aviator could go over the country looking for it, and it would be such a little speck on the landscape that he could not find it. Yet a great storm comes along, covering thousands and thousands of miles, and pours down the rain and forgets that there is any such thing as a little forest reserve there. The lumberman having cut off all the trees, and nothing but the brush being left, no good is done, except to somebody who gets money from the Government for that which he could not get from any other source under heaven.

Mr. BUTLER. Is there much land for sale at three or four dollars an acre in that region?

Mr. SIMS. The price will be $10 an acre in a little while. The Government is able to pay. They say, "Why not put up the price?" That is the way it is here in the District of Columbia.

Mr. BUTLER. The commission is not compelled to buy.

Mr. SIMS. If you go to condemn a piece of land in this District, experts on valuation are sworn to give estimates of the value, and they get as high as $50 a day for their evidence, as I have heard. It is no trouble to get professional witnesses to increase the value of land. Hundreds of millions of acres of old hilltops can be bought if you will keep raising money by indirect taxation. This is all due to the vicious system of indirect taxation.

Mr. HAWLEY. In the matter of cutting trees, I think the gentleman is in error as to the denudation of the land. There are trees of a number of species growing on these lands to be purchased in Tennessee, and only three or four of them will be cut—the poplar, the chestnut, and one or two others—and the remainder will be left on the land for forest cover.

Mr. LAMB. And all the cutting will be done under the supervision of the Government.

Mr. SIMS. And the supervision costs as much as you get out of the timber.

Mr. LEVER. Mr. Chairman, I do not desire to delay a vote on this proposition, and I would not speak, except for the fact that I feel that the attitude of the Committee on Agriculture on this proposition should be known.

The question as to whether Congress made a mistake or did not make a mistake in the enactment of the Weeks-Lever law, which provides for the purchase of certain lands at the head of navigable streams in the White Mountains and the Appalachian Ranges, or as to whether that purchase was wise or unwise, is not now under discussion. The fact is that the law has been passed, that it has been acted upon by both the legislative and executive departments of the Government, and under the provisions of the law the various bureaus of the Government are making purchases of this land. The practical question for the committee is, Shall Congress appropriate money for the protection of property bought under an act of Congress or shall Congress decide that its former action was unwise in the passage of this act? This is the practical proposition involved, and all else is entirely not germane. I maintain—and I had something to do with the passage of this law—that there has not been passed at this Congress, certainly since I have been a Member of it, a piece of legislation that looked further into the future and means more to posterity than the passage of the so-called Weeks-Lever bill. For my own part, in the passage of that act, I have no apologies. On the contrary, I am quite proud of that part of my poor services in this House.

But we are not dealing with that proposition; that is behind us. The proposition before us now is, Shall this Congress appropriate money for the Forestry Service for the protection of the lands bought under that act? What are you going to do about it? We have appointed a commission under the terms of the Weeks-Lever Act to make this purchase. Are you proposing by this amendment to permit this property to become kicked and cuffed about by the marauder, by the hunter, by the fellow who does not care where he drops his matches in the forest? Is this Government property to be made the prey of the indifferent and the careless citizens of the country, or shall we protect it as we are protecting 159 other forests of the National Government in the West, as provided for in this bill? That is all there is to it. We have raised a lot of hurrah about it. We have discussed propositions that have been passed upon and settled. The plain proposition is whether this Congress proposes now to appropriate sufficient money, as recommended by the officers of the Government, for the protection of the property which belongs to it. Mr. Chairman, I ask for a vote.

Mr. FOWLER. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman will not cut off debate at this time.

Mr. LAMB. I ask that the gentleman be recognized for five minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois is recognized for five minutes.

Mr. FOWLER. Mr. Chairman, the proposition in this paragraph of the bill is to appropriate $32,590 to protect the forests from fires in what is known as the Appalachian Forest Reservation. While I am not acquainted with all of the facts surrounding the purchase of that proposed reservation of 80,000 acres of mountainous land in eastern Tennessee, I am acquainted with some of the salient features.

Mr. TILSON. The White Mountain Range is also provided for.

Mr. FOWLER. Yes; I understand that the White Mountains went in, and I understand that other mountains are to go in, if they can get there, and they will be taken in unless some friends of honest legislation have influence enough to keep out of future purchases some of the rocky and barren wastes of mountain stretches in different portions of the country.

Mr. LEVER. They ought to have them all.

Mr. FOWLER. Yes; "they ought to have them all," and certain designing fellows are planning to sell all of them to the United States for the purpose of unloading upon the people of this country these waste lands which are absolutely valueless for any purpose whatever. Much less are they valuable for forest reserves. While I am in favor of preserving the forests of this country, and especially the hardwood forests, yet I am not willing to consent to a proposition to buy waste lands under the name of "improvements for river navigation," and thereafter setting apart these lands as forest reserves, when, at the same time, I know there is not enough soil to grow a tree a foot thick in a hundred years. I understand that the purchase of this tract of land will cost the Government millions of dollars, in the first instance, and that it will be cited in future Congresses as a precedent for the purpose of purchasing other barren, mountainous land at a vast expense to the people of this country, thereby giving a set of land sharks an opportunity to take options on these waste lands for a trifle in advance of their sale to the Government and thereafter, by manipulation of certain designing statesmen, they will be unloaded upon the taxpayers of this country at a vast profit to the land shark.

But, Mr. Chairman, that is not the question which I desire to discuss. I want to be fair with the committee who reported out this bill and recommended its passage, including the paragraph under discussion. I understand that the original design of a law which passed during the Sixty-first Congress gave authority to establish forest reservations under the plea of improvement to navigable streams. I understand that a forest reservation commission was created by that law with power to examine territory and purchase reservations at an expense to the United States of $11,000,000. Under this power, I understand, they have selected what is known as the Appalachian Forest Reservation, which is now in process of being established but yet not completed. The law under which this commission is authorized to act provides, among other things, that the commission may permit the owners of the land to reserve the timber and minerals thereon. Under this power I understand that this commission—and I get my information from one of the commissioners—has permitted the owners of these lands to reserve the timber, and that they have been given a period of 10 years in which to cut, manufacture, and remove the same from said lands.

It will be seen that all that the Government gets is simply the land, without any timber, yet timber being the very object for which it is contended by the friends of the law this reservation was intended to conserve. The Government will have on its hands the land at least 10 years without a chance for a forest reservation, and it will be 10 years after the purchase of the land before the Government will get an opportunity to begin to grow a forest.

This paragraph of the bill proposes to appropriate $32,500 to protect the forests on this land from fire during the next fiscal year—a forest which does not belong to the United States, either in whole or in part, but wholly belongs to the original owners of the land. They not only sold this land to the Government at an enormous and unreasonable price, but now they have the effrontery to ask Congress to appropriate this unreasonable sum to protect their own timber from forest fires. This is the essence of cheek; a fraud so patent on its face, like Banquo's ghost it ought to rise up to frighten even its friends away from its support.

Mr. LEVER. What does the gentleman think about it?

Mr. FOWLER. If we permit this appropriation to be made by this Congress, other bills will come in annually for the next 10 years with an appropriation increasing in amount each succeeding year, I apprehend, asking Congress to vote those large sums of money out of the Treasury to protect the individual timber of these land speculators, who will derive the entire benefit thereof at the expense of the taxpayers of the United States. [Applause.] I want it clearly understood that I am opposed to such legislation, and will vote against this item of the bill.

My colleague from South Carolina [Mr. LEVER] wants to know what I think about such legislation. To be plain and not misunderstood, and without casting reflections upon the gentleman or any of the committee, I think it is a fraud which ought to be condemned by every Member of this House.

I once heard of a circuit judge down in Missouri who was supported by a colored politician in his first race, and during his candidacy for reelection he met the colored politician with a "How are you, Sam? Am glad to see you. I am depending upon you to carry the colored vote for me." "You're is my second choice," replied the colored man. The judge, becoming anxious, inquired as to who was his first choice. "My first choice is anybody to beat you're." I am for anything to beat this appropriation, and will be very glad to see enough votes cast against it to insure its defeat on final passage of the bill.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Indiana.

The amendment was considered and rejected.

The Clerk read as follows:

For fighting forest fires and for other unforeseen emergencies, $150,000.

Mr. RAKER. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment, which I send to the desk and ask to have read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Insert, between lines 2 and 3, on page 46, the following:

"That the War Department be, and it hereby is, authorized in its discretion to station Federal troops in the national forests within the State of California, during the months of July, August, and September each year, and in case of an emergency to be used for the purpose of preventing and fighting forest fires and protecting such national forests from fire."

Mr. LAMB. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order on that.

Mr. HAY. Mr. Chairman, I reserve the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. A point of order has been made on the paragraph. In the opinion of the Chair the point of order is well taken. The point of order is therefore sustained, and the Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

For the purchase and maintenance of necessary field, office, and laboratory supplies, instruments and equipment, $155,000.

Mr. MARTIN of South Dakota. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment, which I send to the desk and ask to have read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 46, after line 5, insert:

"To be expended under the direction of the Secretary of Agriculture for survey and listing of lands within forest reserves chiefly valuable for agriculture and describing the same by metes and bounds, or otherwise, as required by the act of June 11, 1906, and the act of March 3, 1899, $50,000: Provided, however, That any such survey and the plat and field notes thereof paid for out of this appropriation shall be made by an employee of the Forest Service under the direction of the United States surveyor general, but no land listed under the act of June 11, 1906, shall pass from the forest until patent issues."

Mr. LAMB. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order on that.

Mr. MARTIN of South Dakota. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman reserve the point of order?

Mr. LAMB. Mr. Chairman, I reserve the point of order.

Mr. MARTIN of South Dakota. Mr. Chairman, the act of 1906, providing for settlement upon agricultural lands in forest reserves, contains a provision that the Secretary of Agriculture shall investigate and list portions of the forest which are adapted to agriculture, and that this may be done by metes and bounds, or otherwise. The procedure which has grown out of that legislation has been that when a settler applies for a certain piece of land the Department of Agriculture, through one of its officers, proceeds to mark the exterior boundaries of that piece of land by metes and bounds. It amounts to a preliminary survey of the lands, because in almost all instances these tracts are comparatively small and irregular in character. The law provides that the settler, when he comes to settle on the land and make his homestead entry, must have a plat approved by the surveyor general of the State describing the lands by metes and bounds, or otherwise. As a result of this there has grown up practically a duplication of the work. The Department of Agriculture is authorized under the law to mark or list the lands by metes and bounds, but the Land Department, when it comes to pass upon the homestead entry, must have a survey which is approved by the surveyor general of the State, who is under the direction of the General Land Office in the Interior Department. The result is there are two sets of markings or surveys, the first at the expense of the Government, and the other must be performed by the settler when he secures patent upon his entry. It has proved a great hardship on the settlers in the forest reserves because of the expense. It has caused them large expenditure and is the only class of cases where the Government does not provide the surveys under our system of homesteading. I have known instances where these expenses have often run as high as $200 to the homesteader for marking the boundary.

The Department of the Interior and the Department of Agriculture have been endeavoring to work out a system by which this duplication will be avoided. As a result a proposition has been put forth in writing by the Secretary of Agriculture, and I will put it into the RECORD at this point, proposing that some one in each reserve, in the employ of the Forest Service, who has to do this listing shall be approved as a surveyor by the Commissioner of the General Land Office, in the Interior Department, so that he may make this original list under the direction of the Interior Department, and in that way avoid the second survey, the expense of which has been thrown on the settler in each instance. Under date of September 19, 1911, the Secretary of the Interior, by way of letter to the Secretary of Agriculture, has approved of that scheme, so that they have announced that hereafter the listing will be done in this manner by an officer in the employ of the Forest Service, under the approval of the Department of the Interior, and so save the settler the unnecessary expense of going over these same lands with another surveyor. It is a proposition that ought to meet with commendation. It has been started by those officers under the appropriations already at their disposal. The proposition to which I have referred is contained in the following correspondence:

DECEMBER 31, 1910.

The honorable the SECRETARY OF THE INTERIOR.

SIR: Referring to your letter (10-42043 "E." W. F. P.) of July 28, 1910, concerning proposed cooperation in the homestead entry surveys within national forests, and previous correspondence on the same subject, I have the honor to advise you that the Comptroller of the Treasury and the Solicitor of this department have recently held that lands listed under the act of June 11, 1906, are thereby segregated from the national forests; that the Secretary of Agriculture has no authority to expend any of the appropriations of his department to aid in the survey of such lands or lands embraced in entries made in accordance with the act of June 11, 1906, because they are not a part of the national forests, and that a survey of such lands is not a duty imposed upon the Interior Department "with respect to the national forests." Since your letter of July 28 relates wholly to the survey of lands after they are listed, or after they have been entered in accordance with the act of June 11, 1906, it is apparent that further consideration can not be given to the plan therein proposed.

However, it is a duty imposed by law upon the Commissioner of the General Land Office, under the direction of the Secretary of the Interior, to survey the public lands, including "lands within boundaries of forest reservations"; also the act of May 23, 1908 (33 Stat., 2511), provides that:

"Hereafter officials of the Forest Service designated by the Secretary of Agriculture, * * * with respect to the national forests, shall aid the other Federal bureaus and departments, on request from them, in the performance of the duties imposed upon them by law."

And in his opinion of October 20, 1910, the Comptroller of the Treasury says:

"If the proposed survey by the Secretary of the Interior is to locate and bound the lands so as to enable the Secretary of Agriculture to 'list and describe such lands by metes and bounds or otherwise,' as chiefly valuable for agricultural purposes, under the act of June 11, 1906, I am of the opinion that such lands are still parts of the forest reserve, and under the act of May 23, 1908, supra, you are authorized to designate officials of your department to aid the Department of the Interior in effecting said surveys and pay their salaries and expenses from the appropriations indicated by you."

With a view, therefore, to securing such cooperation between the two departments, when application for listing is made under the act of June 11, 1906, as will obviate the necessity for two surveys of the same tract, and will enable the survey made as a basis for listing to be utilized also as a basis for patent, I have the honor to ask your consideration of the following suggestions: (1) That, in order to comply with the conditions imposed by the act of May 23, 1908, the Secretary of the Interior request of the Secretary of Agriculture that he render him such aid as he can in the survey of lands within the boundaries of national forests; (2) that the Secretary of Agriculture, in response thereto, will cause to be filed in the office of the various surveyors general, through the Secretary of the Interior, a list of competent land surveyors in the employ of the Forest Service; (3) that when an application is made to list a tract of land that will require a survey by metes and bounds under the act of June 11, 1906, and it has been determined by the proper forestry officers that such tract is of the character that may be listed, and the applicant has expressed a willingness to deposit a sum sufficient to cover the expense of the surveyor general's office in connection with the survey of such tract, a copy of such application will be forwarded to the proper surveyor general by the district forester, with a recommendation that the survey be made by one of the surveyors in the employ of the Forest Service whose name appears on the list on file in the surveyor general's office; (4) that the surveyor general shall then designate an employee of the Forest Service, whose name appears on the list in his office, to make a survey of the lands, the listing of which has been applied for, and transmit to the district forester the name of the employee designated, together with an estimate of what the expense of examining such survey in his office will be; (5) when such designation and estimate are received by the district forester the applicant will be immediately informed thereof. If he makes the deposit required by the surveyor general, the survey will be made under the direction and in accordance with the instructions of that official by such employee of the Forest Service; provided, however, that all surveys made in Lawrence and Pennington Counties, S. Dak., must be by metes and bounds as is required by section 4 of the act of June 11, 1906; (6) that when the survey is completed plats and field notes in sextuplicate shall be prepared by the surveyor, three sets of which shall be transmitted to the surveyor general, one kept on file in the office of the district forester, one sent to the supervisor, and the other forwarded with the listing letter to the Secretary of the Interior; (7) the expense of examining such survey in the surveyor general's office shall be paid from the deposit made by the applicant. When such survey is approved, two sets of the plats and field notes on file in the surveyor general's office shall, on demand of the applicant or entryman, be filed in the local land office and shall be accepted as a basis for patent, one set of such plats and field notes to be posted by the applicant on the ground during the period of advertising final proof, as required by law.

Before patent can issue to a tract of land entered under provision of the act of June 11, 1906, it is provided that the entryman shall, "within five years of the date of making settlement, file with the required proof of residence and cultivation a plat and field notes of the lands entered, made by or under the direction of the United States Surveyor General, etc." It is not prescribed that this survey must be made after entry. Under the practice now in vogue there is one survey made as a basis for listing, and when patent is desired another is made under the direction of the Surveyor General. The expense of the second survey is borne by the entryman, and it is for the purpose of relieving him of that burden, which does not have to be borne by settlers on unsurveyed, unreserved public lands, and for the purpose of preventing a duplication of work that these suggestions are made. It is hoped the plan proposed may accomplish both purposes.

I shall be glad if you will advise me at as early a date as is consistent with the proper transaction of the public business whether the suggestions herein made meet with your approval.

I have the honor to be, sir,

Very respectfully, your obedient servant,

(Signed) JAMES WILSON,
Secretary.

DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR,
Washington, September 19, 1911.

THE SECRETARY OF AGRICULTURE.

SIR: This department is in receipt of your letter of December 31, 1910, relative to a proposed cooperation of the two departments in the matter of surveys of homestead entries within national forests under the act of June 11, 1906 (34 Stat., 233), and the act of May 30, 1908 (35 Stat., 554), amendatory thereof, stating that the Comptroller of the Treasury and the Solicitor of the Department of Agriculture have held that lands listed under the act of June 11, 1906, are segregated from the national forests, and there is no authority to expend any part of the appropriation for the Agricultural Department for said surveys, as they are not, after such segregation, a part of the national forests.

The correctness of that ruling can not be questioned; but it is not an obstacle to the purpose sought to be accomplished by cooperation of the two departments, which is to avoid duplication of unnecessary work by having a listing survey made under authority of the Department of Agriculture, executed by competent surveyors and in such manner as to allow of its acceptance by the Land Department as the public-land survey and as the basis for a patent, thus saving to the settler the unnecessary execution of a second survey.

In many instances the listing of lands by the Secretary of Agriculture, under authority of said act, is confined to individual claims or rights and the listing is made by metes and bounds. It is in such cases that the cooperation between the two departments is especially desirable, inasmuch as the listing of the lands by the Secretary of Agriculture is a determination of the boundaries of the claim and no different survey can be made of such lands.

The act authorizes the Secretary of Agriculture, upon application or otherwise, to examine and ascertain as to the location and extent of the land within temporary or permanent forest reserves which, in his opinion, may be occupied for agricultural purposes and to list and describe the same by metes and bounds or otherwise. Upon the filing of such lists or description the Secretary of the Interior is required to declare the lands so listed open to entry in tracts of not exceeding 160 acres in area, not exceeding 1 mile in length.

An entryman desiring to obtain patent to any land described by metes and bounds is required to file with his proof a plat and field notes of the lands entered made by and under the direction of the surveyor general of the State in which the land is located, showing accurately the boundaries of such land, which shall be distinctly marked by monuments on the ground; that is, the applicant is required to cause such unsurveyed lands to be surveyed at his own expense by a reliable and competent surveyor to be designated by the surveyor general at some time before he makes final proof. Amended Regulations (38 L. D., 278).

In order that the listing survey may be utilized as the basis for patent, so as to avoid the necessity for a second survey, this department concurs in your suggestion that the Department of Agriculture cause to be filed in the office of the surveyor general a list of competent land surveyors in the employ of the Forest Service, and when a tract of land within a forest reserve is applied for under the act of June 11, 1906, and it has been determined by the Department of Agriculture that it is of the character that may be listed, a copy of the application will be forwarded to the proper surveyor general, who will designate an employee of the Forest Service whose name appears upon the list in his office to make a survey of the lands applied for and transmit to the district forester the name of the employee designated, with an estimate of the cost of necessary work to be performed in the office of the surveyor general, and upon the deposit of such cost in the office of the surveyor general, of which notice should be given to the district forester, the survey will be made by the employee designated, under the direction of the surveyor general, who will exercise supervision in every case as to the manner of the execution of the survey with reference to the running of lines and the establishment of monuments to mark the same.

All work necessary to be performed after the return of the survey to the surveyor general's office will be performed by his direction under the supervision of the General Land Office, and when the survey shall have been approved by the surveyor general and platted it will be accepted as the public-land survey and filed in the local office and in the General Land Office as the basis of patent for said tract.

Further instructions with reference to the details of work to be performed in the surveyor general's office will be given to that official by the General Land Office, with the approval of the department.

Very respectfully,

(Signed) SAMUEL ADAMS,
Acting Secretary.

I am advised by the Agricultural Department that in order to carry out this service and make it available for the current fiscal year they will have to have an appropriation of at least $63,000, in addition to current funds. I have proposed by this amendment $50,000. I believe that it is meritorious, and it would give uniformity to our general system of permitting settlers within the reservations to allow these lists made by the Agricultural Department under the law of 1906 to be made available for their benefit.

Mr. LAMB. Mr. Chairman, I do not think we can at this late hour of the evening, under this appropriation, discuss a question which has been presented here now involving so much, and I do not propose to discuss it, but I will say to my friend that when we make up our next appropriation bill, next December, if he will bring this proposition before the committee we will consider it, and now I insist upon the point of order.

Mr. MARTIN of South Dakota. Mr. Chairman, upon the point of order I would like to be heard for a moment.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman withhold his point of order for five minutes?

Mr. LAMB. Yes; but at the end of the five minutes I will ask for a ruling.

Mr. MARTIN of South Dakota. Mr. Chairman, I shall request, of course, to be heard briefly on the point of order, either at this time or after the gentleman from Wyoming.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Chairman, I hope this amendment may be adopted. I am rather inclined to think that the new method could be put in operation without as large an expenditure as carried in the amendment which the gentleman has offered. In fact, I am of the opinion, Mr. Chairman, that this new method when in operation will not involve any considerable additional expenditure, and I think that is the view of the Forest Service. I took this matter up and discussed it somewhat during the consideration of the agricultural appropriation bill. There is, as the gentleman from South Dakota [Mr. MARTIN] has stated, a duplication of work. The forest officer now makes a survey and that survey may be as accurate as the survey subsequently made by the deputy surveyor, but as the man who makes it is not a deputy surveyor the entryman must go to the expense of having a deputy surveyor make the survey. I know a case where the survey of a homestead of less than 100 acres cost the entryman $240, and I have a letter which I received from the Forester a few days ago in which he said that the cost, on the average, was from $100 to $200 in each case. When you take into consideration the fact that a forest homestead only averages about 80 acres or less, I think you will realize how large a sum this is and what a burden it is upon the entrymen, and it is altogether unnecessary, because the man who makes the original survey for the Forest Service could be equipped and qualified to make a survey that would be accurate and official. Therefore I hope that the committee will agree to the amendment.

Mr. MARTIN of South Dakota. Does the gentleman from Virginia desire to be heard upon the point of order?

Mr. LAMB. At the close of it I will ask for a ruling.

Mr. MARTIN of South Dakota. Mr. Chairman, I should like to be heard for a moment on the point of order. It seems to me clearly that this item is not subject to the point of order, and I base the authorization for an appropriation of this kind upon the act of June 11, 1906, providing for the settlement of agricultural lands in forest reserves and in the first paragraph of that act, which I will send to the Chair; I have a duplicate of it here—

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair has it before him.

Mr. MARTIN of South Dakota. It provides—

That the Secretary of Agriculture may, in his discretion, and he is hereby authorized, upon application or otherwise, to examine and ascertain as to the location and extent of lands within permanent or temporary forest reserves—

Now, here are some exceptions—which are chiefly valuable for agriculture, and which, in his opinion, may be occupied for agricultural purposes without injury to the forest reserves, and which are not needed for public purposes, and may list and describe the same by metes and bounds, or otherwise, and file the lists and descriptions with the Secretary of the Interior, with the request that the said lands be opened to entry in accordance with the provisions of the homestead laws and this act.

I think that is clearly an authorization.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will ask the gentleman from South Dakota this question: The terms of the act of June 11, 1906, provide that these surveys be made by the Surveyor General of the United States. The Surveyor General of the United States, as the Chair recollects, is an officer of the Interior Department.

Mr. MARTIN of South Dakota. Yes, sir.

The CHAIRMAN. And the amendment of the gentleman from South Dakota provides that this survey shall be made by an employee of the Forest Service?

Mr. MARTIN of South Dakota. Yes, sir.

The CHAIRMAN. Is not that a change of existing law?

Mr. MARTIN of South Dakota. No; the existing law provides that the listing and description of the land by metes and bounds shall be made by the Secretary of Agriculture. That is what my amendment provides.

The CHAIRMAN. It appears to the Chair that that is a change in existing law.

Mr. MARTIN of South Dakota. The item in the amendment simply says that this forest officer shall be under the direction of the surveyor general.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will call the attention of the committee—

Mr. MARTIN of South Dakota. That it shall be made by or under the direction of the United States Surveyor General.

The CHAIRMAN. It says it "shall be by an employee of the Forest Service under the direction of the Surveyor General." And the law says it shall be under the surveyor general.

Mr. MARTIN of South Dakota. The law says it shall be under the direction of the Secretary of Agriculture, and I do not conceive that the fact that this officer shall make this listing under the direction of the United States Surveyor General changes the authority for him to make the listing.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair calls the attention of the committee to the last two lines of the amendment to the effect that—no land listed under the act of June 11, 1906, shall pass from the forest until patent issues.

If that is anything more than a repetition it is certainly a change of existing law.

Mr. MARTIN of South Dakota. I will be frank with the Chair, and say that I think it is a serious question as to whether that portion is a change of existing law. My opinion is that it is not, but I am willing to strike out the last two lines so that there will be no question on the subject.

Mr. LEVER. We still reserve the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is prepared to rule on the point of order. The Chair is of the opinion that the entire amendment is a change of existing law, and the point of order is sustained. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

For investigations of methods for wood distillation and for the preservative treatment of timber, for timber testing and the testing of such woods as may require test to ascertain if they be suitable for making paper, and for other investigations and experiments to promote economy in the use of forest products, $150,000.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. This item in the current law is $177,040, and is reduced to $150,000 in this bill. Now, can the gentleman tell me how much of that reduction is caused by transfer to the statutory roll?

Mr. RAKER. That is not this item, is it?

Mr. LAMB. This is to investigate the method of wood distillation, and is a decrease of $27,040.

Mr. MANN. It is not a decrease of $40,000.

Mr. LAMB. This appropriation has been reduced from $177,040 to $150,000, a decrease of $27,040. Nine hundred dollars of this amount was recommended by the Forest Service and was made possible by a rearrangement of expenses, and we reduced the amount by $26,140 in the interests of economy, and because we thought it could stand the reduction. These amounts had been increased in the last few years and we felt it to be our duty to curtail expenses.

Mr. MANN. I wish to be heard on the motion to, on page 46, line 11, strike out the word "fifty" and insert in lieu thereof the word "seventy-five."

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 46, line 11, strike out the word "fifty" and insert in lieu thereof the word "seventy-five."

Mr. MANN. I hope the gentleman will agree to it. I do not pretend to be certain as to the amount, but I am certain the amount carried in the bill is not enough. The gentleman will remember that some years ago I was made the chairman of a special committee on the investigation of pulp and paper. Growing out of that investigation, in addition to other matters which the Government undertook, it made an investigation of plants for the purpose of ascertaining their paper-making qualities, and it undertook an investigation of the manufacture of ground wood from different kinds of trees. Ground wood, which is the basis of all of our newspaper paper and of a large share of the schoolbook paper and other similar paper, is now made from spruce wood. Spruce timber is to be found only in a few places of the United States in any large quantities. Two-thirds of it in the whole United States is supposed to be in the State of Maine, and the bulk of the spruce wood on the continent is in Canada.

Before we passed the Canadian reciprocity bill Canada had restricted the exportation of spruce wood from a number of her Provinces, or the Provinces had restricted the exportation of spruce wood from their Crown lands; and even since we passed the Canadian reciprocity law, which authorized the bringing in of print paper free when made from wood that is not restricted in exportation, they have added to the restrictions in several of the Provinces. And unless we find some substitute for spruce wood in the making of ground wood we will in the end become absolutely dependent upon Canada for our cheap print paper, which means that in the end we will pay a very much higher price for it.

Now, we commenced, through the Forestry Service, the study of the manufacture of ground wood from other kinds of wood, so far largely from jack pine, which in the main is useless for other purposes, and with hemlock, which now is used partly for the manufacture of lumber and partly for the manufacture of sulphide paper pulp. The Government established a laboratory at Madison, Wis., for various purposes connected with the Forestry Service, and, in connection with that, another working laboratory at Wausau, Wis., for the actual test of the use of these other woods in making ground wood pulp.

Gentlemen will understand that ground wood pulp is made by pushing a stick of timber up against a coarse grindstone. It was thought for many years that it was practically impossible to make satisfactory ground wood pulp from any tree except the spruce, because it is not ground like flour, but in the grinding process the cellulose fiber is torn apart, and the other woods either do not furnish a fiber that is fine enough or else it is too fine. The woods that were tested were either ground into flour, which was of no use, or else into a pulp that was too coarse, which was of no use.

This Wausau laboratory has been making investigations, a part of the expense being borne by the manufacturers of pulp wood and the mill owners. They have made investigations which, so far as I am informed, have proven to be of immense value, and some of the paper mills or pulp mills are now finding that, following the recommendations of the Department of Agriculture, they are able to make satisfactory ground wood by the use at least of a considerable portion of hemlock and by the use of some jack pine. And I am satisfied that if we can proceed with those scientific investigations in connection with the actual work in the mills we will discover that we can make ground wood pulp, as the basis of cheap print paper, from a number of woods that grow in the North now, some of which are now almost valueless, like what they call the "popple" in the North.

That is the situation, where we are now almost dependent for the future of the cheap-paper industry upon Canada, and we ought not to take any of this appropriation away from this service. I should like the gentleman in charge of the bill to consent to give us—

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Illinois yield to the gentleman from New York?

Mr. MANN. Certainly.

Mr. FITZGERALD. There are a number of provisions in this bill for scientific investigations of various character. Is it intended that any of them shall ever be completed?

Mr. MANN. The gentleman asks that question. The scientific investigations along certain lines, so far as that is concerned, are constantly being completed, but science will never go out of date, and the information that can be acquired by scientific methods will never be exhausted.

Mr. FITZGERALD. That is not my question. This is a specific investigation.

Mr. MANN. I do not desire to be led away from the proposition I am discussing into the general subject. This investigation has been carried on only a year or two.

Mr. FITZGERALD. More than that.

Mr. MANN. I beg the gentleman's pardon. It has only been carried a year or two.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I think the gentleman is mistaken.

Mr. MANN. I am not mistaken, because I had the first item inserted in the bill, and that was inserted two years ago, in the bill which did not become available until the following July.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Is there not an item in this bill of $30,000 for investigations of woods out of which paper may be manufactured?

Mr. MANN. There is not.

Mr. LAMB. There is an appropriation under the Bureau of Plant Industry for an investigation along this line. Besides we know they are now making paper out of soft woods.

Mr. FITZGERALD. There is an item for fiber investigation.

Mr. MANN. The provision under the Bureau of Plant Industry, which was $7,000 or $8,000, and increased by something like $5,000, has nothing to do with this question. That is an investigation of ordinary plants which can be used in the manufacture of paper, but that paper is not ground wood paper at all. The only thing they use that for is making what they call soda pulp, which is a high-grade paper.

Mr. FITZGERALD. It is a different paper from this?

Mr. MANN. Oh, an entirely different paper. It has no relation to this cheap paper.

Mr. LAMB. Mr. Chairman, the Committee on Agriculture considered this matter carefully. There are many of us on the Committee on Agriculture who do not believe it is a function of the Forestry Bureau to test woods to find out what their timber strength will be or what are their properties for the manufacture of paper. Many of us think that belongs to the Bureau of Plant Industry, and if you will note the hearings, some members of the committee said, "Why not transfer all this to the Bureau of Plant Industry?" I doubt if it belongs under the Bureau of Forestry; but admitting, for the sake of argument, that it does, let me tell you that $150,000 is a liberal appropriation for it.

Mr. MANN. There is only a small amount of this used for this purpose, and it will be cut off. There is no $150,000 used for this purpose.

Mr. LAMB. That is what it states that it is used for.

Mr. MANN. And it covers a lot of other things.

Mr. LAMB. The item reads:

For investigations of methods for wood distillation and for the preservative treatment of timber, for timber testing and the testing of such woods as may require test to ascertain if they be suitable for making paper.

Mr. MANN. Yes; but the testing for paper is the last item that was inserted there and will be the first item cut down.

Mr. LAMB. It says:

And for other investigations and experiments to promote economy in the use of forest products, $150,000.

Mr. MANN. Yes.

Mr. LAMB. I do not think it would be right to cut out the item for testing for paper. It would not be a proper thing for the chief of the bureau to cut that out.

Mr. MANN. They will have to cut it down.

Mr. LAMB. Besides, why should the Forester be engaged in this work, when he has a domain to preside over that is larger than the New England States, New York, Pennsylvania, and Maryland combined? He has sufficient other work to do.

Let me call attention to another fact connected with these appropriations. Two years ago some of us contended that all these appropriations outside of forest reserves and for the purpose of keeping the forests in order were going too far, and many of us contended that the work outside of the domain of forestry absorbed almost as much money as the Forestry Service proper. When we came to consider this bill I added up those items, and they amounted to $680,000, and I offered amendments to reduce those appropriations, to bring them within the bounds of what we thought was at least reasonable.

We do not think that many of them ought to have been established, but we found them in operation and we did not propose in cutting out the dead tissue to hurt the living, and we thought we would reduce the expenditure what we could, and cut off pro rata along the different lines which you will see presently.

Now, my friends, the Bureau of Plant Industry ought to be doing this work. I do not think the work ought to be done in cooperation with the colleges. We have laboratories over here, and we can do this work as well as they can anywhere else, and I submit that the committee did not go beyond the bounds of reason when we cut off $30,000 from this appropriation.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, when the item was first inserted in the agricultural appropriation bill it was $10,000 without specifying under what bureau it should be expended. Subsequently, on the recommendation of the Department of Agriculture, it was partly given to the Bureau of Forestry and partly to the Bureau of Plant Industry. I doubt very much whether any great positive good comes out of that part that goes to the Bureau of Plant Industry. The Bureau of Forestry is the bureau testing wood in the grinding, and the test is made by trying it under all sorts of conditions, as to the condition of the grindstone, the sharpness of it, and other conditions, by making the test and disposing of the pulp.

Mr. LAMB. The Director of Public Roads is doing it too. He is testing wood, I know, in various ways.

Mr. MANN. Yes; but they are not testing wood in this way. There is no one else that can do it. The machinery in this case was largely furnished by the paper manufacturers. They have furnished the wood. They have done great service. The gentleman says he has cut appropriations off all along the line. He has cut this more than any other that I have noticed in the bill, and it affects the appropriation in the bill which is the most vital to the people of the country.

Mr. ESCH. Mr. Chairman, under the appropriation made three years ago a provision was made for a forest laboratory to be erected at Madison, Wis. Under the terms of that appropriation the State was to furnish the site and building. This the State has done, and that laboratory has been in operation, I think, a little less than two years.

Aside from the investigations now being made at that laboratory of pulp and print paper, it is extending its inquiries to find a substitute for hemlock bark for use in the tanning industry. It is a well-known fact that hemlock bark is becoming scarcer year by year, and it is only a question when the supply will be entirely exhausted. The same may be said of oak bark used in tanning. The question therefore is, Can a substitute be found in the American forests to take the place of hemlock and oak bark? Already the United States is importing thousands of dollars' worth of quebracho as a substitute for tan bark.

The laboratory at Madison has been making experiments in barks to see if they can find a substitute, and if that laboratory can find such a substitute the returns will come back to the country a hundredfold. It does not seem to me that this decrease in the appropriation is in the exercise of economy, and I hope that the House will retain the old appropriation and not reduce it by $25,000.

Mr. LEVER. Mr. Chairman, the committee agrees with the gentleman from Illinois that the matter of paper manufacture is an important proposition. We recognize the fact that the civilization of the future is going to depend largely on the fact of whether we get cheap print paper. These investigations being carried on by the Government at Madison, Wis., and at another point in Wisconsin, the Committee on Agriculture regards as highly important.

And yet, Mr. Chairman, I desire to call the attention of the committee to the fact that in the appropriation act for 1911, two years ago only, for this item we appropriated $129,420, and immediately following, the next year, we gave for this same purpose the sum of $177,040, an increase in round numbers of $50,000. This is a pretty big increase for a purely scientific work.

Now, the estimate for this year was one hundred and seventy-seven thousand and some odd dollars. The committee concluded that this was more money than could be expended economically in this work. I find, too, Mr. Chairman, that the work on wood distillation, which my friend from Illinois [Mr. MANN] has in mind, calls for an expenditure during 1907 of only $3,542; in 1909, $3,207; and in 1910, $980.

Mr. MANN. Wood distillation was not what I was talking about.

Mr. LEVER. It is the same proposition. For this year the estimate for this purpose amounts to $8,360. I figure that the amount for this purpose is only 20 per cent of the total amount carried in the bill, and that if the reduction for this item is carried out, the reduction for studies in paper manufacture will be only $1,600, on a basis of a 20 per cent reduction in the total appropriation. I regard this as exceedingly important work, and I hope the committee has made no mistake in making the reduction. We feel that we have not done so, and we interrogated Mr. Graves, the Forester, on that proposition. It had been suggested that there should be a cut of something like $40,000 made in this item. I said to him:

I have the thought in my mind that this being rather a scientific work, perhaps we were rushing forward too rapidly and we could afford to go rather slowly on it; that perhaps a reduction here could be effected without crippling your work.

Mr. GRAVES. We have the work thoroughly established, the machines going, and an extensive cut there would, so to speak, stop the machinery.

Mr. LEVER. Of course we do not want to do that.

Mr. GRAVES. Anything like a $40,000 cut would necessarily do that.

The CHAIRMAN. You do not think a cut of twenty-five or twenty-six thousand dollars would stop it or affect it materially?

Mr. GRAVES. It would not stop the work, but it would cripple the amount of work we do and our production would be that much diminished.

The committee thought that this, being a scientific work, necessarily must go along slowly; that a cut of $25,000 not stopping the work at all, reducing it, diminishing it to some extent, would not in the end delay the results which we hoped to attain through the work provided for in this item in the bill.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, just a word. With all due deference to the other gentlemen and the Forestry Service, I believe I know as much about this matter as anybody in the Forestry Service, except from the technical side of it, and a great deal more than Mr. Graves does, because I have given very close attention to it. I have followed this work from the start up to the present time, kept in touch with what they are doing by correspondence, both with the people in the Forestry Service and with the people in the business who are making use of the information in the Forestry Service. I am prepared to say that if this item goes in the bill in the way it is, without any increase in the appropriation, it will practically ruin a service of inestimable value to the people of the country.

Mr. LEVER. Mr. Chairman, there is not a man on the floor of the House who does not know the expert information that the gentleman from Illinois has on this proposition. We have all admitted it here. I wonder if the gentleman would not agree, as a substitute for his amendment, to make it $165,000, and let us get along.

Mr. MANN. I would be quite willing to do that, with the understanding, expressed in debate, that the extra amount of $15,000 is put in for this purpose.

Mr. LEVER. I do not know that we could do that.

Mr. MANN. I do not mean to put it in the law, but I mean in debate, so that the Forestry Service will understand that the increase is for this purpose.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Why is it necessary to increase it?

Mr. MANN. It is absolutely essential. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to modify my amendment by making it $165,000 instead of $175,000.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the modification.

The Clerk read as follows:

Strike out the word "seventy-five" and insert in lieu thereof the word "sixty-five."

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection the modification will be made.

There was no objection.

The CHAIRMAN. The question now is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Chairman, I wish to inquire of the gentleman in charge of this bill what information he has that would justify the committee in accepting the amendment?

Mr. LAMB. Mr. Chairman, we are cutting this item considerably, $26,000, and we did it over the protest of the Forester, of course. We had no more evidence touching this item than what I have already given. Mr. MANN has thrown some further light on the subject.

Mr. FITZGERALD. No appropriation is ever reduced except it is against the protest of the official who is to expend the money.

Mr. MANN. The official who is to expend the money has not protested, so far as I know.

Mr. FITZGERALD. The gentleman from Virginia said he did.

Mr. MANN. I did not know about that. I have made an investigation of this matter since this bill was reported and have given to the House the information I obtained.

Mr. FITZGERALD. How much of this appropriation is to be expended in these particular investigations?

Mr. MANN. Probably twenty or thirty or forty thousand dollars. I can not tell the exact amount. I do not remember.

Mr. LAMB. I have given all the information we had. We were reducing these amounts all we could. We reduced them in proportion. I have previously stated that they had been increased too rapidly in preceding appropriation bills; at least some of us thought so.

Mr. MANN. And a large part of the expense is being paid by outside parties, the gentleman understands—as much as they are permitted to pay under the law.

Mr. LEVER. We made very serious cuts all along the line here.

Mr. LAMB. We cut the amounts over $300,000.

Mr. LEVER. I regard this as important, and the gentleman from Illinois is better informed, perhaps, on this proposition than any man in the country. I confess I have been somewhat moved by his statement in respect to the proposition, and if he is willing to make a reasonable divide I am willing to accept it, so that we may get along.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Illinois as amended.

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. MURRAY. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last two words of the paragraph. Mr. Chairman, I make this pro forma motion in order that I may attract the attention of the members of the committee to the situation at the port of Boston, which has been set forth in an editorial of the Boston Herald of date of Thursday, March 7, a day or two ago, in which, under the caption "Our expensive quarantine," the following editorial is printed:

OUR EXPENSIVE QUARANTINE.

There is something impressive in the fact that the city of Boston, through its quarantine department, is now caring for something over 500 steerage passengers from a chickenpox-infected ship which originally put into Portland, but which came to this port because the quarantine facilities at Portland were not adequate for handling so many persons suspected of infection. Apropos of this situation it is pertinent to inquire why the expense of maintaining quarantine at this port should be put upon the city of Boston, when this service is for the benefit, not of Boston alone, but for that of all sections of the country where immigrants or imported merchandise goes? It costs the Boston taxpayers about $25,000 a year to support our quarantine establishment, not to mention the original cost of the plant, and the annual income therefrom is less than $5,000. It is a fact that Boston is the only port in the country where the expense of quarantine is borne by the city where the port is located. In New York, Baltimore, and Philadelphia it is supported by the respective States in which these cities are located. At all the other principal ports the expenses and the cost of the plant come out of the Federal Treasury. This is as it should be. The quarantine systems of all our ports are established and maintained for the benefit of the whole country, and the cost thereof should be borne by the Federal Treasury. This would not only be a more equitable arrangement financially, but it would make far greater uniformity and efficiency in quarantine regulations.

Mr. Chairman, in line with the suggestions made by that editorial clipping, I went to-day to the head of the Public Health and Marine-Hospital service, Dr. Blue, and discussed with him and with Dr. Glennan, who is in charge of the quarantine work, this entire matter of bringing the quarantine station in Boston under Federal supervision, and they have favored me by giving me a memorandum in regard to this proposition relative to the national administration of maritime quarantine. I believe it will help to a clear understanding of this entire proposition if I might be permitted under the rule of the committee to insert this memorandum, without any extended reading of it, and I therefore ask unanimous consent to insert it in the RECORD.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Massachusetts asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, reserving the right to object, I desire to ask the gentleman how long the paper is which he wishes to insert?

Mr. MURRAY. Mr. Chairman, in words about 1,100 or 1,200, I should say at a guess; not more than that, and possibly only 1,000.

Mr. MANN. I do not object, but I suggest to the gentleman that if gentlemen want to insert matters entirely irrelevant to a bill which is being read under the five-minute rule that it is better to take the matter up in the House and not insert a lot of extraneous matter in a real discussion of a subject of interest to people.

Mr. MURRAY. May I be permitted to answer the gentleman that I shall assuredly take the suggestion to myself, and further to add that I hope some day to do something in this House which will meet with the unqualified approval of the constant objector from Illinois.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Massachusetts asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

The matter referred to is as follows:

MEMORANDUM IN RE NATIONAL ADMINISTRATION OF MARITIME QUARANTINE.

National quarantine is administered under the provisions of an act of Congress approved February 15, 1893, and succeeding acts, and certain acts and Revised Statutes which, in the opinion of the law officers of the Government, have not been superseded by the enactment of the act of 1893, above alluded to.

UNIFORMITY.

The distinguishing feature of national quarantine is its uniformity. It is provided in the act of 1893, and in the regulations provided under the same, that the requirements therein imposed by the Secretary of the Treasury shall be accepted and regarded as a minimum requirement at any port in the United States, and while State and local authorities have the right to impose such additional requirements as in their judgment may be necessary, they are forbidden to waive any requirement of the national regulations. This is conducive of uniformity of practice at all of the national quarantines, extending from Maine to New Orleans upon the Atlantic and Gulf coasts, and upon the Pacific coast of the United States, and at quarantine stations of Porto Rico, Hawaii, and the Philippines.

ELASTICITY.

The national quarantine service is further characterized by elasticity, i. e., emergencies suddenly arising at any point can be met by the transfer of officers or employees from another point. This is conducive to high efficiency. The officers and employees have been trained under a well-considered and carefully prepared code of regulations. The practice at one port is essentially the practice at all other ports, and does away with the inconvenience of a quarantine officer confronted with an exigency being obliged to devote time that can be ill spared from more important matters to train green, inexperienced subordinates to the proper discharge of important duties. The same remarks that apply to personnel apply to a certain extent to equipment. A sudden call for a quarantine vessel or for quarantine appliances can be met by the temporary transfer of such vessel or equipment from one station to another, the individual items being regarded as component parts of a great whole.

EFFICIENCY.

From time to time States and municipalities have surrendered their quarantine function to the National Government, as, for example, Maine, New Jersey, North Carolina, Florida, Mississippi, Louisiana, California, Oregon, and Washington. While these transfers or surrenders have all been made in accordance with law and with the full acquiescence of the constituted authorities of the various States, such transfer has not always been without local opposition. A careful review of the transactions and operations of the stations as transferred has always led, upon dispassionate investigation, to the belief that the efficiency of the service has in no case ever been impaired, but has always shown a marked improvement satisfactory to all interests concerned, such as health authorities, mercantile organizations, and shipping interests.

ECONOMY.

First. As a rule, while a high state of efficiency has been obtained, a standard of economy has been observed. By zealous, well-directed effort national stations are economically administered. With no local interests to subserve, a high state of discipline is maintained, and the stations operating with small but sufficient forces of trained employees are not subjected to the demands of local influence and the maintenance of employees other than those of demonstrated efficiency.

Second. A State or local quarantine system transferred to the National Government is a direct elimination of expense to the State or municipality. The necessary expense of operation is spared to the State or municipality and the entire expense of the maintenance of the quarantine are paid from appropriations made by the Congress of the United States.

Third. The saving to commercial interests is great. No fees are charged at national quarantine stations to be borne by vessels. Inspections, disinfections, and the treatment of cases of quarantinable diseases removed from vessels at quarantine stations are without expense to the commercial interests. The economy is thus exhibited in two aspects, namely, a direct saving in the matter of outlay to State or municipality and an absence of fees or indirect tax upon commerce.

COOPERATION.

National quarantine is an integral part of a great national system in the relations of the General Government to commerce. All of the coordinate branches of the Government come into direct relation with the national quarantine system, namely, the collectors of customs of the various ports, the Immigration Service, the Revenue-Cutter Service, and the Life-Saving Service. From time to time these branches of the Government are called upon to render important aid in various ways to the national quarantine system. In the matter of immigration, arriving aliens pass directly from the supervision of the quarantine service to another national service—the Immigration Bureau; officers of the Revenue-Cutter Service and the vessels of that service can be made immediately available for aid to the quarantine service by the order of the Secretary of the Treasury. The Life-Saving Service with its highly trained organization may in time of stress be called upon to assist the operations of the quarantine service by the reporting of vessels, by the patrolling of the coast in time of the threatened introduction of epidemic disease, and important functions in the matter of bills of health and the entry of vessels from foreign ports where quarantinable diseases prevail is under the charge of the collector of customs, who are in close touch with national quarantine authorities.

EQUIPMENT.

National quarantine stations may be divided into two general classes—boarding and inspection stations at smaller and less important ports, and fully equipped quarantine stations at or near the large ports of entry of the United States. The requirements of a fully equipped quarantine station under the national regulations are comprehensive, and a vessel arriving at a national quarantine station with quarantinable disease on board, and where full facilities do not exist for the treatment of such an emergency, is remanded without delay to a near-by or adjoining national quarantine station fully prepared to meet all emergencies.

Extract from quarantine law of February 15, 1893:

"SEC. 8. That whenever the proper authorities of a State shall surrender to the United States the use of the buildings and disinfecting apparatus at a State quarantine station the Secretary of the Treasury shall be authorized to receive them and to pay a reasonable compensation to the State for their use if, in his opinion, they are necessary to the United States."

Extract from quarantine law of August 18, 1894:

"SEC. 5. That in any place where a quarantine station and plant is already established by State or local authorities it shall be the duty of the Secretary of the Treasury, before selecting and designating a quarantine station and grounds and anchorage for vessels, to examine such established stations and plants, with a view of obtaining a transfer of the site and plants to the United States, and whenever the proper authorities shall be ready to transfer the same or surrender the use thereof to the United States, the Secretary of the Treasury is authorized to obtain title thereto or possession and use thereof, and to pay a reasonable compensation therefor if, in his opinion, such purchase or use will be necessary to the United States for quarantine purposes and the quarantine stations established by the authority of this act shall, when so established, be used to prevent the introduction of all quarantinable diseases."

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Chairman, I am not aware of the contents of the paper of Dr. Blue, but lest there might be a misapprehension that there is a uniform desire that the quarantine systems of the several States be taken over by the Federal Government I wish to say a word at this time. If there be anything of importance to the people of any city or State, it is to have control of its quarantine system. There are some men so far forgetful of the importance of this matter and so little familiar with the history of the development of the free institutions of this country that they are even now in the city of New York advocating and urging legislation to have the Federal Government take over the control of the quarantine system in the State of New York.

Mr. MURRAY. Mr. Chairman—

Mr. FITZGERALD. I yield to the gentleman.

Mr. MURRAY. Mr. Chairman, I just want to say to the gentleman from New York that I hope that I will not be misunderstood as being in favor of changing the situation in Boston. My only hope was that this memorandum would give a better understanding of the situation in Boston than might exist without it. That is my only purpose.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I am not criticizing the gentleman. I am speaking about a situation that exists in my own State. Without knowing what is in the paper submitted by the gentleman from Massachusetts, but having followed what the gentleman has said, it would seem as if there were protests in Boston against supporting the system and favoring its maintenance out of the Federal Treasury. To a city of over 4,000,000 people, with a port through which comes the great bulk of the immigrants to this country, there is no more important matter in the administration of its public affairs than the protection of the people against infection from those coming to this country. That is the situation in New York. I am so thoroughly convinced that this is a matter that should be controlled by the people of the locality and States and not be surrendered by them to the Federal Government that I hope those who have thoughtlessly believed that this would relieve the people of some financial burden by having this work devolve upon the Federal Government will give some consideration to the other aspects of the case rather than to the mere question of financial burden.

The tendency throughout the country to shift the cost of every important governmental service on the Federal Treasury is tending to make the people forget the importance of keeping power and control of many services close to themselves. It will be a sad day for the city of New York if the people of that State forget the importance of retaining the control of its quarantine and health service and join in this movement to have the Federal Government control it. I say this, Mr. Chairman, because I know in the Legislature of the State of New York very recently resolutions have been offered and considered—I am not certain whether they have been adopted—urging legislation to enable the Federal Government to take from the State, or relieve the State from, responsibilities and duties of the utmost importance to the people, and which should be performed by the State. There is no unanimity of sentiment in favor of giving this power to the Federal Government, and I speak thus briefly to emphasize this fact.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the pro forma amendment will be withdrawn, and the Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

For experiments and investigations of range conditions within national forests, and of methods for improving the range by reseeding, regulation of grazing, and other means, $18,420.

Mr. RAKER. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out all of line 15, on page 46, and insert in lieu thereof the following words: "Twenty-five thousand one hundred and eighty dollars."

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment of the gentleman from California.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 46, line 15, strike out all of line 15 and insert in lieu thereof the words: "Twenty-five thousand one hundred and eighty dollars."

Mr. LAMB. Mr. Chairman, we made no change there and gave these people exactly what they asked.

Mr. MANN. It is just what it is in the current law.

Mr. RAKER. No.

Mr. LAMB. That is right.

Mr. RAKER. I expect the safest way is to read the record. The amount in the current law—

Mr. MANN. It is the same as the present law.

Mr. RAKER (continuing). Is $18,420. Now they put in the estimate $25,180, on page 141. I wanted to present it to the committee—

Mr. LAMB. It is exactly as much as the current law.

Mr. RAKER. I understand the amount in here is as it is under the current law. But I want to state to the committee the reason and the necessity for this increase. The Forester was before the committee and gave his testimony. You will find it on pages 323 and 324. He states that they are making scientific investigations for the purpose of improving the ranges that they are getting such a large amount from at the present time. At the bottom of the page he states:

That increase is primarily for an extension of these grazing studies we are making in the individual forests, to meet an increasing demand from the stock growers.

Now, this is the only item you will find from the many, many stock growers and permittees that are asking that the ranges be put in condition that they may get some return for the money invested. The department is urging that they be given this amount that they may improve the range conditions. They put it in their estimates and presented it before the committee, and the committee, in their wisdom, in the interests of economy, took out the amount. I believe when the facts are presented the amount ought to be the same as it was in the estimate. Let me read you a statement from the Forestry Department:

This appropriation is to provide for the continuance of the investigations and experiments initiated for the purpose of increasing the grazing capacity of national forest lands by the restoration of overgrazed areas, the introduction of new forage grasses and plants, the determination of better methods of range management and control, the construction of pastures and drift fences, the development of new sources of water supply for live stock, and the extermination of range-destroying rodents and predatory animals.

The estimated annual product of the stock grazed within the national forests is in excess of $20,000,000, which is shared by more than 25,000 permittees. An increase of 5 per cent in the forage-producing capacity of the national-forest lands will add to the wealth of the communities adjacent to the national forests a sum largely in excess of the total cost of all of the investigations.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. RAKER. Mr. Chairman, I have another document from the Department of Agriculture upon this subject, and I would like unanimous consent for five minutes so that I may present it to the committee.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from California asks unanimous consent that his time be extended for five minutes. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. RAKER. It is as follows:

In 1911, 7,449,415 head of sheep and goats and approximately 1,493,438 head of cattle and horses were grazed on range within national forests. The estimated annual production of these stock is 52,000,000 pounds of wool, worth $7,800,000; 4,470,000 lambs or sheep, worth about $11,000,000; and 298,700 head of cattle and horses, worth about $6,000,000; a grand total of $25,000,000.

Although a great amount of investigative work has been done in the past by the United States Government, State institutions, and by individuals to determine the most efficient feeds and feeding methods for application to the raising of stock on the farm and in the feed lot, almost no attention has been given, in the way of investigation, to the improvement of the vast areas of range now within national forests, or to the methods of handling the stock, so as to get a higher efficiency from the forage produced.

Although the range within national forests has improved during the past seven years, as a result of preventing continued overstocking and by carefully regulated use, a great portion of the area is still far below a condition of maximum productivity.

The grazing studies investigations, undertaken by the Forest Service in 1907, were designed to develop methods of range improvement by seeding to cultivated forage plants, by developing systems of grazing which will permit of utilizing the forage and at the same time bring about improvement of range by natural reseeding of the native plants, and to improve the methods of handling the stock so as to eliminate all unnecessary waste of forage in utilization.

The essential principles to be followed in improvement have been worked out in special localities by the two men assigned to the investigations prior to 1910. A rotation system of grazing resulting in great improvement of partially depleted ranges by natural reseeding has been found practicable. Also it has been found that by more careful handling of stock, especially sheep, the carrying capacity of our grazing lands can be increased approximately 15 to 25 per cent, depending upon locality, type of range, and water facilities.

Now, to interpolate, if you can increase your range facilities from 15 to 25 per cent, you can imagine what a large amount that is. And these two men who have been employed by the Forest Service will be cut off if this appropriation is not allowed. And it seems to me in all fairness to this great industry, the stockmen's industry, where you are selling your pasturage, where practically all the pasturage belongs to the Government, where you are charging the cattle and sheep men and the horse-men so much per year for range—

Mr. BOWMAN. Will the gentleman yield for a question right there?

Mr. RAKER. I will.

Mr. BOWMAN. Is not $24,000 a very small amount to spend upon an area that is greater than New England and the State of New York for the improvement of grasses?

Mr. LAMB. That is just one little item. That is not all.

Mr. RAKER. This is for two men. The record shows they have two men who have given two years of study to this work. And I want to say to you they are accomplishing wonders. Why should we cut off this important work at this time, when we are trying to lease the forest ranges and get some benefit from them?

Mr. LAMB. So far from cutting it off, we are giving them exactly what the current law requires. I do not think it would have hurt if we had cut it off somewhat, or had cut it out entirely.

Mr. RAKER. The gentleman does not quite present the matter as it is.

Mr. LAMB. The gentleman may think so, but I do not think so.

Mr. RAKER. Now, Mr. Chairman, as to all these questions where I have been discussing the cutting down of the amounts for the Forest Service in my district, I was told that the Forest Service recommended certain sums, and because they recommended those sums, they knowing their business and knowing what they wanted, the committee relies upon that information, which they have a right to rely on, and accordingly they cut these items. But now when we come in here with a report of the Forest Service, recommending and asking that this increased amount be given them, ought not the committee to follow that recommendation?

Mr. LAMB. That statement, Mr. Chairman, is absolutely misleading. We did not give everything that the Forester asked. I said to the gentleman that the lump sum was apportioned by the Forester himself.

Mr. RAKER. Oh, what is the use in discussing that? I do not like to get into controversy with the chairman of the committee.

Mr. LAMB. We did not give the Forester everything he asked. The lump sum was apportioned by himself.

Mr. RAKER. When I read the record one time and then read it the next day, they say it is not there.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from California yield to the gentleman from New York?

Mr. RAKER. Yes.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I understand the gentleman's position is that the Congress should appropriate the amounts requested by the department?

Mr. RAKER. No. That is not my position.

Mr. FITZGERALD. The gentleman is asking that this amount be fixed in accordance with the amount recommended by the Forest Service?

Mr. RAKER. No. That is not it.

Mr. FITZGERALD. What is it?

Mr. RAKER. I will explain that, in presenting a half dozen matters here to the committee, I was met, and successfully met, by the committee with the statement that the Forest Service had recommended so and so and that they stood on the recommendations of the Forest Service—

Mr. LAMB. No; the gentleman is mistaken. He was discussing the bill, and particularly the sums assigned by the Forester to each one of these forests. We appropriated the lump sum.

Mr. RAKER (continuing). And that, when the estimate is brought in and the department asks for an increase, so that they can continue their work, I then rely upon the Forest Service's estimate, thinking, as I do, on the statement made by the committee, that they have to rely upon the information received from the Forest Service in order to make their estimate upon it. That is my position.

Mr. FITZGERALD. If Congress should adopt the estimates submitted by the departments, it would be futile for us to go through the form, at least, of exercising our own judgment to determine how much should be appropriated for any particular service. Let me suggest to the gentleman from California that after he has studied longer the estimates and investigated the necessities of various services he will not rely so confidently upon an estimate as a criterion of the amount that should be appropriated for any service.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. RAKER. Mr. Chairman, this is an important matter, and I should like to have five minutes more on this subject. I then shall not take longer time.

Mr. LAMB. The gentleman has had 10 minutes already.

Mr. RAKER. Yes; but I yielded to every man who wanted to interrupt me on the floor to ask questions.

Mr. LAMB. Surely the gentleman can not make complaint about not having had time. We have been just as patient as could be with all the gentleman's statements here.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from California asks unanimous consent to proceed for five minutes longer. Is there objection?

Mr. LAMB. This is a matter of $5,000. We gave current law for this amount. Anyway, a forester can not do this. A botanist must do this anyhow. Some of these experiments ought to end some time. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from California?

Mr. MANN. What is the request?

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from California [Mr. RAKER] asks unanimous consent to be permitted to proceed for five minutes longer. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. RAKER. I seem to be unable, Mr. Chairman, to present this matter to the committee so that they can understand the conditions. I thought I had made myself perfectly clear, in the first place, when I stated that I was relying upon the facts that were submitted. I was then met with the statement that the department had recommended so much, and therefore there should be no change.

Mr. LEVER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from California yield to the gentleman from South Carolina?

Mr. RAKER. Certainly.

Mr. LEVER. The gentleman from California should take into consideration the fact that the appropriation for this purpose in the act for 1911—

Mr. RAKER. Is the same as it is in the present bill?

Mr. LEVER. No; not at all. It is $11,820, and in the act of 1912 that sum was increased to the present sum, an increase of 50 per cent. The gentleman, of course, will realize that this is a scientific proposition. It is a study that must be conducted by scientists and experts, and the only thing that could be done, under the amendment suggested by the gentleman, would be to employ perhaps one more expert.

Mr. RAKER. Two, the man says.

Mr. LEVER. Two more experts, who would go out and study the grazing features of the forests. Does the gentleman think that work could not be as well done by the two or three men now doing the work, whose reports are open to the public?

Mr. RAKER. No; I do not think so. The ranges are too extensive and the country is too broad.

Mr. LAMB. If my friend will further excuse me, I will say for the information of the committee that the Bureau of Plant Industry is now doing experimental work right along this very line, and the Secretary in his report says:

The Bureau of Plant Industry rendered indispensable assistance in this work, as also in the study of the very important technical questions involved in the effort to improve the condition of depleted portions of the range.

He refers to this very subject, and the Bureau of Plant Industry is doing a part of this work. If there be virtue in the end to be reached, it seems to me these people who are employed are enough to determine what grasses should be used in these forests. It is a technical and botanical work, and it must end some time. The gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. LEVER] has told you we increased it 50 per cent two years ago—

Mr. RAKER. That is a long question?

Mr. LAMB. I did not ask a question. I got the time from my colleague.

Mr. RAKER. My time is going very rapidly, but then I never object.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Does the gentleman think there are any experts who are not now employed by the Department of Agriculture? [Laughter.]

Mr. RAKER. I think there are some very good experts employed by the Department of Agriculture.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I think they have employed everybody who can properly be characterized as experts in any of these lines.

Mr. BEALL of Texas. If anybody has been omitted, it has been by inadvertence.

Mr. RAKER. In order to put the investigative data into practical application and to adopt a comprehensive plan of improvement and development, as well as to most intelligently continue the investigative work, it is essential that more accurate data be available regarding the grazing resources, acreage and type of range, topography, watering facilities, growing seasons, the vegetation making up the forage, and its requirements of growth, as well as the relation of each grazing area to forest production and to watershed protection. Without these data we will lose efficiency in our efforts because of the vast area under consideration and the variance in local conditions and consequently the variation in methods of management necessary.

As forest management grows more and more intensive it becomes more and more essential that the Forest Service make every possible effort to improve the grazing management, so that grazing will do the least damage to tree reproduction. Otherwise the comparative merits of the interests involved will necessitate the entire restriction of grazing from areas where reforestation is necessary. The force now engaged in the investigative work of grazing is not sufficient to cover the approximately 130,000,000 acres now used for grazing within national forests and work out efficient systems of management within any reasonable period of time. For this reason the increase of $6,000 was asked for in order to place a man qualified to handle this work in each of the six western districts.

There is no longer any great amount of unused range lands, and it is believed that the present condition of our ranges and our present methods of handling stock can be improved so as to result in the production of from 15 to 25 per cent more beef and mutton on the area now used.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment of the gentleman from California [Mr. RAKER].

The question being taken, the amendment was rejected.

The Clerk read as follows:

For the purchase of seed and for seeding and tree planting within national forests, and for experiments and investigations necessary for such seeding and tree planting, $150,000.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Chairman, I reserve a point of order on that provision.

Mr. MANN. This item takes the place of the provision in the bill of last year that covered $166,000.

Mr. LAMB. This is a change of language.

Mr. MANN. I want to ask the gentleman in charge of the bill whether the "seed" referred to in the paragraph is tree seed?

Mr. LAMB. Yes.

Mr. MANN. It does not relate at all to grass seed?

Mr. LAMB. No, sir.

Mr. MANN. Does not the gentleman think that if the item remains in the bill it would be a good idea to insert the word "tree" before the word "seed," so that the department would not be tempted to take a part of this appropriation for the purpose of seeding or reseeded the grass ground covered by the item preceding?

Mr. LAMB. This item is for the seeding with trees.

Mr. MANN. It does not say so, and I think could be used for the other purpose.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Chairman, I withdraw the point of order. But I wish to inquire of the gentleman why no provision has been made in this paragraph, as there was in the one in the former bill, relating to regulations for the cutting of timber to be paid out of this appropriation. The paragraph of the former bill provided "for silviculture and other experiments and investigations in the national forests necessary for tree planting, for the reproduction of existing forests, and the regulation of cutting." The regulation of cutting of timber in the national forests was paid out of an appropriation of $166,000. It is amazing how the service branches out in such minute ways under these items. It seems that they start out at the very beginning and as if they never would progress sufficiently far to end. That is why I look with so much reluctance on a change of language such as is proposed here.

Mr. LEVER. We have limited the authority of the bureau in this change of language. It may be that the whole item is subject to a point of order, I do not know.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I have withdrawn the point of order. But the department will never cease requesting money for the purchase of seeds for the replanting of forests.

Mr. LEVER. The gentleman can trust Congress to say how much they will give.

Mr. LAMB. I want to say that I asked that very question when the matter was before the committee.

Mr. RAKER. They will never stop asking for appropriations for that purpose.

Mr. LEVER. We do not want them to stop.

Mr. RAKER. Sure we do not, but let us make it efficient now.

Mr. LAMB. We know what seeds will do to plant in the forests now. These investigations have been carried on for years. Some of them should be finished, and that is why we cut the appropriation.

Mr. RAKER. We think we know; but if you will go out in the barren desert to-day and see trees 2 and 2½ feet in diameter that nobody said would grow there you would be surprised.

Mr. LEVER. We regard this as a most important item in this Forestry Bureau.

Mr. RAKER. We have eucalyptus trees growing out there that would surprise you.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment, which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

On page 46, line 16, insert the word "tree" before the word "seed."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Illinois.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. I do that for the purpose of inquiring of the chairman of the committee whether it was the intention of the committee to reduce the amount available for the purchase of seeds and for seeding. I notice the item is reduced $15,000 in the bill from the appropriation of the current year and $36,000 in the bill from the estimates, but the paragraph is now confined to the purchase of seeds and for seeding and tree planting and for experiments and investigation along that line. So that the expenditure is limited more than it was or is in the current appropriation.

Mr. LAMB. It is all for tree and seed planting and for experiments; there are two points in it.

Mr. MONDELL. Therefore, it will probably afford as large an amount for the purchase of seed and tree planting as is available in the current appropriation, and possibly more?

Mr. LAMB. Yes.

Mr. MONDELL. I think it should, for this is an important work, as one-third of the national forests are now treeless.

If any considerable portion of that area is to be forested, it will require a very considerable amount of planting for many years to come.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the pro forma amendment will be withdrawn.

There was no objection.

Mr. RAKER. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment, which I send to the desk and ask to have read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend by inserting, on line 14, page 46, after the word "grazing," the following: "And for experiments and investigations"

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will call the gentleman's attention to the fact that the paragraph which he seeks to amend has been passed.

Mr. RAKER. When? I insist that the gentleman from Wyoming [Mr. MONDELL] withdrew his pro forma amendment.

Mr. MANN. The next paragraph has been read and amended.

Mr. LEVER. Mr. Chairman, we have passed that paragraph.

Mr. RAKER. Then, Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to return to that paragraph that I may offer the amendment. It will take but a moment to present it.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman asks unanimous consent to return to the paragraph which he seeks to amend. Is there objection?

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, reserving the right to object, let the amendment be first read.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend by inserting, on line 14, page 46, after the word "grazing," the following: "And for experiments and investigations and determining the best methods for the prevention of offenses committed against the property of permittees within the national forests."

Mr. LEVER. Mr. Chairman, on that I make the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The point of order is sustained.

The Clerk read as follows:

For silvicultural, dendrological, and other experiments and investigations, independently or in cooperation with other branches of the Federal Government, with States, and with individuals, to determine the best methods for the conservative management of forests and forest lands, $83,728.

Mr. RAKER. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD by inserting therein a letter from the Modoc County (Cal.) Stock Association and also the resolutions passed by that association on March 25, 1911; also the letter of the Forester of April 6, 1911, to the president of the stock association and the letter of the stock association to the Forester of date May 7, 1911, relating to the depredations committed on public ranges.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from California asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD by the insertion of certain documents to which he has referred. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The documents are as follows:

ALTURAS, MODOC COUNTY, CAL., March 10, 1911.

DEAR SIR: The thieving of live stock is becoming somewhat common on that part of the Modoc National Forest Reserve which takes in that part of the Warner Range of mountains lying south of the Cedarville Pass. In fact, it is becoming such a menace to the business of stock raising for those having their ranges in and adjacent to the above-described locality that some of the smaller stockmen have quit the business and others are threatening to do likewise if a stop is not put to such live-stock thieving. Some of the thieves are known and suspicion has marked others; but up to the present time evidence sufficient for a conviction, or even to warrant the arrest of anyone, is not obtainable.

At its first meeting, held in Alturas on March 4, 1911, the Alturas Stock Association, a local association just being organized by the stockmen living in the valleys of the North and South Forks of Pit River, Pit River from Canby east, and in Goose Lake Valley from Davis Creek west, of which I was elected temporary president, I was elected a committee of one to take this matter up with the Forest Service.

We ask that one or more detectives skilled in the detection of such crimes be sent here by the Forest Service to take charge of the operations against such stock thieves looking to the securing of evidence sufficient to get convictions. Such thieving takes place principally during the months of June, July, August, and September.

We have taken notice of the fact that the Forest Service is employing range experts to attend to the improvement of forage plants within the reserves to the end that grazing upon the reserves may become more profitable to the stockmen using such ranges; that it is collecting facts in regard to everything that has a bearing upon grazing, and conducting expensive experiments to establish such facts and methods as will be beneficial to the grazing interests, and will improve and make more valuable the grazing branch of the forest-reserve property of the Government.

Your attention is called to the fact that the thieving of live stock is working directly against the above-described things that you feel to be of so much importance to the grazing interests of the reserves, in that it is discouraging the uses of the ranges thereon and the raising of live stock by the men engaged in the business in a small way whom you are trying to protect.

It has been pointed out to us that it is the duty of the forest rangers to prevent the thieving of live stock upon the reserves. This may be true; but, in the first place, they are not experts in such work; and, in the second place, so much of their time is taken up with other duties that they can not give it the required time. It is an easy matter for a thief to know where a ranger is and to avoid him as he would a vaquero when he is out stealing horses or cattle.

It is the belief of our association that the Forest Service should keep in its employ a certain number of detectives skilled in the detection of and procuring of evidence sufficient to convict live-stock thieves or any other class of thieves operating upon the reserves against its permittees or the purchasers of grazing privileges or timber, and that such detectives should be sent where they are needed to take charge of the ferreting out of all such crimes.

We observe that the Government keeps an organized body of Secret Service men to detect and punish crimes against its currency, its postal laws, its internal revenue, its customs duties, and for other purposes. It sells the range upon the reserves and much of the timber, thereby collecting a revenue which is used in defraying governmental expenses, just the same as that collected from any of its sources of revenue; and any thievery taking place within the reserves against the users of such ranges and timber is an assault upon those revenues, and the employment of detectives to put a stop to such thievery is but a step in the right direction.

We feel that, as we have paid for the privilege of pasturing our stock upon the reserve and are complying with the regulations in regard to the same, we are entitled to protection against thieves, and that, as the Government has employed a supervisor and his assistants, rangers, and experts, and employees of various kinds and for various purposes to manage its reserves it is but a step further in the same direction to add a sufficient number of detectives to its corps of employees to ferret out all thieving against the purchasers and users of its grazing and timber privileges taking place within the borders of its respective reserves.

Very truly, yours,

W. J. DORRIS.

RESOLUTIONS PASSED BY THE ALTURAS STOCK ASSOCIATION AT ITS MEETING HELD IN ALTURAS ON THE 25TH OF MARCH, 1911.

Whereas by reason of its valleys surrounded by large grazing areas that are rocky, broken, precipitous, and mountainous, and suited to no other uses than that of grazing and timber, the industry of raising live stock is practically the backbone of all other enterprises and the foundation of all prosperity, in Modoc County; and

Whereas the thieving of live stock upon some parts of the Modoc National Forest is becoming so common that it is offering a serious menace to the business of the raising of live stock in the county, some of the stockmen having quit the business and others saying that they are losing nearly all of the increase of their herds every season that they turn their stock out upon those ranges, and that they can not stand it and will have to quit the business if something is not done to put a stop to such thieving; and

Whereas at its meeting held in Alturas on March 4, 1911, W. J. Dorris, temporary president of the Alturas Stock Association, was elected by the association a member of a committee of one to take up the matter of the thieving of live stock upon the national forests with the Forest Service; and

Whereas he, acting in that capacity, has sent a letter to the supervisor of the Modoc National Forest at Alturas, one copy to the district forester at San Francisco, and one copy to the Forester at Washington, D. C., the last two copies having been sent through the office of the supervisor at Alturas, and has secured the promise of the supervisor of the Modoc National Forest to take the matter up with the district forester in a personal interview along the lines set out in the letter above referred to, a copy of which is as follows: Now therefore be it

Resolved, By the Alturas Stock Association, at a regular meeting held in Alturas on March 25, 1911, that it is the sense of this association that the Forest Service should furnish detectives, or special-service men, skilled in the detection of such crimes, to operate against such thieves operating upon the national forests; and that we hereby authorize and instruct the committee on thieving to continue in its endeavors and to use all honorable means in its power to secure the sending of such detectives, or special-service men, by the Government to the Modoc National Forest to operate against that particular kind of thieving above referred to; and that, in the opinion of this association, there is nothing that will have a stronger tendency to promote a feeling of good-will among all classes of the users of the national forest for the Forest Service than the protection of its permittees against the above-described thievery.

The above resolution was adopted by the Alturas Stock Association at a meeting held in Alturas on March 25, 1911, at which a quorum of its members, for the transactions of business, was present.

W. J. DORRIS, President.

Attest:

W. H. FLOURNOY, Secretary Pro Tempore.

UNITED STATES DEPARTMENT OF AGRICULTURE,
FOREST SERVICE,
Washington April 6, 1911.

Mr. W. J. DORRIS,
President Alturas Stock Association, Alturas, Cal.

DEAR SIR: Your letter of March 27 is received.

The act creating the various national forests and establishing the powers of the forest officers states very specifically that—

"The jurisdiction, both civil and criminal, over persons within such reservations shall not be affected or changed by reason of the existence of such reservations, except so far as the punishment of offenses against the United States therein is concerned; the intent and meaning of this provision being that the State wherein any such reservation is situated shall not, by reason of the establishment thereof, lose its jurisdiction, nor the inhabitants thereof their rights and privileges as citizens, or be absolved from their duties as citizens of the State."

Under this act it has been repeatedly held by the Forester that the Forest Service can not employ detectives for the prevention or ferreting out of crime on such national-forest lands where the crimes specified are not attempted against the property of the United States. The stealing of live stock belonging to permittees on the national forests can not be considered as an attack upon the property of the United States, and for this reason requests for the employment of detectives of any kind have always been denied. The forest officers are instructed to use all reasonable efforts to assist the local law officers in the detection of criminals and the prevention of crime on the national forests either against the person or the citizens of the State or their property, but beyond this they are not allowed to go. I think that this is the only way in which this question can be handled, for while the Forester would be only too pleased to assist the stockmen in protecting their property by such means, I am sure you will readily see that the same protection might be accorded the citizens residing in the limits of the national forests to their property, their homes, and their lives, which would eventually very seriously complicate the administration of affairs on a national forest within a State.

Very truly, yours,

A. F. POTTER,
Associate Forester.

(Copy of a letter from the Forester to W. J. Dorris in regard to the sending of a detective to the Modoc National Forest to operate against live-stock thieves.)

ALTURAS, MODOC COUNTY, CAL., May 7, 1911.

THE FORESTER, Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR: Your letter of the 6th of last month was duly received and the contents were carefully noted. The answer has been delayed until the present time awaiting the meeting of the executive committee of our association.

I think that you misunderstood the request of our association that detectives be sent to the Modoc National Forest to ferret out and to secure evidence sufficient to convict all persons guilty of the crime of stealing live stock from the permittees of the said national forest.

It was not our intention to imply that any prosecutions for such crimes should be had in any Federal court or under any Federal statute. I look upon the Federal laws which you quote as sound in principle and fully agree with you that any acts of the Forest Service in violation thereof would certainly lead to complications.

Our request and our desire in the matter is that the Forest Service send detectives to ferret out such crimes committed upon the national forest and to secure evidence against such thieves operating thereon to convict them of their crimes, and that such evidence then be handed over to the proper county or State officers, who will prosecute such offenders.

There is nothing in the Federal law which you have quoted to prevent such action upon your part, and that is all that we need. It will reach the situation. There is nothing in the law of the land, Federal, State, county, or district, of which I am aware, that prohibits any individual whatever, of any nationality or allegiance, from performing the thing that we are asking you to send detectives here to do. A citizen of Japan or the Malay Peninsula would have just as much right in the premises as a citizen of our country—to obtain and present to the proper authorities evidence sufficient to convict a person, any person, guilty of any crime, committed anywhere in these United States, in this case, the crime of stealing live stock from the permittees of the Modoc National Forest.

You call to my attention on the second page of your letter that "the forest officers are instructed to use all reasonable efforts to assist the law officers in the detection of criminals and the prevention of crime on the national forests either against the person, or the citizens of the State, or their property, but beyond this they are not allowed to go." This, of course, is your instructions to the officers and employees of the service.

If you have the right to instruct the forest officers and employees to use all reasonable efforts to assist the local law officers in the detection of criminals on the national forests, it naturally follows that you have the right to send to the national forest where crimes exist men who know to assist them.

If any person on his own initiative has a right to detect crime and secure evidence sufficient to convict criminals, it naturally follows that any officer or employee of the service has a right to take the initiative in the ferreting out of such crimes.

You intimate in your letter that it would not be good policy for you to take up the detection of the theft of live stock upon the national forests because to do so would make the service liable to the same extent for the detection of all other crimes existing on the said forests and therefore would "very seriously complicate the administration of affairs on a national forest within a State."

If it is optional with you as to whether you take up the theft of live stock upon the national forests at all or not, and such appears to be the case from my interpretation of the meaning of your letter, it is likewise optional with you as to whether you take up any crime or not. This being the case, you have the authority to take up or let alone any crime, or any series of crimes, as the needs of the case and the circumstances surrounding it may warrant you in the action decided upon. You can take up the thieving of live stock and leave all other crimes alone; you can take up all other crimes and leave the thieving of live stock alone. Should you decide to take up the thieving of live stock and assist the stockmen to convict such thieves, you have the authority to say whether the practice is carried on in any particular locality to the extent that will warrant your interference in the matter or not. You can go to the point where complications begin and then stop. You can take the whole matter up or you can let the whole matter alone. Your authority is ample.

You have decided to take the matter up and have ordered the officers and employees of the service to assist in the detection of crime committed upon the national forests. We are asking you to go a little further and send men who know how to assist in the detection of the one particular crime that almost always goes unpunished, that of "rustling live stock" upon the national forests. We think that it is good policy upon the part of the Forest Service to do this. The service will always be intimately associated with the grazing interests of the country.

At any rate the elemental difference existing between the crime of stealing live stock and other crimes is sufficient to protect you from complications with other crimes.

The Forest Service has taken charge of the ranges lying within the national forests and manages the grazing thereon and the use to which the stockmen may put the ranges. For all this the stockmen are paying a grazing fee. The value of that management to a community is largely determined by the increased revenues of the stock business of a man so using the ranges on the national forests over what it was before the establishment of such reserves. If such thieving is permitted to continue the said revenue is either entirely cut off or reduced to a point where a very bad showing is made, and the stockman feels that he is paying for something that he is not getting.

The evidence of nearly all other classes of crimes than that of the stealing of live stock is so much more easily obtained and the laws for the punishment of such other crimes are so much better enforced that the crime of the stealing of live stock stands in a class by itself. Such other crimes are usually committed in the communities or near the habitation of man, and every man near the place where such a crime has been committed assists in the bringing of the offender to the law. Many of the arrests made for the committing of such crimes are made upon the warrant of some neighbor. You may follow it down the entire line of offenses against the law, and you will observe that all of the crimes against man and his property in the rural districts are pretty well detected and punished, until you come to that of "rustling," and the difficulty of getting convictions in the latter offense is the reason that it is not better handled.

The ownership of live stock is, with rare exceptions, determined by a brand or a brand mark. Live stock is allowed to roam during the grazing season far from any human habitation, and some stock, no doubt, is not seen from the time that it is turned out the ranges until the first snow in the early part of the winter drives it into the open country. The large areas of rough, broken grazing land, full of mountains and canyons and timber, and uninhabited, make it an easy matter for thieves to watch their opportunity to dodge ranchmen, vaqueros, and others that may be in charge of such stock, and slaughter one at a time and dispose of the carcass in some handy market or drive the stolen animals to remote places where their brands are not known and sell them. In slaughtered animals the hide containing the mark and brand is very easily disposed of, which leaves no evidence of ownership. Unbranded calves may be driven away from their mothers, weaned, and stolen under cover of the uninhabited stock ranges. Branded stock may be gathered in small bunches from the more unfrequented places where it is found upon the ranges and driven across the long expanses of uninhabited country leading therefrom to a place where the brands and marks are not known, and sold with but little danger to the thief.

The local machinery established for the enforcement of the laws is wholly inadequate for the capture of such thieves. By a careful analysis of the situation you will readily see that it is almost wholly beyond the control of the stockman himself.

The situation, it appears to me, can only be reached by detectives skilled in such work who will give their entire time to a given case or locality until some result is obtained. Such detectives are not to be found among the stockmen nor are they provided for in the local governments.

The Forest Service, by its present organization, is in a better position to furnish such detectives and handle the situation effectively than any other way that presents itself to us or of which we have knowledge. A detective skilled in such work, whose purpose would not be known in the community, and who would work in conjunction with the local forest service, it appears to me, would reach the situation.

In your letter you stated in substance that the Forester would be only too pleased to assist the stockmen in protecting their property if he had the authority to do so and could do so without "seriously complicating the administration of affairs on a national forest within a State." We have carefully considered the matter, and for the reasons herein given, think that the Forester has ample authority to do what we have asked of him, and also that favorable action upon his part in the matter will not seriously complicate the affairs of the Forest Service.

We therefore ask you to reconsider your decision in this matter and send a detective to the Modoc National Forest to secure evidence against those criminals guilty of the theft of live stock thereon sufficient to convict them of their crimes.

If you are not fully convinced of the expediency of such a move in this matter, we ask you to make the experiment, and then, if you find that it works badly, is time enough to recall such detective and decline to take up such matters in the future.

Yours, truly,

W. J. DORRIS,
Committee of One on the Theft of Live Stock on the Modoc National Forest and President of the Alturas Stock Association.

Mr. RAKER. Mr. Chairman, just one word and I am through with this matter. I desire to call the attention of the committee to this fact, that there are many, many thousands of permittees who use these ranges. Gentlemen should understand the extent of some of these ranges, as they contain from seventy-five to one hundred or one hundred and fifty thousand acres of land. The Government has retained charge and control of them, with a supervisor and rangers. These stockmen, cattlemen, and horsemen are permitted to put their stock upon these ranges by paying a certain fee. The Government sends out its supervisor and its rangers, and this provision was for the purpose of having these men now riding upon the ranges make report to the supervisor, that he in turn might report to the sheriff and the district attorney. People from Nevada, Oregon, and Idaho come into my State, and reversing that, in the ranges, they go from my State into those States—from one State into another. They are in the habit of taking the property of these permittees, when they are doing legitimate business and paying for the privilege, and while the Government has agents on this land, riding over it. It seems to me that you ought to permit these officers and request them to give information to the supervisor in order that the property of these people from whom you are receiving money should have some consideration.

I withdraw the pro forma amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

For the construction and maintenance of roads, trails, bridges, fire lanes, telephone lines, cabins, fences, and other improvements necessary for the proper and economical administration, protection, and development of the national forests, $275,000.

Mr. LAMB. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment, which I send to the desk and ask to have read, as a separate paragraph.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Insert as a separate paragraph, between lines 10 and 11—

Mr. MANN (interrupting the reading). Mr. Chairman, I rise to offer a preferential motion. That is a new paragraph, and I desire to offer an amendment to amend the paragraph just read by striking out, in line 10, the "$275,000" and inserting in lieu thereof "$500,000."

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 47, line 10, strike out the words "two hundred and seventy-five thousand dollars" and insert in lieu thereof the words "five hundred thousand dollars."

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I would suggest to the gentleman that if he desires to let this be passed over, that may be done. There will be some discussion on this, and we shall want a vote upon it.

Mr. LEVER. Mr. Chairman, I suggest that we do that, that we pass over that item without prejudice, and read the balance of the subject under consideration.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to pass the paragraph just read, without prejudice, until after we have line 7, on page 48.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois asks unanimous consent to pass the paragraph under consideration until after the reading of line 7, page 48. Is there objection?

Mr. RAKER. Mr. Chairman, reserving the right to object, I desire to ask the gentleman from Illinois a question. Do I understand that this will not prevent any further amendments to the paragraph?

Mr. MANN. Oh, no. I merely asked unanimous consent that the paragraph be passed over.

Mr. LAMB. Mr. Chairman, I ask for the reading of my amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment offered by the gentleman from Virginia.

The Clerk read as follows:

Insert as a new paragraph between lines 10 and 11, page 47. "Any contract or agreement heretofore or hereafter made for the sale of timber or other product of the national forests may be modified, altered, or canceled by the Secretary of Agriculture upon the application of the purchaser whenever the purchaser shall show to the satisfaction of the Secretary that owing to conditions beyond the purchaser's control and arising subsequent to the execution of the contract, the enforcement thereof will work serious hardship or injustice to the purchaser: Provided, That the United States shall in all such cases be fully reimbursed for any expenditures or damages incurred in connection with said contract: Provided further, That in no case shall the stumpage price stipulated in the contract or agreement be reduced by such modification or alteration: And provided also, That nothing herein shall be construed to limit the authority of the Secretary of Agriculture to modify, alter, or cancel any such contract or agreement for violation of its terms."

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Chairman, I reserve a point of order.

Mr. LAMB. Mr. Chairman, this is an amendment which will work better for the whole Forest Service, and I desire to read a part of what the Secretary says—

Mr. FITZGERALD. Let us see about that.

Mr. LAMB. I read what the Secretary says:

DEPARTMENT OF AGRICULTURE,
OFFICE OF THE SECRETARY,
Washington, D. C., January 15, 1912.

Hon. JOHN LAMB,
House of Representatives.

MY DEAR COL. LAMB: There is attached a suggested amendment to the appropriation bill for this department now under consideration by your committee.

An exhaustive investigation of legal authorities conducted by the Solicitor of this department has shown that I am without authority to modify or cancel a contract for the purchase of timber on the national forests unless such modification would clearly be advantageous to the interests of the United States affected by such contract, or unless the conditions affecting the operation of the contract have been changed because of some act of the United States. This conclusion has been corroborated by the Comptroller of the Treasury.

Numerous cases have arisen in the administration of timber-sale contracts in which a modification of their terms is desirable to relieve the purchasers from serious hardship, but can not be made under the existing legal restrictions. In a typical case in point, now under consideration, a certain body of national-forest timber was purchased with a view to supplying local mines with timbers. The subsequent shutting down of the mines has absolutely destroyed the market for the timber cut. To force the purchaser under such conditions to comply with his contract as originally framed would be to cause him to incur a total loss of all money expended in cutting and removing the material. In such cases I desire authority to relieve the purchaser of hardship by modifying the terms of the contract so as to reduce the amount of timber which he is required to cut.

The suggested amendment has been so worded, in my judgment, as to protect the United States from possible injury arising from abuse of this authority. It is designed to cover only cases where circumstances arising subsequent to the execution of the contract, and wholly beyond the control of the contractor, would cause him serious loss if he is compelled to carry out the agreement as originally framed. Such action is not consistent with the honor of the United States or with the policy of justice and fair dealing which should be followed in transactions with national-forest users. Nor is it, in my judgment, consistent with the intent of Congress in its legislation regarding the national forests, which, generally speaking, is designed to promote the use of the national forests for the benefit, not the injury, of American citizens.

I hope that this amendment will, therefore, receive your favorable consideration.

Very sincerely, yours,

JAMES WILSON,
Secretary.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Chairman, I do not agree with the conclusions of the Secretary. There are much more serious cases than the one cited, which have arisen in other branches of the Government service. In the furnishing of supplies to the Army and Navy instances have arisen where the enforcement of contracts would work great hardships upon contractors. I recall a case, of which I have particular knowledge, where a contract was made to furnish bread to the Navy Department for a year. After the contract had been made, because of certain peculiar conditions the price of flour rose very materially and the person who made the contract desired to be relieved of it, because he would suffer a loss. The request, of course, was properly refused. The enactment of such a provision as this would make men much less careful in entering into contracts with the Government for the purchase of timber. I do not know the manner in which the contracts are now made, but if this timber is sold on competitive bids, the fact that if conditions changed the man getting the contract might be relieved of an onerous contract and the loss fall on the Government rather than on him would make men extremely reckless in their attempts to secure such contracts. I do not believe this sort of legislation should be incorporated in this bill.

Mr. LAMB. Where would we get legislation to relieve just such a condition as this?

Mr. FITZGERALD. I do not believe there is any equity in favor of a man under such circumstances.

Mr. LAMB. If the gentleman from New York were to give a little time and attention to this matter, I think he would agree with the views expressed by the Secretary.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I would not. I have gone into it very fully in connection with other departments of the Government.

Mr. LAMB. I asked the Secretary to give me some concrete cases in regard to this matter for fear that objections would be made here. He furnished me with the following:

JANUARY 17, 1912.

MEMORANDUM CONCERNING BIGHORN TIMBER CO. SALE.

The Bighorn Timber Co., of Ranchester, Wyo., in July, 1909, entered into a contract with the Forester to purchase 100,000,000 board feet of timber from the Bighorn National Forest. The contract provided that all the timber should be cut within a period of five years, and at least 15,000,000 board feet should be cut during each year of the life of the contract. The requirement of a minimum amount to be cut each year is inserted in all Forest Service contracts to insure bona fide operations and to prevent the possibility of the purchaser holding the timber uncut for several years for speculative purposes.

Practically all of the timber cut by the Bighorn Timber Co. under its contract is manufactured into ties, which have from the beginning been sold to the Chicago, Burlington & Quincy Railroad, the only railroad through this portion of the country. A very small percentage of the timber from this sale, consisting of some rough lumber and mining props, can be sold to purchasers other than the railroad, but these other purchasers can use only a very small fraction of the timber cut and manufactured annually by the company. The success of the Bighorn Timber Co.'s operation is therefore absolutely dependent upon the market afforded by the Burlington Railroad Co. for railroad ties. When the timber company executed its contract with the Government it had every reason to believe that the railroad would continue to purchase ties in such amounts annually as would permit the company to carry out its contract with the Government.

The Bighorn Timber Co.'s last contract with the Burlington Railroad for the purchase of ties by the railroad expired in June, 1911. The timber company fully expected that the railroad would renew its contract as it had done on previous occasions. Contrary to these expectations, the timber company was informed in August, 1911, by Vice President Byram, of the Burlington, that his railroad had on hand a large surplus of ties which would be sufficient to supply the present needs of the company for maintenance and new construction for the years 1912 and 1913, and that the railroad would not consider for the present continuing its purchases of ties. It is evident that the general policy of retrenchment which the railroads throughout the country have adopted has operated to curtail present purchases of ties. The Burlington Railroad has, however, informed the Bighorn Timber Co. that it would renew its purchases of ties in 1913, but not before that time.

In brief, the action of the railroad company has swept away the market upon which the Bighorn Timber Co. was absolutely dependent for the sale of its timber. The timber company has recently applied for an extension of time on its contract with the Government so that it may suspend operations for one year, after which period it expects to renew operations to cut timber for sale to the railroad in 1913.

The situation described has been carefully investigated by the Forest Service, and the statements of the Bighorn Timber Co. with regard to the loss of their market have been verified. It is manifestly impossible for the timber company to cut 15,000,000 board feet of timber a year for which they can find no market. To attempt to cut such an amount of timber and hold it for future sale would involve the investment of a very large amount of money in stumpage and logging costs with no immediate returns. Furthermore, when the railroad resumes its purchases it will not buy an accumulated surplus of ties, but only such an amount as the timber company will produce in the course of an ordinary year's operation.

The timber company is in no manner responsible for the situation which has developed, and it is clearly impossible for the company to continue its operations as contemplated by the original contract. To attempt to force the company to perform the obligations of its contract under these circumstances would appear to be gross injustice. It seems clear that in cases such as these the Secretary of Agriculture should have the authority to modify, within his discretion, the terms of a contract so that the purchaser would not have to suffer hardship and financial loss. In this case such modification, which would consist of an extension of time of a year or a year and a half for the performance of the contract, would not entail any loss to the Government, since the sale of the timber would only be postponed but not canceled. On the other hand, if an attempt should be made to force the company to carry out the contract under the impossible conditions existing, it is extremely probable that the company would at once become insolvent and be forced out of business. In such an event the Government would have lost this immediate opportunity of selling the timber under contract, and it would undoubtedly be some time before another purchaser might be found for this particular body of timber.

JANUARY 17, 1912.

MEMORANDUM CONCERNING SALE OF TIMBER TO MR. ORLEANS LONGACRE, SR.

On November 11, 1909, Orleans Longacre, sr., entered into a contract with the Forest Service to purchase approximately 150,000 board feet of saw timber and 3,000 linear feet of mining stulls on the Prescott National Forest, Ariz. By the terms of the contract all cutting was to be completed on or before July 1, 1910. This timber was purchased for the purpose of supplying local mines, which furnished the only market for it. After he had cut approximately one-half of the timber, these mines, to which he sold his product, discontinued operations. He was therefore left with no market whatsoever for his timber.

These conditions, which forced Mr. Longacre to abandon operations before he cut all of the timber included in the sale, could not have been foreseen and were wholly beyond his control. If he were forced to cut all the timber covered by the contract he could only have piled it and let it decay. Investigation has shown that failure to complete his contract would result in no damage to the United States.

In this and similar cases it seems clear that the Secretary of Agriculture should be given authority to relieve the purchaser from a serious hardship by modifying the contract so as to reduce the amount of timber covered by it.

The Secretary says:

DEPARTMENT OF AGRICULTURE,
OFFICE OF THE SECRETARY,
Washington, D. C., January 18, 1912.

Hon. JOHN LAMB,
House of Representatives.

MY DEAR COL. LAMB: Reference is made to my letter of January 15, inclosing a suggested amendment to the appropriation bill for this department, and to Associate Forester Potter's conference with you regarding this matter of January 16.

I inclose statements regarding two specific timber-sale contracts which serve as examples of cases in which I believe I should have the necessary authority to modify contracts to relieve purchasers from serious hardship.

The case of the timber-sale contract with Mr. Orleans Longacre, sr., is the case referred to in my letter of January 15, and the Bighorn Timber Co. sale is the case mentioned to you by Associate Forester Potter.

Very sincerely, yours,

JAMES WILSON,
Secretary.

Then I have a further communication from the Chief Forester that I will insert, for this is an important matter and should be provided for in this bill:

UNITED STATES DEPARTMENT OF AGRICULTURE,
FOREST SERVICE,
Washington, March 8, 1912.

Hon. JOHN LAMB,
House of Representatives.

MY DEAR COL. LAMB: In further reference to Secretary Wilson's letter of January 15, suggesting an amendment to the appropriation bill for the department which would authorize the Secretary to modify timber-sale contracts where such action is necessary to relieve purchasers from serious hardship:

Under a decision rendered by the Comptroller of the Treasury on December 27, 1910, and in accordance with other existing legal authorities and precedents, the authority of the administrative officers to modify the terms of timber-sale contracts is restricted to exceedingly narrow limits. In effect, sale contracts can not be modified unless such action is clearly to the immediate, technical interests of the United States as defined in the specific transaction. Not only are broader considerations of equity and fair dealing with purchasers eliminated, but also the broader and permanent interests of the United States in developing a market for national forest stumpage and encouraging its sale by dealing equitably with its purchasers.

The latter feature of the present situation is extremely serious. With our present limitations in adapting sale contracts which have been made to subsequent conditions, unforeseen at the date of the execution of such contracts, I fear that the Forest Service will be seriously handicapped in its efforts to increase the sale of national forest timber. Reports have been received from practically every district indicating that the restrictions in this regard will prevent lumbermen from buying national forest timber and will result in the suspension of operations in a number of sales which have been made. In these cases the United States will be forced to cancel the contract at its own initiative and perhaps resort to action at law to recover damages sustained through such termination of the sale.

The object of the proposed amendment is not to favor purchasers of timber in any way detrimental to the public interests. It is to enable the department to adapt its sale contracts to actual conditions, which necessarily change from time to time, and to deal equitably with its purchasers in these matters. I can not emphasize too strongly that this action is necessary to put our sales business upon a permanent basis and increase its volume to the amount which is desired. If this legislation can not be secured we will be under a serious handicap in selling national forest timber, which I fear may result in a material reduction of the receipts which would otherwise be possible from this source.

Very sincerely, yours,

H. S. GRAVES, Forester.

Mr. FITZGERALD. This is simply giving the prospective contractor of the Government advantages he would not possess with anybody else, making it impossible for him to lose, and in case there is to be a loss it must fall on the Government.

Mr. LAMB. In my judgment, it is simply giving to the Secretary of Agriculture the power to rearrange or modify contracts just as you and I as individuals would have to do if certain contingencies arose over which we would have no control. That is the whole statement.

Mr. FITZGERALD. If the gentleman from Virginia owned a tract of timberland and made a contract for sale at a specific price, he would not be very much interested in relieving the purchaser from his contract obligation if the person with whom he made the contract informed him subsequently that the market he expected to place this timber in for some reason or other had failed to materialize. This very contract might have prevented some other person making an equally advantageous contract by which his timber would have been taken.

Mr. LAMB. I think, Mr. Chairman, I have made perhaps as many timber contracts as any individual here. I have cut millions of feet of timber and made all sorts of contracts. And this provision, I confidently say, is one that would hold good between two honorable private citizens negotiating a contract or sale. And to save my life I can not see why there should be any objection to it. If it worked harm in 12 months, we could change it again, and I do not see that there could be any objection to complying with what has been carefully considered by the solicitor of the department, recommended by the Secretary of Agriculture, and advised and suggested by the Chief Forester.

Mr. BEALL of Texas. I have very great confidence in the Secretary of Agriculture and the Solicitor and the Chief Forester, but I think it would be very unfortunate for an amendment of this kind to be adopted because I think it would be unfair to the Government and would necessarily lead to very great abuses in which the Government would greatly suffer.

Mr. HUGHES of New Jersey. Will the gentleman yield there?

Mr. BEALL of Texas. Yes, sir.

Mr. HUGHES of New Jersey. I gathered from what the gentleman from Virginia said that a condition might arise where the Government, in view of the needs of a certain locality, might permit a certain amount of timber to be cut. Perhaps it would not care to have it cut, but in response to the needs of that particular locality would enter into contract for the sale of timber, and in case of beginning operations it would become apparent that the timber was not needed. The Government, perhaps, is not at all anxious to sell its timber, and yet under the rigid terms of the contract a man would be compelled to go on and cut timber and take timber that the Government would rather have standing.

Mr. LAMB. But the gentleman is stating a hypothetical case.

Mr. FITZGERALD. If the Government would prefer not to have the timber cut or sold they would never make the contract.

Mr. HUGHES of New Jersey. But suppose the Government would not agree about selling the timber in the first place?

Mr. FITZGERALD. Then it could never have made the contract.

Mr. HUGHES of New Jersey. But suppose that, in response to a local need, as a favor to a community, it would let them have this timber, and then the local needs should pass away. Then, under the terms of the original contract, they would have to go on and cut the timber just the same.

Mr. BEALL of Texas. It is possible, Mr. Chairman, for the gentleman to imagine extreme cases in which the party who makes the contract with the Government would be compelled to abide by the contract to his injury and where the equities would suggest that he might be entitled to some relief. But for every one of these extreme cases there would probably be many more other cases where the parties would without any real equity seek to rescind their contract for the purchase of timber. Now, it makes a one-sided contract if, when the purchaser insists upon a compliance, the Government has to comply; but if by reason of changed conditions—and that is a term which has a great deal of latitude in its meaning—

Mr. LAMB. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman permit me a suggestion right there?

Mr. BEALL of Texas. Yes.

Mr. LAMB. The gentleman has not studied this case.

Mr. BEALL of Texas. I do not really think it is necessary, Mr. Chairman, for a man to study this case very long to see the inequity of it and the injustice of it to the Government.

Now, take one illustration which the chairman of the committee submitted, where a man bought timber in the expectation that a certain improvement would be made, and expected to realize a profit out of that. His calculations went awry; that enterprise was not carried on as he expected; and so under this amendment he would have the right to come to the Government and ask for a modification of the contract.

But let us take another case. Suppose a man makes a contract with the Government for the purchase of timber with certain conditions prevailing, and after that contract is made there is a change of conditions which makes it very much more profitable to him than either he or the Government contemplated it would be. He would not go to the Government then and ask for any change or modification of the contract. On the contrary, he would stand upon his legal rights, and he would exact the last farthing from the Government upon his contract. This proposition here is simply to invite—

Mr. LAMB. The gentleman is predicating a case that would not occur here.

Mr. BEALL of Texas. I am predicating a case that might easily occur.

Mr. LAMB. It is specific. I will cite in the record two concrete cases referred to by the Secretary that illustrates the absolute necessity for the amendment.

Mr. BEALL of Texas. No; it is general. If the amendment of the gentleman were specific—

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. HUGHES of New Jersey. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the time of the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BEALL] be extended five minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. HUGHES] asks unanimous consent that the time of the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BEALL] be extended five minutes. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. BEALL of Texas. If it could be construed in such a way that this amendment of the gentleman from Virginia would apply to that specific case only, of course it would not be a matter that would be of very much concern to the committee or of very much concern to the country. But he proposes to put into this appropriation bill a provision which is general in its nature, under the scope of which anybody who is dissatisfied with any contract that he has made with the Government could come on and ask for a modification of it. Why, they say it is subject to the control of the Secretary of Agriculture; but—

Mr. ELLERBE. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Texas yield to the gentleman from South Carolina?

Mr. BEALL of Texas. Certainly.

Mr. ELLERBE. If the man who has made the contract comes and asks for this modification there is no provision in here that forces the Government, through its agents, to grant a modification, is there?

Mr. BEALL of Texas. No; there is no provision here that forces it, except by that silent force that always operates upon the Government that so often gives the Government the worst of it in a controversy with an individual. How many Senators and how many Representatives would go to the Secretary of Agriculture, where the interests of their constituents were involved, begging and importuning the Secretary and his subordinate officials to grant this relief?

The gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. ELLERBE] and every other gentleman knows the processes that would be carried on. The only effect of it and the only result of it will be injury and detriment and damage to the Government, and it will afford an avenue through which any man who makes a contract with the Government and then discovers that it is likely to be an unprofitable contract will begin to besiege the Department of Agriculture for a modification of it.

It is all wrong. It will not aid the Government. It will aid the man who makes a contract with the Government, expecting to get the better of the contract, and when conditions change somewhat and he discovers that his contract does not promise to be as profitable as he expected, then comes in and wants to be relieved from the obligations that he has assumed. The Government is held to its obligation, and the same rule should be applied to a man who makes a contract with the Government. [Applause.]
